Grimly Hugo Loubeque watched the aeroplane approaching the Empress. Ruthless, above all authority, next to omnipotent with the power he had given his life to build up that he might be revenged upon the man who had brought about his ruin early in life, the international spy watched this attempt at interference with his plans—for such he instinctively knew it to be—keenly.

Cheers rose from the deck at the masterly manipulation of the plane. Then the aviator's purpose of landing on the liner's deck became clear. The explosion of the motor died out abruptly. Then the plane swooped down to ward the deck nose-on, righted itself and glided to a perfect landing.

"It means the honor of the man I love."

Lucille separated herself quickly from the passengers. She was beginning to think again, to realize what a task lay before her. The orders and papers of her father were upon the boat, but who carried them she did not know. Of all these hundreds any one might be the thief. Harley interrupted her mood of black depression, taking her hand and wishing her luck.

"Everything is arranged with the captain," he reported. "And, Miss Love," he added earnestly, "I don't know what there is to be done, but you cannot help succeeding when you start with such spirit."

The encouragement flamed her eyes, blinding out the sight of the aviator as he started his engine once more and, with one short glide, rose toward the element he loved. Her slender figure straightened as she turned from the rail, her head uplifted itself courageously, almost defiantly.

The sound of her own name, repeated twice in a hoarse whisper of incredulity, brought her out of her abstraction. She looked wonderingly at the man who had called her by name, amazed at the emotions twisting his powerful face.

Hugo Loubeque mastered himself with an effort. He had never seen the general's daughter before, this girl with the face and form of her mother, and this apparent resurrection of what had been a living memory so long had stunned him out of his usual composure.

"I beg your pardon," he murmured as she passed him. "I thought I recognized you." He stopped abruptly, amazed at the expression of delight and craft and joy and guile which mingled on her face as she stopped and stared into his face, and in the clash of eyes the man knew that this slip of a girl recognized him for her enemy.

Lucille stared after his retreating figure, her lips parted, her eyes twin stars for the hope that had been kindled there.

"The voice on the telephone," she whispered over and over to herself.

The international spy paced up and down the floor of his suit, for the first time in years a prey to emotions that threatened to overwhelm him.

The message in his eyes had been clear. This girl knew that the papers, his underling had stolen from the general's safe were in his possession. She was his enemy, determined to go up, pulling lengths to thwart him, just as he must forget the instinctive love he had felt for her, this girl who came from the sky and stirred up visions of days when he had known such a thing as impulsiveness. He settled himself in a chair, closing his eyes while he rearranged all he knew of the general's household. Undoubtedly the general's old, with whom she was in love, had been charged with the theft.

His somber eyes glowed at the completeness of the havoc he had wrought. Not alone had General Love been struck, but his entire household. It was an hour before Loubeque rose and moved toward the door, an expression on his eyes which told the problem had worked itself out.

In the wireless room he wrote out his message, waiting till while he watched the operator adjust his heliograph and send the message hurtling back to Manila. He wondered at the indifference of the wireless man to the import of the message.

"Not the old, General Love sold the papers."

The operator turned indifferently. "Signature?" he queried.

The international spy shook his head, smiling at the expression of interest kindled in the young man's eyes. He must for once do work of the most difficult sort and do it himself instead of trusting it to a subordinate. To do this he must ingratiate himself with this man.

That accusatory message must not be answered. Undoubtedly upon its receipt at Manila an investigation would be started which would open with finding the source of the original charge. To obviate this the wireless must be put out of order, must be wrecked so thoroughly it would be impossible to repair it until the Empress was out of the zone of communication. It was a matter of hours before he got his opportunity, the operator leaving his board and going to the saloon. Hugo Loubeque wasted not a second. The sound of the man's boots had not ceased to sound before the box lay open before the spy. His hands moved like lightning, carrying out the plan he had conceived as the safest and most effective from the instructions of the operator. In and out his fingers moved, loosening a screw here, a wire there.

A Reversal

A Love Story of Wealth and Poverty

By F. A. MITCHEL

Edward Ferguson was a very good fellow, but all good fellows have their faults, and Ned was his. His father was at the head of the firm of Ferguson & Co. and understood to be rich. At any rate, he and his family lived in a fine style. Ned was to take his father's place at the head of the firm and was looked upon as an excellent catch by all the young girls of his acquaintance. He could have married any one of several with a fortune in her own right.

This he would have liked to do, for he was ambitious to take a high position in the world—that is, such a position as great wealth brings—but unfortunately he fell in love with a girl who could not aid him in this respect. Marcia Fosdick was the daughter of a man who was a born experimenter. He had tried so many experiments and failed so many times that whenever he launched a new scheme it was dubbed another of Fosdick's follies.

Ned must either relinquish the plan of adding to his prospective fortune by marriage or suffer and cause Marcia to suffer, for the affair between them was mutual. I have said that he was a good fellow. He showed it by giving up so much of his ambition as pertained to an addition to his fortune by marriage. I have said that he had his faults. The way he showed one of them was this:

He wished Marcia to appreciate the sacrifice he was making in marrying a girl who could not aid him in his desire for that power which wealth is capable of giving. But how could he transmit a statement of the fact to her? It was a very delicate matter for him to handle. He was a much better writer than talker. In a letter he could say just what he wanted to say and no more; in speech he did not express himself well and was apt to say too much. It occurred to him to make his formal declaration to Marcia in a note. Under cover of this greatest compliment a man can pay a woman he might impart the fact that he had resigned one of several fortunes for her. This, instead of making him appear to honor her by marrying her, would show that he loved her better than worldly goods.

He wrote a number of notes, trying his best to give this impression, but do what he would no appearance of condescension on his part would crop out among his most carefully chosen words. He laid the letters aside and in a few days read them over, choosing the one that he considered smacked the least of honoring the girl he was asking to be his wife. But to another it would certainly not have been an ideal proposal, for every one knows that a lover must be nothing more than a beggar.

Ferguson laid the letter on his writing desk in his room, intending to post it the next morning when he went to business. But before leaving in the morning he read it over and concluded not to send it till his return in the evening. He put it in an unaddressed envelope and locked it up. During the day he had a good deal of business correspondence with parties in San Francisco about a matter that occupied his whole attention. On returning to his home in the evening he took out the letter with the intention of reading it again, but being detained of his meditation by a letter addressed to him and after dinner took it out and put it in the letter box.

When several days had passed and he received no reply to his proposal he began to worry. "Could it be that, after all, the letter had appeared to Marcia as if he considered himself getting too good for her? Every day after that added to his terror and demoralized. Then followed periods of sensitive fear, calumny, shame and pride. Why could he not have gone to see Marcia and said simply, "I love you—be my wife?"

Instead of taking a train and going a dozen miles to the suburban town where Marcia lived and having it out with her he undertook to analyze her feelings on receiving his note. He could see her lip curl on reading his on called delicate reference to what he had given up for her. Then he fancied her indignantly tearing the note into little bits and tossing them into the wastebasket.

Instead of going to Marcia and throwing himself on her mercy he listened to the dictates of pride. A man, he argued, conscious of right, of superiority, defers to a woman. She receives his deference and appreciates it as homage. But let him beg forgiveness for a wrong he has done her and he will only add to her contempt for him.

This reasoning decided him to stand on his dignity. He would await some word from Marcia if it killed him. It certainly wore on him dreadfully. He had been used to calling on her at least once or twice during each month. They seldom met except when he called upon her, for she seldom came to the city, and when she did there was a very slight probability of their passing each other. However, a couple of months after Ned had written his proposal they did meet in a crowded street. Marcia passed him with a constrained bow.

One day Ned's father fell and was picked up unconscious. He never spoke again and died within two days. Ned now became the head of Ferguson & Co. and began his administration of its affairs by making a thorough investigation as to its finances. One reason for his overhauling its accounts was that he had noticed shortly before his father's death that he had appeared worried, and it was suspected that the cause had brought on the stroke that had resulted in his death. What was Edward Ferguson's surprise to find that his father had been engaged in speculations that had caused an enormous gap in the firm's finances. Had he lived he would have been obliged to face a failure within a very short time.

There was nothing to do but for Ned to wind up the affairs of the concern. Fortunately he was not a member of the firm and was not loaded with its debts. But now, instead of giving for the power that wealth gives, his only ambition was to pay the debts left by his father.

While Ned was awakening from a dream of wealth, Marcia Fosdick was awakening from a dream of poverty. Her father had at last struck a scheme that paid him very largely. He had invented an attachment for an automobile which sooner or later all such machines must have. He was selling the right to use it to all manufacturers, and his royalties were already considerable.

Ned Ferguson saw in the newspapers an account of the invention and the change it made in Marcia's affairs. When he had written that condescending letter he was rich and she was poor. Now the conditions were reversed. He had lost his fortune and the girl he loved. He did not expect a continuance of the favors he had received from any of the wealthy girls he might have married. They were quite sympathetic, but none of them gave him any further encouragement. One morning Marcia Fosdick received a letter postmarked San Francisco. Withdrawing it from the envelope, she found two letters. One was from a lady whom she had met several times socially, who said: "The enclosed has been going the rounds of this state for a long while and has finally come under my notice. I think it must be intended for you. At any rate, I send it to you."

The moment Marcia saw the address on the enclosure, covered with stamped finger pointers, "try this" and "try that place," she recognized Ned Ferguson's handwriting.

Ferguson came home one evening with a heavy heart. He had placed the affairs of Ferguson & Co. in liquidation and had offered the family home for sale. He found a letter in the hall awaiting him and, taking it up, saw at once that it was from Marcia. He opened it and read it:

Your lovely letter was only received this morning after having traveled all over the state of California. I regret that it did not come to me in time to show you how deeply I have felt for you from the moment I heard of your affliction and misfortune. I give you all the consolation I can—my own unworthy self.

Ferguson stood dazed. In an instant the future he had built up about his relations with Marcia Fosdick had collapsed. He had nothing to fear from her on account of his condescension in offering to marry her. But the fact that he had so considered it came down upon him with sledgehammer force. Singular it is that, while he had then considered her poverty a barrier between them, he now considered her affluence in the same light.

However, Marcia Fosdick had no desire for anything more than the comfort and comparative independence that wealth can give. She loved Ned Ferguson with her whole heart, and she would accept of withdrawal of his proposal.

Ferguson often thinks of the day that he wrote his proposal and was corresponding with parties in California at the same time. He misses the fact that the two fell together and an interval elapsed between the writing of the note and its reply. What occurred during that interval, of course, gave him an acceptance of a refusal.

The best side of the habit of looking at the best side of any event is worth far more than a thousand words of advice.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

THE TEN VIRGINS.
Matthew 25:1-13—Sept. 13.
"Watch therefore; for ye know not the day nor the hour."—Yerxa II.

THE parable of today's Study is supposed to have been uttered by our Lord about three days before His crucifixion, as part of His response to the question, "What shall be the sign of Thy Coming and of the end of the Age?" In the preceding chapter the Master traces various experiences of His people down to the time of His Second Coming.

This parable has not been applicable at all times and under all conditions. This is shown by the first word, "Then"—at that time—"the Kingdom of Heaven will be likened unto ten virgins." The parable does not describe the world in general, but merely the virgin class—the Church—the pure ones who have left the world.

The Ten Virgins.

have left the world, have come to God through Christ, have been justified by faith in His blood, and thus have been made prospective members of the Kingdom class, the Bride class.

This parable shows, then, that in the end of this Gospel Age a separation, division, will take place in the true Church of Christ. With the Jews, a betrothal took place between Bride and Bridegroom about a year before marriage. During that year any unfaithfulness to the Bridegroom annulled the contract, which was usually made through intermediaries. So, during this Gospel Age, a Church is being betrothed to Christ, and covenant obligations are being entered into. These agreements are made through brethren, ministers, servants of the Lord and the Church.

Parousia and Epiphania.

Many Bible students hold that this parable began to have its fulfillment in the Millenial Movement, which in 1844 culminated in disappointment. For some fourteen years prior a cry had gone forth throughout the Church that the Second Coming of Christ was at hand. History tells us that many noble characters of all denominations believed the Message and went forth to meet the Bridegroom. But the Bridegroom tarried. Then all the virgins slumbered and slept. Later, at midnight, the Bridegroom came apparently; and announcements were made to that effect.

An increasing number of Bible students believe that this latter cry sounded forth just thirty years after the disappointment of Wm. Miller's followers; namely, in 1871. They do not claim that Jesus came in the flesh then; no, the contrary, they hold that He will never come to the flesh; that He is flesh no longer, that He has ascended to the spirit plane—far above angels. They call attention to the fact that the Bible distinctly differentiates between the Parousia of Christ and His Epiphania, at His Second Coming.

The word Parousia signifies presence, without in any sense indicating that the presence is visible. The word Epiphania signifies the revealing of one already present. These Bible students claim that to the end of this Gospel Age Christ will be present, invisible to men, during a period of forty years, doing a work especially in His Church—rewarding the faithful servants, as shown in the parables of the Pounds and the Talents, and receiving the wise virgins, as in this parable.

The Lamps and the Oil.

The oil of the parable evidently represents the Holy Spirit, while the lamps represent the Bible. In response to the Message, the wise virgins trimmed their lamps—searched the Scriptures. Thus they had light in their lamps, as well as oil, the Holy Spirit, in their hearts. Then the foolish virgins said, "Give us of your oil."

However, there is but one way to get the Holy Spirit—from the Lord Himself and upon His own terms. In order to receive a fresh supply we must look well to our Covenant with the Lord and to our loyalty to the principles of righteousness. This is something of time and study, perhaps of neglect of the things of this life. It means to forego strife for fame and wealth and to live close to God. This is the cost of the precious oil.

Hence the wise virgins declared, in no ungenerous spirit, that they had done too much of the oil of the Holy Spirit for themselves. Then they advised their brethren who were deficient to go to God, and to seek it by obedience to His Word, by searching the Scriptures and by close following of the Master's leading in the narrow way.

Meanwhile, the wise virgins went in, one after another—passing beyond the veil. Then the door was shut. Once in our misunderstanding we thought that this represented that the foolish virgins and all the remainder of mankind were banished to eternal torment. Now, however, we know that the door shuts in the Kingdom class. While others will never enter that Kingdom and have other blessings for them, to those who enter the Kingdom class there is no door shut.

THEATRICAL

The Famous Players' productions to be shown at the Majestic Theatre in the near future are "The Redemption of David Corson," starring William Farnum, Saturday, September 12; "An American Citizen," starring John Barrymore, Wednesday, September 16; and "Leah Kleschna," starring Carlotta Nilsen, Saturday, September 19.

These wonderful photo plays are bringing to our city the famous actors and actresses that few of us have ever seen or ever will see only in motion pictures.

The production for Saturday of this week is exceptionally fine, "The Redemption of David Corson," depicting the descent from a most devout life to the lowest dregs of sin and shame and then the redemption.

Fire at Harbor Springs.

Fire broke out in the Voorheis automobile garage at Harbor Springs last Wednesday and threatened the destruction of the entire block of wooden buildings, but the heroic work of the fire department confined the flames to the one building. The loss is about $2,000, fully insured.

Mr. and Mrs. George Carr of East Jordan spent Sunday in the city, visiting Mr. Carr's mother, Mrs. H. A. Carr.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Ellis of Petoskey spent Sunday in the city, visiting Mrs. Ellis' parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Jacobs.

J. LeRoy Sherman of East Jordan spent last Monday and Tuesday in the city, working on the board of canvassers.

morning for Roscommon, Michigan, where she will resume her duties as teacher.

Miss Emiline Hale returned to her home in Grand Haven Monday after spending several days at the home of Ray Graves.

Miss Helen Shockley returned home Saturday after spending two weeks visiting her sister, Mrs. A. W. Ladd of Roscommon.

Mrs. John Hogan, Mrs. Edward M. Hogan and Miss R. Marie Miller of Boyne City were Charlevoix visitors last Tuesday.

Mrs. Ray Faulkner returned to her home in Chicago Friday, after spending the summer with her mother, Mrs. Louis Mercier.

Mrs. E. F. Martindale of Harbor Springs has been spending a few days in Charlevoix with her mother, Mrs. Chester Denton.

Cleland Mayne arrived in the city Saturday morning from Detroit, where he has been working in a hospital during the summer months.

George H. VanPelt made a business trip to Boyne City Saturday in connection with work pertaining to his recently announced road scheme.

Mrs. W. P. Squier, Miss Carrie Winters and Mrs. R. Barnett and daughter, Ella, drove over from East Jordan last Thursday to spend the day in the city.

Mr. and Mrs. I. M. DeVoe left Saturday morning for their home in Ann Arbor after spending two weeks as guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Marshall.

The Women's Relief Corps will meet Thursday, September 10th, at the I. O. O. F. hall. All members are requested to be present, as there is business of importance to transact.

After spending the summer at the home of H. C. Cooper, Miss Mary Kirchner returned to her home in Saginaw Friday, where she will resume her duties as a teacher.

Wm. Condor, who has been employed as spot-light and feature singer at the Majestic during the past season, will leave for New York the last of the month to join a vaudeville troupe.

Thomas Shawley left Saturday for Belding and other southern Michigan points on an extended visit. Mr. Shawley has been in poor health for some time and believes the visit and change of climate will be helpful to him.

Mrs. Joseph Howard left Friday for Chicago, where she will join her father, John O'Neil, and sister, Etta O'Neil, remaining with them two weeks, when they expect to be able to bring Mr. O'Neil home.

Pine Lake Lodge, No. 122, K. of P., will resume its regular meetings Thursday evening, September 17, after having been closed during the summer months. Members are earnestly requested to be present, as there is business of importance to transact and the work for the coming season will be outlined. Every member is requested to be present and make the opening meeting one of the best ever had.

Delegates to State Republican Convention Named Wednesday.

Urge That Present Primary System Be Revised and Made More Practical.

The Republican County Convention met in the Moose hall in this city last Wednesday and was called to order by H. I. McMillan of East Jordan, who was chosen to act as temporary chairman. The following committees were appointed:

Credentials—William Bricker, Thomas Shepherd, John H. Darrow.
Nominations—Edward Newville, Chas. Curkendall, W. J. Gallagher.

Resolutions—E. W. Abbott, Harry Nicholls, E. A. Rueggesser.
Short talks were made by H. I. McMillan, E. W. Abbott and W. H. Griffin, who all made a plea to all Republicans to get together and vote the whole ticket and stand shoulder to shoulder for the common good.

The delegates elected to the state convention, at Kalamazoo, were H. I. McMillan, Frank A. Kenyon, Harry Nicholls, Oluf Nordrum, W. J. Gallagher, Will H. Griffin, J. M. Harris, Frank D. Thompson and W. J. Pearson.

This was followed by the naming of the chairmen of the various precinct committees and the discussion of other business pertaining to the convention. The committee on resolutions presented the following, which was enthusiastically adopted:

"We, the Republicans of Charlevoix county, are firmly in the belief that the nominees for the various offices on the Republican state ticket should abide strictly by a platform framed by the party; that the party should be the first consideration and that its principles, which have proven their superiority in the past, should be adhered to in the future; that the recall of judges and judicial decisions should not be attempted, as in our belief the same would be a decisive blow to the elements of good government.

"We further resolve that the present cumbersome, unsatisfactory primary system should be revised, inasmuch as its intentions are often defeated and it openly invites the members of one political party to name the nominees of the other with a possible view to defeating them in the election.

"We also resolve that the present taxation system should be so revised or enforced as to make the taxation burden equally imposed on all people from all localities.

"We further resolve that in our belief this country will never arrive at the degree of prosperity that it has enjoyed until the tariff-for-protection system shall again be put into effect. Our local industries and the laborers in them are suffering as a result of the present system.

"In view of these facts we urge upon all Republicans and citizens to support the principles of the Republican platform."

(Signed) E. W. Abbott, Chairman.
Harry Nicholls.

WOMAN HANGS SELF

Wife of Captain Roe of Harbor Springs Hangs Self to Water Pipes in Bathroom.

Mrs. Charles Roe of Harbor Springs, wife of Capt. Roe of the Little Traverse Bay ferry line, committed suicide Saturday morning by hanging herself to the waterpipes in the bathroom at her home in that city. She was about 45 years of age.

She had been mentally unbalanced for about two years and had been an inmate of the state hospital for some time, but was brought home about ten days ago to have the better care of relatives.

Return to Charlevoix.

J. J. Edwards and family, who moved last March from this city to Evansville, Indiana, have returned to Charlevoix to stay indefinitely. Mr. Edwards states that Charlevoix is good enough for him and that while away he saw no place that would compare with it. At Evansville everything was turned up by the extreme hot weather, crops all destroyed and conditions very bad. On the way to this place he states that similar conditions existed through the southern part of the state. It will be remembered that Mr. Edwards was located on the Wilson farm, north of Charlevoix, before leaving for Evansville.

SCHOOLS OPEN

Boys and Girls of Michigan are Again Taking Up School Work.

This month the doors of the thousands of schoolhouses of the state are again opened. About three-fourths of the 800,000 children of school age (between five and twenty years) will take up another year's work. Notwithstanding the fact that with the ending of vacation freedom will to a certain extent be limited and somewhat arduous tasks imposed, the vast majority of pupils enter upon their work joyfully. Their social tendencies, the desire to learn and know which exists in every healthy boy and girl—these are satisfied by the public schools. It is to be lamented that because of unsympathetic teachers or unpleasant and even injurious conditions of buildings any boy or girl of the state should dread to enter school this fall. It is the right of every child to have provided satisfactory and attractive buildings and yards, good and sufficient equipment and good teachers. State Superintendent of Public Instruction Fred L. Keeler is a most earnest advocate of sympathy in the schoolroom and of the fact that the schools exist for the boys and girls. Probably there has never been a time when pupils will be met with better conditions in every respect than those existing days. Never has there been a greater and more general interest in bettering school conditions. At least six thousand school buildings in the state are one-room rural schools, and there, just as truly as in city schools, is an effort being made to give boys and girls interesting work and, practical work—work that correlates with the home life. It is to be hoped that the number of boys and girls who shall dread to take up this year's school work may be very few.

MARRIED AT DOOGEVILLE

Jack Kendall, Well Known in This City, United in Marriage Last Week.

The following article taken from the Elk Rapids Progress contains news of interest to many Charlevoix people:

"Jack Kendall, our one time printer and well-known employee and friend, was married Monday of this week in Dodgeville, Wisconsin, at the home of his bride. Judging from the young man's letters, in which he holds forth on the rare qualities of his bride, and from the report of one of our citizens who met the young lady, we believe Jack has secured a prize for a wife. We know he is deserving of the best that fortune can send him and that she, too, has secured a prize, for Jack is a splendid fellow."

Jack Kendall has many friends in this city, where he lived prior to going to Elk Rapids and the place where he was married. He learned the printer's trade in the Courier office, leaving here to accept a position at Elk Rapids. He has the best wishes of his many Charlevoix friends.

W. P. Porter Hurt.

The following article was taken from the Saturday issue of the East Jordan Enterprise:

"This morning Mr. W. P. Porter and son Howard went to Hitchcock on their railroad 'pede.' Crossing the Camp 6 switch, which was set for the main line, and believing no trains to pass, on returning, naturally supposed the switch to be as they left it. But, all unknown to them, a special had come up bringing Doctor Dicken to Camp 6 to look after Albert Kile, who had been injured, and of course they left the switch in the position they found it. When the Porters' 'pede' struck the open switch it was derailed, the occupants thrown off and both bones of W. P. Porter's leg were broken off below his knee."

German Guns and Russian Cossacks

The machine guns of the German army are expected to play terrible havoc with the enemies of the Kaiser. The gunners of the German army are agreed to be the most expert in the world. The Russian Cossacks compose the flower of the splendid army of the czar. They have no fear of the withering fire of the machine guns.

MAKE EFFORT TO RAISE MONEY

County Y. M. C. A. to Make Determined Effort to Continue Association.

In Need of At Least Three Thousand Dollars to Weather the Storm—Canvass County.

The County Y. M. C. A. committee met at the offices of W. P. Porter in East Jordan Sunday and after a three hours session, in which the situation was carefully gone over, decided to make a supreme endeavor before finally giving up the work in Charlevoix county.

The members of the committee present were: Messrs. W. H. White, Shaw, Smith, Butler and Ball of Boyne City; R. W. Kane and A. M. Wilkinson of Charlevoix, and W. P. Porter, Bennett and Malpas of East Jordan. Representatives of the state committee, Buell and Rowe, were at the meeting and put up a strong appeal for the continuation of the work. They assured the committeemen of all possible aid from the state association, but this does not include financial assistance.

Previous to the meeting the county committee had decided to do all in their power to save something out of the wreckage and discontinue the work the coming year. When they met in a body, however, the feeling against giving up the work proved too strong with each one and plans were made to thoroughly canvass the entire county in an effort to raise three thousand dollars. If this amount can be raised it will meet half the deficit of the past two years and provide for the ensuing year. A little sacrifice on the part of every person in the county will make this an easy thing to do and a work which has the endorsement of all our leading citizens will receive a new impetus.

The next ten days will decide definitely whether or not Charlevoix county can support the movement.

GLASS IN STREETS

Has Been the Cause of Many Mutilated Auto and Bicycle Tires This Season.

Carelessness in disposing of old bottles and bits of broken glass, nails, tacks, etc., has been the cause of hundreds of mutilated automobile and bicycle tires in Charlevoix and vicinity during the present season. Likewise it is to blame for numerous veterinarian and farrier hills.

Thoughtful persons will not throw old bottles or nails on the streets. Neither will they leave them where they are likely to be so disposed of. Decent consideration for owners of horses, automobiles and bicycles will impel them to make other disposition of all debris of this character.

SIX HURT IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Driver Tried to Dodge a Dog and the Machine Turned Turtle.

Thompkins Family of Boyne City Members of Party Who Are Injured in Accident.

Sunday John Thompkins, wife and two children and Mrs. Morrison, mother of Mrs. Thompkins, and G. G. Thompkins, the aged father of Mr. Thompkins, all of Boyne City, started for a day's outing in Mr. Thompkins' car. They had planned to drive through Petoskey and Harbor Springs and around the lake, but an accident a few miles out from Petoskey sent them all to the hospital. They were running along at a fair rate of speed, when a dog ran into the road ahead of the machine. Mr. Thompkins, who was driving, swerved the car to avoid hitting the canine, and the car turned over into a ditch, pinning the occupants beneath it. They were soon rescued from their position and it was found that each had received more or less injuries and the car put out of commission.

The party who rescued them conveyed the party to the hospital in Petoskey, where they received medical attention. Mr. Thompkins, Sr., received a dislocated shoulder; one of the children a broken collarbone; J. Thompkins was hurt internally, and the other members of the party received bruises of more or less serious nature. It is thought all will recover, although the enfeebled condition of the elderly Thompkins will undoubtedly make his a severe case. This was the second accident Mrs. Morrison has been in and it took some time for the other members of the party to obtain her consent to accompany them on the trip.

OPEN YEAR ROUND

Troy Laundry to be Open for Business All the Year in Future.

The management of the Troy Laundry wish to announce to their many patrons in Charlevoix that they will in the future be open all the year round. New machinery has been added and nothing but the very best of work will be turned out.

The management has been requested many times to keep the laundry open through the entire year and they have finally decided to remain open. Charlevoix can support a year-round laundry as well as any city in Northern Michigan. It should be a matter of civic pride to our citizens that such an institution continues its business during the entire year and they should receive the hearty support of everyone having laundry work in the city.

GEORGE LONG DEAD

Bay Township Pioneer Passes Away After Months of Suffering.

After suffering from paralysis since last May, George Long, one of Bay township's best known farm residents, passed away Tuesday, September 8, at his home. Following the first stroke he partially recovered and was able to be about the farm and do some light work, but early Saturday prior to his death he suffered a second stroke and remained in an unconscious condition until the end came.

George Long was born August 26th, 1843, in Grand Blanc township, Genesee county, and spent his early life there. On September 25, 1866, he was married to Miss Emily Light and in 1882 moved to Northern Michigan and purchased the present Long farm. Mr. Long had held many township and school offices and had always been interested in all movements for the betterment of the community.

Besides his wife he leaves one daughter, Mrs. Wm. Critchell of Petoskey; one son, Rollo Long, who has charge of the farm; six grandchildren and a brother, Samuel Long of Bay Shore.

The funeral was held last Thursday at 2 o'clock from the home and interment was made at North Bay cemetery. The Rev. Charlevoix I. O. O. F. lodge, of which he was a member, had charge of the funeral.

AUTO HITS MOTOR CYCLE

Alfred Brown Badly Bruised When Motor Cycle is Struck by Automobile.

What might have proved a very serious accident occurred Saturday afternoon, when the motor cycle upon which Alfred J. Brown was riding was struck by a Ford car driven by H. R. Fowler.

Both automobile and motor cycle were being driven north on Bridge street when the accident happened. Brown was riding on the rear seat of the motor cycle, which was driven by Wm. Ives. The Ford car, which is owned by H. R. Fowler and used for delivering, was running on the right hand side of the street and just before reaching the bridge approach swung to the left to make the turn and stop in front of the store. At the moment the turn was being made the motor cycle turned to the left to pass the car and the collision occurred. The automobile struck the rear wheel of the motor cycle and threw Brown some distance to the pavement, breaking two ribs and severely bruising him about the hips and lower limbs.

Neither auto nor motor cycle were injured.

PLANS LAID FOR TWO DAY FAIR

Under the Auspices of the Business Men of Charlevoix.

Farmers and Fruit Raisers to Place Products of Year on Exhibition.

A number of Charlevoix's business men met Tuesday evening in the vacant store in the See block to discuss and formulate plans for a two-day fair to be held about the first week in October.

Heretofore the Retail Merchants Association have held two one-day events, the first in September and the other in October. The plans this year are to consolidate these two exhibits into one and make a two-day affair of it. Various plans were discussed and committees appointed to obtain signatures of those willing to help out in the movement.

Among the plans discussed were suggestions that all exhibits be in not later than noon on the first day, and during the afternoon of the second the produce placed on exhibition be auctioned off and the proceeds of the sale be given to the exhibitor as heretofore.

Considerable enthusiasm was manifested by those present and there is no reason why an event of this kind cannot successfully be held. It was also suggested that the secretary of the West Michigan Development Bureau be asked to give one of his famous lectures, illustrated by stereoscopic views, on the evening of the first day, and during the afternoon of the second day refreshments will be served.

Want to Buy Grounds.

According to reports from Petoskey an effort will be made shortly to have the Emmet county board of supervisors purchase a fair ground. The present grounds may be purchased and if so the buildings now used will be razed and modern structures erected and the race track improved.

BADLY HURT IN RUNAWAY

Father and Daughter Injured in Terrible Accident Saturday.

August Cellner Receives Broken Arm, and Daughter, Agnes, Broken Arm and Leg.

One of the worst accidents that has occurred in this vicinity happened Saturday forenoon, when a horse driven by August Cellner and daughter, Agnes, became frightened a few rods south of the Belvedere station and ran away.

Mr. Cellner and daughter had been to this city to do some trading and were on their way home when the accident happened. They had reached a point a few rods south of the station, when the horse became frightened in some manner and started to run. In the excitement Miss Cellner grabbed the lines from her father's hands and turned the frightened animal to the side of the road, where they ran into a large tree, throwing both out of the buggy, which was smashed into kindling wood.

When the buggy struck the tree, in some manner it threw Miss Cellner forward out of the buggy, or at the time the buggy struck it she was partly out of the rig, and it caught her left leg between the iron tire of the wheel and the tree, breaking both bones and nearly cutting it in two. She was also at the same time thrown violently forward out of the buggy to the ground, breaking her left arm at the shoulder and otherwise bruising her.

When the buggy struck the tree it also threw Mr. Cellner out, he striking on his left side and breaking his left arm between the elbow and wrist. The horse, which was supposed to be gentle and had never ran away before, kept on its course for a short distance and then stopped. Neither Mr. Cellner nor his daughter can tell what caused the animal to run away.

Onlookers who witnessed the accident placed the injured members into an automobile and they were taken to the office of Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, who, with the assistance of Dr. Armstrong, reduced the fractures and made them as comfortable as possible.

Later in the day Mr. Cellner was able to go to his home near Adams Lake. On account of her serious injuries Miss Cellner was taken to the home of Nat. Burns on Mason street, where she will remain until recovered sufficiently to be removed to her home.

HISTORICAL WINDOWS

In Memory of Gordon Saltonstall Hubbard to be Placed in Church at Mackinac Island.

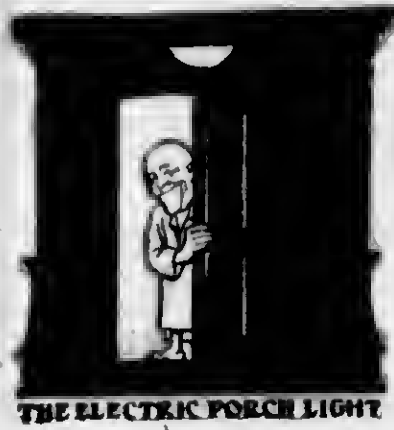

According to the St. Ignace Republican-News, three most interesting historical windows have recently been completed for the Union Congregational church at Mackinac Island.

The windows are presented by Mrs. E. M. Williams of Northfield, Minnesota, in memory of Mr. Gordon Saltonstall Hubbard, her father. The inscription thereon is as follows: "In grateful memory of Gordon Saltonstall Hubbard, 1802-1886, who loved this island, on which he spent ten years of his early life in the service of the American Fur Company, under Robert Stuart, resident manager. He was an honored citizen of Chicago for more than fifty years; a pioneer of civilization; brave, modest, far-sighted, and loyal to his family, his friends and his God."

SYNOPSIS

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, international spy, from General Love, whom Loubeque hates, in Manila. Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille nurses him in an attempt to recover the papers.

CHAPTER III.

A Second Accusation.

GENERAL LOVE sat at his desk trying vainly to figure out what motive there could have been for his trusted old's taking the desperate chance of which he had accused him.

But no matter in which direction he turned, the general was unable to see how the young officer could be honest. Where had he received the money so unexpectedly that led him to believe he might be married before his promotion was confirmed? And yet—always there was that "yet" to contend with. He knew the boy, knew him so well he had been willing to trust his daughter's life to him, and he could not believe that Gibson was guilty of the charge.

He was roused from the reverie into which he had fallen by the entrance of his orderly, who told him of Lucille's flight to the Empress. Alarmed, the general sent for Harley.

Briefly Harley told of his trip to the Empress with Lucille, the earnestness of her pleadings, the final words that had won his consent.

"For the honor of the man I love."

Over and over again he repeated the words, trying to make something of them. Of course she meant Gibson, but what could she find out on the Empress relating to the robbery of the safe in this office? Puzzled he ordered his aid brought before him. There was a certain suspicion, an air of contempt in the very figure of Gibson that told him. But what was this tale of landing aboard the Empress in a aeroplane? The orderly again entered, stealthily passing a Marconigram across the desk.

Gibson stared wonderingly at his chief, wondering at the purpling of his already florid face. Suddenly with a choking laugh the old man tossed the wireless to his aid, the last blow of Hugo Loubeque: "Not the aid, General Love sold me papers."

The lieutenant felt a warm throbbing pity for the old man. The general straightened slowly, rising from his chair.

"Somewhere, somehow there is an explanation," he muttered. "And Lucille is all that stands between us and disgrace. You will come with me, lieutenant."

"Yes, sir. You have some idea?"

"To the provisional governor," curtly answered the old soldier, "until this charge can be sifted. Meanwhile, we will wait until there is word from Lucille in answer to the message I sent."

"A message? You did not mention that."

"Certainly I sent a message immediately Harley told his story. We can drop in there on the way to the governor's mansion."

Gibson nodded shortly. He was in a haze still, feeling that his suspicions of the old officer had been unfounded, knowing that some evil brain was conspiring at their destruction.

Gibson did not notice the general's orderly hurrying toward them until the man halted in salute there on the parade grounds, the moon casting an eerie shadow across his olive khaki.

"Sir," he reported, "the operator has tried to reach the Empress, but there is no response. Her wireless must be disabled."

General Love stared at his aid. Fear gleamed in the eyes of both men, a mutual fear for a mutual object. Who was this unseen enemy who struck such fierce blows from out of the dark? And Lucille, sweetheart and daughter; Lucille, the pampered, dainty, fragile Lucille was undoubtedly near this one who even commanded the lightnings to do his will.

Curiously Hugo Loubeque watched the operator as he settled back in his chair, almost immediately receiving the flash that a message was on the way to him from some unseen, unknown source.

Came a long silver of light that seemed to nudge the switchboard violently from its fastenings, a shaft that reached out and pierced him through and through, blinding him with its bursting light vapor. Then Loubeque felt himself falling, falling into a pit that seemed to have no bottom.

It was hours before he could piece together what had happened, how he changed to be in bed, what the cause of the terrible throbbing pains upon his arms and torso was. Then the wonder of Lucille's being with him, ministering to him, drove every pain away and he watched her from under cover of his heavy lashes as she moved about the stateroom, quiet, cool, sympathetic.

He straightened in bed so abruptly as to bring a moan of anguish from his lips. In the lassitude induced by the superior he was himself under another's suspicion. It was more than puzzling, more than thrilling—that accusatory pair of frank gray eyes.

"Lieutenant," he began slowly, "I have tried to think of some solution to this affair that will not involve you. You must realize how greatly I desire this. But I have thought for hours and there seems no other explanation of the disappearance of the papers I turned over to you. Can you suggest some other person that might possibly have an interest in their disappearance?"

"I can, sir," steadily answered the aid, his eyes holding those of the older man. "I can not, however, insubordinately nor incidentally to my superior officer."

"The smoldering flame in General Love's eyes leaped high as he grasped the semiacusation. By an effort he mastered himself, forcing his voice to steadiness."

"Harley, the aviator, has just reported that Lucille came to him this evening and persuaded him to take her to the Empress. She evidently felt she possessed information that would clear you of this charge and that the Empress was carrying the guilty party. Can you tell me anything of such knowledge?"

Gibson stared incredulously at his superior. Could it be possible that this old man was willing to make his daughter a scapegoat for his crime? No, it was all too unbelievable. And yet the general must have sold the papers. He could see no other explanation.

Loubeque Felt Himself Falling.

his burns and the shock of the wireless room, explosion he had concentrated the forty years that were past into the living presence of the daughter of the woman he had loved at that time. And she was his enemy.

He must not show resentment of her kindly interest, must not betray the fact that he had papers for which she was looking. The coincidence of her telling him was too strange to be unprompted.

"You are very kind," he said. "There was an explosion in the wireless room, was there not?"

"You must not talk till the surgeon comes," she smiled. "I must obey orders, you know, because I am only a volunteer."

"A volunteer? You volunteered to help a stranger?"

"But you are not a stranger." She smiled curiously. "You knew my name and that made me feel really acquainted when you were hurt." There was something penetrating in the eyes fastened upon his own, something gleeful about the suggestive expression of her tones that put him instantly on guard.

Day followed day with ever his faculties fastened on the necessity for caution. A curious sort of friendship sprang up between them, a friendship partaking more of an armed neutrality without the formality of a dag of truce than anything else he could imagine.

With the alleviation of Hugo Loubeque's sufferings the old animosity and purpose flourished with redoubled vigor. This girl had undoubtedly sought the opportunity of nursing him that she might defeat his purpose. She was the daughter of the man he had spent his life in working out a complete degradation for. He must fight down the weakness which assailed him when her resemblance to the Lucille of forty years ago surged strong within him. He must fight against her as he would fight against any one else, as he had fought against the very world.

And Lucille felt the change, felt it and redoubled her effort to get the secret of the stolen papers. The spirit of the game was in her, and she yielded a grudging admiration for the cunning of the man who, even in his most acute suffering, managed to conceal everything from her. Even in delirium his powerful brain resisted her suggestions, her hints. And in one of her days of misadventure to him she discovered the diary in which he had entered his strange worldwide actions.

The international spy was able to walk about his room now, his eyes showing the satisfaction he felt at thwarting her. They played chess together, dined together, with always the armed deference between them, a state of mind so obvious as to have been ludicrous had they not both been so conscious of it. Many times she thought the strain was more than she could bear, when she doubted the wisdom of this trip. And always would come morbid pictures of her sweetheart to sustain her in her determination to clear him of the charge under which he rested.

CHAPTER IV.

"To the boats!"

It was on the eighth day out that the spy suddenly sprang to his feet, darting swiftly to the door of the stateroom. She stared at him in astonishment, amazed at the change which had come over him. His life must have made him more

With the opening of the city schools citizens may be reminded that they have a thoroughly well organized department of education. They have a right to be proud of our school system and of the success which attends the efforts of the school officials and faculty. Therefore, it is well that the head of the department and his assistants should be given a full measure of support in their work of training the youth of the city for future usefulness. Charlevoix has splendid schoolhouses, admirably planned and fitted up for their purpose and with material and intellectual equipment of the best quality. Parents must hope for the sake of their children and of their peace of mind that the lessons of obedience, submission to authority, of discipline in the best sense and the only true sense, may attend the work of the schools during the coming year, even to a higher degree than in the past. Progress should be made and progress is made, but it helps the teachers, it helps the education department a great deal, to have the cordial co-operation of the public. One of the most surprising things about schools on the whole is that parents pay so little heed to them, visit them so little, know so little about them, trust so completely to the teachers for the training of their children. This is due in part to the excellent results that attend the teaching, so that a fund of confidence has been gathered, and is due in part, of course, to the occupations of parents that do not allow them time to often visit the schools. But a closer co-operation will be good for all—teachers, pupils and parents.

Farm and Garden

THE STUDY OF INSECTS.

In Recent Years It Has Been Brought to the Farmer's Aid.
(Prepared by United States department of agriculture.)

It is only within comparatively recent years that entomology, or the study of insects, has been brought to the practical aid of the farmer. In the old days the scientists specializing in this branch were almost wholly absorbed in obtaining specimens of insects and describing them. In the meantime the farmer knew as little about "entomology" as the scientist knew about agriculture. Misconceptions among farmers regarding the occurrence of destructive insects were widespread, and the only men who really knew anything about the insects causing the destruction kept their knowledge to themselves.

During the first hundred years of agriculture in America we have only fragmentary records of the ravages of insects. They chronicled, however, certain very disastrous outbreaks, and much of the vast amount of injury caused by pests went unnoticed because the farmers were often unacquainted with the reason for their losses.

By this time ordinary insect outbreaks appear to have become so common as to be thought unworthy of record, and we have nothing more until the year 1743, when it is stated that "millions of devouring worms in armies threatened to cut off every green thing. May very scarce; £7 to £8 a load." While this particular record applies to New England, it certainly does not cover the entire area of devastation, as John Bartram, during July of that year, made a journey from Philadelphia to Oswego, N. Y., and records the occurrence of worms, which he says have done much mischief "by destroying the grass and even corn for two summers." He also observes that the worms ate off the blades not only of corn, but also of long white grass, so that the stems of both stood naked four feet high. He observes that they seem to be periodical, like the locust and caterpillar.

During the year 1749, we are told that in July grasshoppers appeared in myriads. The observer stated: "I reckon my poultry, about a hundred, eat 10,000 grasshoppers every day. The inhabitants of Nahant, Mass., formed a line and with bushes drove the grasshoppers into the sea by millions." In 1762 a terrible drought appears to have occurred, and, owing to a very late spring, corn could not be planted at the proper season. Statement is made that "when at last the corn was planted millions of worms appeared to eat it up."

For upward of a hundred years our records are very incomplete, although there are indefinite references in existence to show that this is not owing to a lack of insect depredations in the fields of the farmer.

In 1770 there appears to have been a widespread outbreak of our common army worm, which, it is stated, extended from Laughton, N. H., to Northfield, Mass. These are wheat and corn and disappeared as if by magic, leaving nothing but the bare stalks of these crops. It seems that the farmers in order to protect their fields drew ropes over them, brushing the worms from the stalks, which expedient, we are told, only retarded the devastation, the crops being finally doomed to destruction. Trenches were dug in the fields in advance of the moving armies of worms, but the worms soon filled the trenches, and the millions that were in the rear went over on the backs of their fellows in the trenches and took possession of the interlinked food holes were sometimes made in the bottoms of these trenches, one every two or three feet, into which the worms fell and were then killed by the farmers going over the fields and plunging bars or sticks of wood into these holes. It seems, however, that only a few farmers were able to save enough corn for seed the following year. Just eleven years afterward, in 1781, the same pest is again recorded. It seems also to have reappeared in 1790. Trapping by means of ditches and holes is used in present day methods of control, but the worms are killed by poisoning kerosene into the holes.

Not only is the American farmer now receiving assistance through the information of scientists regarding cereal and forage insects, but those affecting fruits and truck crops are also receiving attention. That the United States is in advance of other nations in the practical application of the study of insects to the needs of the farmer is made plain by the fact that students and experts are coming from all over the world to study our system and methods.

End Came Quickly.

The experiences of local jewelers with prospective bridegrooms have been many and varied. Some wish to buy on the installment plan, some wish to take a half dozen sizes to be sure of a fit and some bring "beautiful verses" to see whether they can be engraved in the ring.

One jeweler in recounting his experiences said a young man came into his store and when asked whether he wished anything engraved inside the ring became confused, fumbled a bit in his pockets and finally produced a paper on which was scrawled, "The love that never endeth," which the jeweler said was just the proper sentiment.

A month later the young man returned and told the whole history of his marital life in five words, "Can't you cut that out?" pointing to the engraved sentence.—Indianapolis News.

Glacier National Park.

Glacier National park is in northern Montana and is bounded on the north by the Canadian line, on the east by the Blackfoot Indian reservation and on the south and west by Flathead river.

It has an area of about 915,000 acres and derives its name from many glaciers, which are scattered throughout its area. There are about eighty glaciers, between five square miles and a few acres in area. The park is a rugged mountainous region and contains over 250 lakes, which are surrounded by steep and beautifully wooded mountains or precipitous rock walls. The methods of transportation in the park are by automobile, horse stage, launches on the lakes and saddle and pack horses.

Inductive and Deductive.

Deductive reasoning is from theory to facts, while inductive reasoning is from facts to theory. Deduction is sometimes mere dreaming, oftentimes very foolish dreaming, while induction is the same reaching out from particular facts to general laws.—New York American.

PUT IN SALTING STATION

Johnson Pickle Company Ready to Do So if Acreage Can Be Obtained.

James H. Johnson of the Johnson Pickle Company of South Haven met with a number of our local business men last evening, and made a proposition whereby Charlevoix can have a salting station if the proper amount of acreage can be obtained.

Mr. Johnson is the head of the James H. Johnson Pickle Company, one of the most widely known companies following this line in the state. The company has salting stations at Newaygo, White Cloud, Woodville, Thompsonville and Baldwin, and is now looking for places to locate three more salting stations. He states that he is greatly impressed with Charlevoix and surrounding country, which in his estimation would be an ideal location and that the land would raise bumper crops of cucumbers.

To-day he is looking the country over and if satisfied with the outlook, Charlevoix can have a salting station if the farmers are willing to plant acreage enough to justify Mr. Johnson in putting in the station.

Death of L. H. Decker.

Lou H. Decker died Tuesday, September 15, at his home about four miles south of town. He had suffered a long time with stomach trouble, which was the cause of his death. Mr. Decker was an old soldier, 74 years old at the time of his death. He leaves a wife and children.

Funeral services will be held Thursday, September 17, and the remains will be placed in the Brookside cemetery.

SOME HEN STORY

Petoskey Biddy Finds Hailstone in Nest, Thinks It's an Egg and Gets Chucky.

The following story originating from Petoskey is going the rounds of the state papers. We always knew Petoskey had the reputation of being a great place for people infected with the "poultry bug," but this chicken story beats them all:

"That the hailstones which descended in Petoskey Sunday morning, September 6th, were large is known, but from the story told by Frank L. Ferguson, former Ohio newspaper man, who has a farm near Petoskey, extra large ones struck his place.

"Early that morning Mr. Ferguson dragged himself out of bed to investigate the damage done on the farm by the storm. He found several trees injured and a number of windows broken.

"As I was passing the hen coop," declared Ferguson, "I heard an unearthly cackling from within. Fearing some of the inmates had been struck by hail and were dying, I hurried in. There was an old biddy all fluffed out strutting about and singing a song of triumph.

"The hen had laid an egg for the last four years and I didn't understand it. On investigation I discovered a hailstone had dropped through the roof of the hen coop and landed on a nest. Shortly after biddy climbed into the nest to get warm, but pretty quick she got cold instead and hopped off. Discovering the stone, the old hen came to the conclusion she had laid an egg, and she hasn't yet recovered from the shock.

"I could prove this," concluded Ferguson, "if the evidence hadn't melted."

PLEASANTLY SURPRISED

Home of Arthur Bennett Scene of Delightful Evening's Entertainment.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bennett were pleasantly surprised by a large number of their friends last Tuesday evening at their home on Bridge street, the occasion being a miscellaneous shower.

Those present were greatly amused by "Billy" A. Condon, the all-star Majestic's tenor, and "Art" Bennett, who is here from the Chicago Theatrical Club. The two boys boosted some of Ted Snyder's latest songs.

The guests were much pleased with the metropolitan quartette, which was engaged a week ago for the delightful event.

The Bennetts were the recipients of many useful and valuable gifts.

WAS BADLY HURT

Swinton Automobile Accident More Serious Than First Reported.

Mrs. Geo. D. Swinton, who was badly injured last week in a collision between the automobile in which she was riding and a trolley car, was brought to her home in this city last Thursday, accompanied by her husband and daughter.

At the time we went to press last week details of the accident were meager. Later information reveals that the accident was of a more serious nature than first reported. The party were on their way home and while about to cross the interurban tracks at Whiteford Road, Ohio, were struck by a trolley car on the Toledo & Western interurban line. The trolley car forced the automobile against a loading platform near the station, badly crushing it.

Mr. and Mrs. Swinton were riding in the rear seat and were unable to get out of the car and were crushed between the platform and the trolley car. Mrs. Swinton's right shoulder and hip were dislocated and her right leg badly bruised from the knee down. Her left eye also received serious injury. The other members of the party were badly jarred and bruised.

The trolley car pushing the automobile against the loading platform prevented its turning turtle, in which event more serious injuries would have been received by the members of the party.

KEY AGAIN STOLEN

Much Sought For Elk Key Turns Up Missing From Hall at Petoskey.

The news that the much sought for and fought for "Elk key" had been stolen from the lodge room of the Petoskey antlered tribe will be of considerable interest to local members of the order.

The key was taken between the hours of 1 and 7 o'clock Saturday morning, and since no trace has been found of it. Two well known summer visitors are accused of having a hand in the game. Also another member from Gary, Indiana, is thought to be implicated.

Will Tracy, who has charge of the "Elks" club, is blamed for allowing it to go away and there are hints that he was "in" on the job.

New Ideas in House Dresses

To be attired attractively when engaged in the duties of the house, seems impossible until you see our showing of the newest designs of

ELECTRIC BRAND HOUSE DRESSES

They're not an expense—they're an economy.

They are low in price yet marvelously attractive in style, fit and finish, and are so easily laundered as to enable the woman whose pride in her own home calls for her personal superintendence of the details of the house work, to be ready at all times for the unexpected visitor.

They are exceptionally stylish in design; thoroughly well made from reliable materials, and priced sufficiently low as to be within the reach of every woman's pocket book.

Their cost is less than the wear and tear on better clothes when worn around the house. They are worth their cost in the comfort of being "always ready" for an emergency.

They give complete protection to all garments worn underneath.

They are made from the best qualities of wash goods guaranteed fast colors.

They can be worn to "run to the store" or for a morning trip "down town." You couldn't make half as good dresses at home, for double the price. They are priced at

$1.00 to $1.50

When you see these new ideas in house dresses, you'll have some new ideas about house dressing.

the rail stood the captain and second mate supervising the lowering of the lifeboats. A white faced steward banged against the door, thrusting his head inside.

"Fire," he whispered, then, as though summoned by the fear which had robbed him of his voice. "It's fire—to the boats!"

Lucille turned away, a sickening feeling clutching at her heart. Fire! Fire out here on the broad ocean and never a sight of land since Manila! What could she do? She suddenly was conscious of Hugo Loubeque's swift motions. The spy darted across the room and drew from the top drawer of his desk a package of papers which he hurriedly replaced as she turned. There was something on his countenance which told her the truth, told her that he had revealed the secret of the stolen papers. He snatched the drawer shut, reassuming his aspect of indifference as he brushed her away from the door.

Quick as the spring of a cat she secured the papers while he stepped to the deck, apparently to study the situation. When he returned she was moving carelessly about the room, wearing so innocent an expression that he studied her suspiciously a second. Their eyes met, and he sprang to the desk, snatching upon the drawer so violently its contents fell upon the floor. As he whirled upon her she saw in his face that the time was at an end, that he knew of his loss and would stop at nothing to regain his secret.

Swiftly she sprang through the open door, losing herself in the mass of passengers huddled against the rail. Below them sounded that horrible hissing sound, the sound of unburied fire.

Lucille felt an overwhelming impulse within her to remain with this terror, anything save the great, threatening ocean that looked so monstrous now, waiting the day craft that crashed down from the davits. Then powerful arms were about her. She felt herself being lifted and hurried forward, huddling down in the crowded boat that was being lowered to the waves.

A hand reached out and rested upon her shoulder. For a second she was unconscious of it, then something steady, indomitable about the clutch of finger this made her turn. Hugo Loubeque snatched her eyes, smiled with the playing expression of an invincible one who grieves for the weakness that dashes against him.

Her eyes upraised toward the boat, a mass of whitish smoke now through which leaped playful reddish flames. Now and then a figure would dart toward the rail and lounge overboard, the bodies striking the water in great circles that lost themselves in one another. And for a second the thought came to her that even that inferno of a ship was preferable to this man beside her.

"Well played, Miss Love," the spy murmured slyly. "But I fear you must return the compliment."

A piercing shriek made him turn swiftly, a shriek that lost itself in the heavy crumpling of wooden cars against wood. Came a horrid bumping that seemed more like the crumbling of a wild beast upon bones than anything she had ever heard. That, intense, stinging, bent upon her cheeks. She looked up and only the dark bulk of the Empress loomed above her, only a lurid flame illumined the heavens.

She was conscious of her heavy clothing, sudden now with water; was conscious of the lack of support. Something long and wooden tilted against her, and instinctively her fingers clutched the car which had floated out to her from their boat, which had been tossed and crushed against the burning liner's side. Again she looked up. And within her soul flickered the spark of combat which youth will not allow to die.

Consciousness lapsed slightly and was followed by a state of dull apathy. Some instinct held Lucille's arms upon the car that had floated to her when the lifeboat smashed itself against the side of the burning Empress.

Mountains of waves lifted along her path, bearing her gently to their crests and passing her through the trough of sea to the next wave in line. From watching the myriads stars blaring in the heavens she became interested in trifles, never thinking of the precious papers she had rescued at so great effort from the international spy, far getting over the ones at Manila on whose behalf she had taken such risks to get them back. Came a long interval of restfulness where everything grew dim and indistinct, and the water in which she was being tossed about seemed like a fostering mother upon which, in perfect confidence, she could rest her weary head and sleep.

Little needles continually picking at her flesh brought her from slumber so abruptly she straightened bolt upright, staring about her incredulously. Every nerve and sinew of her body ached terribly, cramping her so she could barely look about the long expanse of beach that seemed to stretch interminably in every direction. Behind her she finally managed to clear her eyes enough to make out a luxurious vegetation, obviously tropical.

Safety meant little to her. Her brain was in such a state that the providential escape seemed natural. That she was alone upon an island in the Pacific seemed simple enough. Nothing mattered. Again she closed her eyes and gave herself over to slumber, which lasted until daylight.

Securely hidden by the thick vegetation, she settled down, taking a firm grip on herself and trying to reassemble the things that had happened to her in such fashion that she might know what was best to be done. And always primarily did her thoughts revert to the papers concealed in the bosom of her dress, the papers and the man who sought them.

The papers. Undoubtedly there was something in them which would afford the clue. She stared at the oiled belt thoughtfully, fighting down the last instinct which repelled her touching the secrets of another.

The bulky envelope from Washington to her father which the butler had stolen from the safe was still unbroken. She placed the packet to one side, knowing that if the spy did not care to investigate the contents there could be nothing in them which would assist her. The diary she investigated next.

Thoughtfully Lucille sat there, the diary in her lap, the picture of her mother in her hands. She knew the life of Hugo Loubeque now, knew the dominating hatred of his life, the love of his life, the gigantic efforts of the man, involving untold and humanity, the thousand tentacles of the man, stretching to every quarter of the globe.

But no she looked at the faded picture the spy had cherished through all the years tears of pity dimmed her eyes, pity for the man who could allow love to associate itself inseparably with hatred. She realized now that destiny itself was fighting in her behalf; that, giant intellect though he was, Hugo Loubeque had more than himself to contend with because of the unnatural business of his motives.

But it was a fight, would be a fight to the bitter end. She must find out where she was, what nature of place this might be, what chance for rescue there was. She must get back to Manila, for the papers were no better than rags here. She must start immediately.

A long shadow suddenly reached out before her. Motionless she stood and stared at it. From another direction came the crashing report of a broken twig. In every direction, as though the sound had been a signal, shadows flitted. The sounds were louder now, more frequent. Then, with a rush, Lucille saw the shadows resolve themselves into figures of men.

She had but time to make out their brown color, fear blinding her. She closed her eyes fearfully, knowing she was surrounded. A hand touched her forearm timidly. Something in the touch was reassuring. She looked about upon a solid ring of scantily clad natives, who stared at her in bewildered amazement. Again the hand touched her arm.

The native stood beside her, evidently much bolder than his fellows. Lucille could scarcely repress a smile as she caught the incredulity on the man's face as he looked at his hand, evidently expecting the white of her flesh to rub off. "They had never before seen a white woman. And the girl was thinking how she might use this thing which must appear a miracle to them."

Lucille stayed close to the chief; the one who had touched her arm.

An old man lay upon the heavy blankets that crisscrossed his feet, but his torso was magnificently muscular, his carriage that of a man to whom obedience always comes. There was something very splendid about his steady black eyes, narrowed a bit as though to hint of Mongolian origin, about the thin nostrilled nose, the full lips.

WOES OF THE POOR RICH.

How the Wife of One Wealthy Man Got Her Spending Money.

In the American Magazine, in a story by Rebecca Hooper Eastman, is a satire on the poor rich, in which the wife of a wealthy man tells us follows how she gets tired of her spending money.

"Kitty, dear, I can't bear that you should misjudge me, and so I am going to tell you what not a soul in this world knows. I have absolutely no money and no way of getting any. My husband doesn't think it is necessary for me to have money when I can charge things. I owe you a dollar. You think I have forgotten, but I have not. And I am going to pay you when I can."

"I want to tell you that I have just discovered a way to make money. You see, I have borrowed so many small sums for this and that that I am quite in debt."

"We have one of the finest cooks in New York, as you know, and I order him to make cakes. He thinks they are for a bazaar. In reality I sell those cakes at a certain woman's exchange for $1 a loaf, cash, Kitty. I leave my car at a nearby hotel, walk through the hotel to the exchange on the next street, wear a plain suit and a thick veil, which I put on in the hotel dressing room. Nobody knows."

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Their Coast Line is Longer Than That of the United States.

"It is not generally known perhaps that the coast line of the Philippine Islands is longer than that of the United States," said a man who has spent more than fifteen years in that country. "The Philippines are numerous islands," he continued. "It would take one many months to tour all of the islands. Of course the climate varies, but in most parts it is delightful. The average temperature is lower than in many parts of the United States, and the humidity is not nearly so great. Records of temperature in the Philippines have been kept since 1905, and in that time the maximum recorded was 103 degrees. The mean temperature is from 70 to 80 degrees."

"If the humidity were great there are times when it would be almost unbearable, but ordinarily I would rather live in the Philippines than in most sections of this country. It is fortunate that in the month of greatest humidity, September, the temperature falls lower than at any other time of the year, which makes it possible to endure the conditions."

"I have frequently been asked if there is much drinking among the Philippines. There is comparatively very little. The Philippines have discovered, even if some of our countrymen have not, that alcoholic drinks and the tropics do not mix. It is seldom you see a Filipino intoxicated. There are native brewed drinks in different islands, but the people do not overindulge."—Washington Post.

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.

More Liable to Generate in Powdered Than in Solid Substances.

The scientific phrase for combustion is oxidation, or the combining of some substance with the oxygen of the air. Some substances have greater affinity for oxygen than others, and whenever the combination reaches a certain point of rapidity it results.

Anything that increases the facility of combination with oxygen increases the danger of spontaneous combustion or explosion, and for that reason a substance is more dangerous when pulverized than when solid, because the separated particles of matter are brought more directly in contact with the oxygen of the air. There is no danger of spontaneous combustion or explosion in a mass of ground wheat, but mills have been destroyed by explosions of flour dust.

Piled oils absorb oxygen and give out carbon and hydrogen, causing a rise of temperature that may reach the burning point, as has often occurred in heaps of rags, tow, sawdust and similar bodies soaked with oil, paint, varnish, turpentine and sometimes grease.

Bimolecular acid is liable to spontaneous combustion when moistened with water, and the coal dust in mines is a common cause of explosions. Moisture adds spontaneous combustion in piles of damp hay or freshly mown grass, and barns have been burned from that cause.—Philadelphia Press.

WHAT CAUSES CRYSTALS?

An Obscure Process That Plays a Large Part in Nature.

In answer to the question, "Will a sudden jar ever cause crystals to appear in a supersaturated solution, or can this be produced only by the introduction of one of the crystals?" Editor Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"Supersaturation and crystal formation are obscure phenomena. Let us take absolute salt until it is supersaturated when perfectly still; then let the containing vessel be suddenly moved, tapped or disturbed; then crystals of the dissolved substance will instantly form. Pure water, distilled, may be put into a closed container and a thermometer placed below the surface."

"Keep the whole very still and the water may be cooled a number of degrees below the freezing-point, crystallizing point without crystallizing. Suddenly strike the vessel and the liquid will crystallize. Many solutions of superheated will thus behave. "This little understood process underlying the fascinating mathematical science of crystal forming plays a highly important part in nature in the building of solids, of crystalline rocks and general structure of our house—the earth."

It is too late to throw water on the embers when the house is burned down.—Danish Proverb.

Stiletto or Password?

An Episode in Mexico

By BURKE JENKINS

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Nick's little back room on the ground floor was our customary meeting place. Here we came together in the equality of true democracy. There have been evenings when eleven or twelve different professions of our thronging metropolis were represented about Nick's little three-legged table.

This evening attentive ears were turned toward Carusworthy, the opulent. That gentleman busied himself for a moment with a seltzer siphon. "Yes," he commented, "I rather be here in secret societies, fraternities, brotherhoods or whatever you choose to call 'em—that is, some of them."

He lounged into an easier attitude. "It happened down in Mexico in the state of Chihuahua—little, old, driedup

"THE TALE WAS RATHER A TALL ONE."

town—can't exactly recall the name. It began with a V."

"Vorrojo?" inquired Shaw, the detective, quickly.

"The very place," agreed Carusworthy, glad to come by the name. "You know your geography, Shaw."

"Have to," was Shaw's meek answer.

"Well," went on the narrator, "I had been making a thorough investigation of certain mines in which I was interested."

"Of course it had been convenient to make my visits to the nearest shipping points of the mines in my private car, and I had managed pretty well to avoid those sad hostilities of a flea bitten populace. I carried my own bottle. On the night of which I'm telling my car had been sidled at a little town not an inch on the map from the Texas border, and I was counting on hitting the states some time the next day. Vorrojo was the name, as Shaw reminded me."

"But the through limited that was to pick me up was reported full six hours late, and an attack of acute indigestion didn't help me to look on the bright side of the situation."

"I went to bed early, but sleep wouldn't woo for a copper. So I got up, slipped on the universal duck and Panama rig of the climate and time, left the car without being seen by any of my attendants and made for anything that might show semblance of a drug store. I rustled into a dilapidated wicker, roused a profoundly polite Mexican from postprandial slumber and demanded some cure nil device of the doctor's for that same of oppression."

"He led, with many explanations, to a stuffy little rear room, and there I underwent the ordeal of the most comglomerate mixture of all the Russian-Turkish-Fliz Zip, steam-entorific baths that ever I suffered the shock of."

"But, nota bene, it did the trick. I became another 'pleased patron' and reached for my roll for the wherewith to requite my deliverer."

"My hasty toilet had omitted the prime necessity. I explained matters; hastened back to the sliding."

"My car was gone. The through limited had caught up some of that late time and, likewise, as per schedule, had caught up my outfit and was now merily whirling my belongings northward. And my crew thought I was comfortably ensconced for the night. It was distinctly annoying."

"I hastened back to the apothecary and explained the situation. I could not blame him, for that smile of incredulity which broke through his set politeness. The tale was rather a tall one, and it was evident that he took me for a new species of the genus crafter."

"I first turned my attention toward a civilized expedient in this extremity. 'Will you direct me to the telegraph office?' I assumed more or less of an imperial tone, for I equated on some disabusing my creditor of his erroneous impression concerning myself and standing. 'I will telegraph to New York for money.'

"His expression changed from one of sarcasm to one of alarm. 'You're from New York, senior?'

"In fact, I had to give that case up."

"Certainly! What's odd about that? I replied, somewhat settled by his attitude, for I could see that his alarm was coupled to a hatred which an unpaid bill could scarcely account for."

"He changed his face on the instant, and, assuming a semblance of his former politeness, he said: 'Certainly, senior, I myself will conduct you to the telegraphic office, though it is rather late.'

"He led the way up a dingy street, casting furtive and what seemed to me uneasy glances at a little shack beside what I took to be a freight depot. My guide here left me for a moment, saying, 'I'll see what can be done, senior.'

"He disappeared into the shack and returned a minute later. 'Extremely sorry, senior, but the telegraph office is closed.'

"I didn't believe him, so I pushed my own way into the house and confronted a sleepy operator. 'The line is closed,' snipped that worthy before I could say a word."

"For some reason these two were in collusion against me. The why of it I couldn't fathom. The apothecary had apparently tipped this fellow off—to what I couldn't imagine."

"Accordingly, in distinct chagrin, I left the two and strode off into the night to think my situation over."

"But I had never been a man to look too long on the wrong side of a cloud, so it didn't take a great while for me to catch a glint of the silver lining."

"And this glint could almost be said to be a glint in very fact, for on I rambled around those tangled streets of that little old town I became aware of a gleam of light upon a hill just without the village limits."

"To add to the cheer, from time to time I caught the sound of music."

"Now, I have never been characterized by bashfulness, no, corried away perhaps by the entire incongruity of my whole evening thus far, I decided to add to it, and I headed for the scene of merriment, the grand house on the hill."

"I entered from a balcony unobserved, for the dance was in full swing, and I'm here to state that when a Spaniard dances he puts all that's in him in it. As for the señoritas I'm silent, for words fall on occasion."

"So I will attempt no description of that little woman who sat somewhat apart from the dancers, earnestly written all over her. 'Of course she must dance!' I stated emphatically to myself. 'What in the world can these fellows mean by leaving her for a wallflower?'

"Without further thought I trotted up to her and asked for the dance. At first she looked up in alarm; then, the spirit of coquetry conspiring, she merely glanced down the hall before she rose and took my arm."

"When the dance ended I led the pretty señorita out on the balcony, where I had observed tables for refreshments."

"Seated vis-a-vis, we continued the frothy conversation we had begun inside. As we chatted I looked up at her. Her gaze had left me and was fastened with frozen fear on something behind my back."

"I glanced up quickly, for something glinted above me. It was a pretty bit of a stiletto, and I could even note the arm that wielded it. There, tattooed on the tender skin of the under forearm, was the device of a brotherhood. I belonged to that order myself."

"But no time was there for an interchange of signals. I reached a quick hand and caught the wrist above me. Then I shoved forward, bringing my assailant with one lunge on to my back, and, with the impetus of my vigorous resistance, over the balcony rail we both went, landing in the shrubbery. I fell on top."

"The fellow was not seriously hurt, but without much trouble I wrested the jeweled weapon from his grasp, and as he recovered from the shock of the fall I leaped toward him and whispered something in his ear."

"His entire attitude changed, and in spite of his bruises he jumped to his feet and called to the anxious faces that peered from the balcony down into our darkness in the shrubbery: 'It's all right, friends. I have made a mistake. Nobody hurt.'

"And then he explained matters to me. He was the son of Don Roderigo, chief man of that region, and had had the misfortune to be ignorant of the views of the United States in such matters as the too free use of knife or revolver. It seems he had been forced to track an enemy to New York, and there, ignorant of our view point and caring little, he had found him and knifed him after the most approved Castilian style."

"It had all been about that very thing I had just danced with too. Now, the friends of the murdered man had even gone so far as to get out extradition papers, and it had been rumored that detectives had set out for the border."

"Then you took me for a detective looking for you? I asked, beginning to comprehend."

"Exactly," he answered, and Pedro, the apothecary, my good friend, thought so too. It didn't help matters, either. He went on, with a half smile, 'when I returned from Pedro to find you dancing with my partner.'

"Well, there is little more to add, gentlemen, except that for two days, until my car returned, that populace turned itself loose doing nice things to me. But I have often wondered how the real detective fared when he arrived in that tender spot. I'll bet he had his troubles."

"He did," asserted Shaw, the detective."

"She Wasn't Young."

"Miss Antelope—I feel so awkward—Miss Constance—No doubt. The good die young. You know."

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON

JUDGMENT OF THE NATIONS.

Matthew 25:31-46—Sept. 20.

"Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not unto Me."—Verse 45.

IN the past many of us read the Bible too carelessly. For instance, today's lesson was at one time applied to the Church. We failed altogether to notice that it says not one word respecting the Church, but is entirely applied to the heathen. The Jews were accustomed to think of themselves as God's people, and to style all others heathen, Gentiles, nations. In the prophecies God treated the matter from this standpoint.

In this parable our Lord tells us what will befall after His Kingdom shall have been set up—after the selection of the Church to be the Bride, the Lamb's Wife and Joint-heir in His Throne. Who after proper consideration of the beginning of the parable will dispute that this is a description of Messiah's Kingdom following His Parousia and His Epiphany at His Second Advent?

The work of the Millennial Age is then delineated. "Before Him shall be gathered all nations." All the world, except God's holy nation, the Church, will be before His great white Throne of Justice, Mercy and Love. Then will be their judgment time.

Six thousand years ago, in Eden, Adam and his entire race were judged, and the sentence was death. In due time God sent His Son to die for Adam's sin, so that "as by a man came death [of the entire race], by a man [Jesus] also will come the resurrection of the dead"—(the entire race). "For as all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive"—"every man in his own order."—1 Corinthians 15:21, 22.

The first to be made alive in Christ is the Church. These pass their judgment, their trial, for life or death everlasting in the present time. Hence the worthy ones will be quite ready to be Messiah's Bride class, joint-heirs with Him in His Kingdom and in His work of judging the world.—1 Corinthians 6:2.

The World's Judgment Day. The gathering of the world before that Throne will be the result of knowledge. The Time of Trouble will lead on to great knowledge. All blind eyes shall be opened, all deaf ears unstopped, and the knowledge of God's glory will fill the earth. Some there will be who, resisting this knowledge, will decline to accept Christ and will not come into this judgment, but after a hundred years of resistance will be destroyed.

Those in the parable are such as have accepted Christ's terms, and desire to be on judgment, or trial, for everlasting life. This will include all in their graves. Messiah's Kingdom will disseminate the knowledge of God and of righteousness, with a view to uplifting all the willing and obedient out of sin and death conditions to the full image of God, as possessed by Father Adam in the beginning.

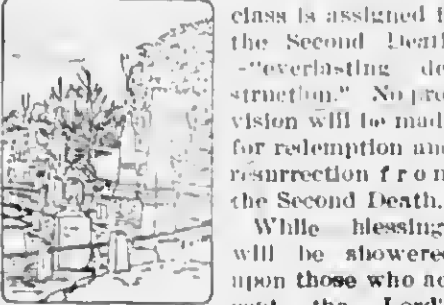

But what about heart conditions? If conformity to the Divine Law will bring blessings, would not some come into harmony merely because this outward harmony would bring restoration? Undoubtedly this is correct reasoning. It is along this line that the parable before us teaches; namely, that outwardly sheep and goats will have much the same appearance, except to the Judge, the King. He will read the heart, and ultimately will manifest to all that there has been a real heart difference between the two classes, all of whom will have been on trial for a thousand years.

The Basis of Judgment. Meantime each individual will have been making character. That character will be fully appreciated by the Great Judge, and the individual rated as a sheep or a goat. But not until the conclusion of the Millennium will His decision be manifested.

The Kingdom given to the sheep class is not the Messianic Kingdom, but that given to Adam, and lost through disobedience. Christ redeemed it by His sacrifice. The everlasting punishment to which the goat class is assigned is the Second Death—"everlasting destruction." No provision will be made for redemption and resurrection from the Second Death.

While blessings will be showered upon those who accept the Lord's terms, others will need assistance. Those having God's Spirit of Love will be glad to apply the eye-salve of Truth to the spiritually blind, glad to unstop deaf ears and to help the sin-sick back into harmony with God—helping them to cover their nakedness with the merit of Christ.

The prison referred to in the parable is undoubtedly the great prison-house of death, into which approximately twenty thousand millions of individuals already have gone. During the Millennium the awakening from the dead will, we believe, come about by Divine Power, in answer to prayer. Thus the race will come forth in reverse order to that in which they entered the tomb.

SILLO CUTS CORN WASTE

West Michigan Machine Farmer, Saves Food for His Cattle.

Common Grains Also Make Good Ensilage for Sheep and Horses—Advised for Dairies.

Fast reaching the leadership of all the states in fruit production, rivaling the New York farmer in potato yield and competing with the richest blue grass regions in the scope of its hay crop, Western Michigan is still an ally of the corn belt and its outlook for stock raising is brighter to-day than at any period prior to the outbreak of the present European war. From 75 to 125 bushels of corn per acre is not an unknown yield in this part of the country and in raising stock 10 per cent. on a land value of $175 per acre is not unattainable where intelligence and thrift are applied to the day's work with the hand.

Within the last generation thousands of farmers have been educated to the importance of saving the cornstalk and making use of it as fodder for the stock. It took many generations to discover that from 30 to 40 per cent. of the nutritive value of the corn crop was contained in the leaves, husks and stalks. It may take several generations yet before it is universally known how important to the maintenance of a productive farm it is to turn the raw material raised into such manufactured products as hogs, sheep, cattle and horses, receiving therefor not only great income from the land, but profiting twofold by returning the fertilizing elements to the soil. The question of perpetuating the producing power of the soil has thus a twofold angle. It interests many thousands of metropolitans who have witnessed the price of their pork chops rise from eight to twenty-five cents per pound and many thousands of agriculturists who are equally interested in seeing the producing cost of said pork chops reduced from eighteen to six cents a pound.

And it all rests with the farmer and the farmer's system of political economy. Either he may waste his profits by wasting a part of his crop or he can increase his profits by using it all.

In either case he must be a machine farmer.

From being the most laborious crop with which the farmer had to deal, raising corn has been turned into one of the easiest. Corn planters, riding cultivators, corn harvesters, shellers, pickers, silos and ensilage cutters are universally used for robbing corn raising of most of its terrors and for increasing, if not the production per acre, at least the income per acre.

The ensilage cutter itself is an important factor in the conservation of the stalk, in that without its use there would be no way of filling the silo, hence, the stalks could not be kept airtight and sweet. It is this natural green condition which makes the cornstalk in the winter time so decidedly palatable to the cattle. Even though feeding animals be turned into a field in the fall, a large part of the thirty or forty per cent. of the food value in the crop is wasted because of their refusing to eat the fibrous woody parts. This method of feeding is also unsatisfactory because of the difficulty experienced with the uneaten stalks when preparing the field for the next crop, as they are hard to plow or disk under. When the stalks are cut and fed dry there is not only waste but a loss of food value.

Countless experiments at the various state and college stations have proved that ensilage is an ideal food when balanced with the proper concentrate. There was a time when the principal use of ensilage was confined to dairy farmers. This was probably due to the fact that the dairyman made more systematic efforts to understand food values than the general farmer or beef raiser. Usually if he did not raise enough corn himself he had to go into the market to buy and was impressed more vividly with the narrow margin between his investment and his returns. Of late years, however, large beef raisers and general farmers have felt the need of a more economical ration and have turned to ensilage as their salvation.

That they are wise in their economic reasoning is shown by the research work carried on by J. C. Butler of the production department of a large manufacturing of ensilage cutters. Mr. Butler says: "Up to a short time ago beef feeders believed that ensilage was too succulent a ration and that cattle fed much of it would not harden and consequently would be rejected by the packers. This was proved to be a false supposition and we now know that the best beef can be produced and the best prices secured by feeding ensilage."

"Ensilage has a beneficial effect in causing cattle to shed their winter coats early and when it is fed there will be a similar consumption of grain with the same results obtained."

"The characteristics of ensilage make it pre-eminently a feed for dairy cattle. It is palatable, succulent, bulky, beneficial to the digestive tract and very economical. In fact, most farmers in the dairy business realize that to secure the best results they must feed it, as ensilage-fed herds do not fall off in milk flow during summer droughts or through long winter months and produce from eleven to thirteen per cent. more milk than cows fed dry fodder from the same acreage."

"Contrary to the opinion formerly held the milk from ensilage-fed cows is not inferior in flavor or odor to the milk from cows dry fed. Condensed milk companies that formerly did not favor milk from silage-fed cows are now advising their patrons to put up silos."

"Much discussion has arisen concerning the feeding of ensilage to horses. At the outset a good quality of silage—absolutely free from mold—is required. Some farmers have fed silage to brood mares and horses at rest during the winter with good results. On the other hand, some have lost horses on account of the mold which ensilage sometimes contains. If fed to horses of this kind five or ten pounds per day, with grain and other roughage, is all that should be used. The Pennsylvania experiment station fed ensilage to fattening geldings with quite satisfactory results, but it is hardly to be expected that ensilage would prove sufficient for horses at heavy work."

"Sheep are natural grazers and suffer most quickly from being changed from rich pastures to dry feed. They sometimes are so checked in growth that it takes weeks to overcome it when put into the barn."

"Ensilage used alone forms a nearly perfect balanced ration for sheep and is the cheapest and at the same time the most effective feed that can be used."

"Maize, sorghum, clover, alfalfa, soy beans, cowpeas, oats, rye, kallar corn and milo maize are the crops most generally used for making ensilage. Maize is the king of all silage crops, as it not only returns greater yields per acre but contains more essential elements which go to make up a satisfactory ration. The yields per acre cover a wide variation, but a conservative estimate would be from six to twelve tons, depending upon the variety grown, the productiveness of the soil and the stand."

Because ensilage cutters are to be used a year after year—although, of course, their annual season is short great care should be taken in selecting those which there is a positive assurance will stand up under the work. No farmer should purchase a machine with which he may in the near future be dissatisfied. This not only is a source of expense to him but of endless annoyance. It is essential that he select a reliable machine backed by a business organization of good standing that will take a reasonable amount of interest in their product after the sale is made.—Douglas Malcolm in the Grand Rapids Evening News.

Big Time Among I. O. O. F.

Charlevoix Odd Fellows are planning for a big time Saturday evening. An encampment will be organized and it is expected to be opened with a membership of from 60 to 70. A telegram from Patriarch Richard Lindsay states that he will be unable to attend on account of an accident in which he received a broken ankle. All members are requested to make a special effort to be present.

A Correction.

In the report of the Democratic county convention published in these columns last week an error was made in the names of the delegates to the state convention from Charlevoix. The article gave the names of Dr. J. A. Auld and W. H. Miller, which should have read Alonzo Powers and F. M. Harris. The mistake was due to the Courier being misinformed as to the names of the delegates.

THEATRICAL

"Leah Kleschna."

Judge R. B. Lindsey, the famous justice and criminologist, declares that human nature is the same in every breast and that if the right appeal is made to people who go astray there is always a chance to lead them "into the light."

This humane theory is advocated in the famous play "Leah Kleschna," the drama of a woman's redemption. "Leah Kleschna" ascends far above the plane of the drama that merely interests and thrills. Its directness, simplicity and power are irresistible. Its moral is powerful and touches a responsive and sympathetic chord in the heart of all humanity.

Dr. George W. Crouter, a Citizen for Forty-Three Years, Dies of His Home on September 19th.

Dr. George W. Crouter died at his home in this city Saturday afternoon at five o'clock from chronic Bright's disease.

Mr. Crouter had been in ill health for several years and at one time during the spring was very low, but he recuperated and during the summer was able to be about and walked down town. A couple of weeks since he was again taken down and from that time lost strength rapidly, the end coming peacefully, but suddenly, at the hour stated. For several years he had given up all business cares and spent the last two winters in the west and in Florida, hoping to regain his old-time vigor, but the efforts of physicians and the most careful nursing of his devoted wife were in vain and at last he recognized that his days were numbered and, arranging his business affairs, awaited the end with a mind reconciled to the inevitable.

Mr. Crouter was born in Halderman, Ontario, January 8, 1851. He came to Charlevoix in 1871 and soon engaged in the drug business, being a physician and dentist as well as a pharmacist. He was a most thorough business man and prospered from the first. In 1884 he was made manager of the Bell Telephone Company in this city and held this position until his resignation in 1912, at which time he was the second oldest manager in point of service in the state. He was indefatigable in his efforts to keep his exchange at the highest possible point of perfection and for many years Charlevoix had more phones to population than any town in the country and a service so satisfactory that all efforts of rival companies to gain a foothold were of no avail. He continued the drug business for about twenty-three years, when he disposed of it and devoted his time to the telephone business, the handling of ties, poles and timber and his real estate interests. With far seeing eye he recognized the future possibilities of the resort interests on the north side and after a long battle in the courts to quiet the title obtained undisputed ownership of a fine tract along the shore of Lake Michigan, which now embraces the most valuable property for summer residence purposes in the city and the platting and disposal of which has been his chief enterprise for several years.

He was always liberal in the aid of public improvements and his name appeared on every subscription paper circulated in a worthy cause. For many years he was a member of the Board of Education, the only public office he would accept. He was a Democrat in politics and served as chairman of the county committee for many years and was well known throughout the state in Democratic circles, though he sought no office at the hands of his party.

He was a Past Grand Master of the Odd Fellows and was buried by the fraternity of which he had once been the chief executive in the state with the rites of the mystic links.

Dr. Crouter was married to the wife who survives him March 12, 1891. He leaves one son, George Auld Crouter. In addition to the wife and son of his immediate family there is one sister, Mrs. Sanderson, wife of Rev. G. Sanderson, living at Vanderbilt, and three brothers—John, residing in Flint; Stephen Franklin, living at Baker City, Oregon; and David Wellington, who lives in Idaho.

The funeral services were held at the large cottage on Michigan avenue Monday afternoon at 2:30, Rev. Quinton Walker officiating, with the ritualistic services by the Odd Fellows following. Interment at Brookside. Among those from out of the city attending the services were Rev. and Mrs. G. Sanderson of Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Borr of Central Lake, Mrs. W. A. Hawker of Grand Rapids, Mrs. Clara Tracy of Petoskey, Miss Edith Smith of East Jordan.

The family have lost a good husband and father; the city one of its most energetic and pushing citizens.

Theodore Erickson Is Automobile Accident Victim Smashes Up His Car.

Last Thursday while Theodore Erickson was in Petoskey with a party of people attending the fair he met with an accident which smashed up his car to a considerable extent.

Erickson was driving west on Mitchell street and when about to make the turn at Liberty street met another car approaching the turn, which was on the right hand side of the road. The car had not time to regain the proper side of the street before making the turn and Erickson was compelled to take the wrong turn and ran into a telephone pole, smashing the side of the car and breaking the windshield. The other driver swung his machine across the curb into the sidewalk.

No one was hurt, but all were badly frightened and shaken up.

I. O. O. F. HAS BIG MEETING

Grand Lodge Officers Institute New Encampment.

Saturday Was Banner Day for Local Odd Fellows—
Many Outsiders Were Present.

Last Saturday night the local I. O. O. F. lodge was the host at a magnificent banquet given in honor of the institution of Charlevoix encampment. Grand Scribe Penfield of Vicksburg, Michigan, was the presiding officer and instituted the new encampment in the afternoon. In the evening the work was conferred by Boyne City and Petoskey members jointly, with seventy charter members present. The new addition to the lodge will be known as Charlevoix Encampment No. 19.

In attendance at the ceremonies were a large delegation from Boyne City, Petoskey, Horton Bay and five from Cadillac and one from Saginaw. With the visitors present and the local members the number gathered around the banquet table aggregated one hundred, every one of whom enjoyed the chicken and fish supper, a feature always a top-notch among the local Odd Fellows.

The local Odd Fellows recently succeeded from the Boyne City encampment, of which they had been members, and the home organization will undoubtedly be a boon to the city as well as to this popular society.

The following officers were elected and installed:

Chief Patriarch—A. A. Hanshaw.
High Priest—A. L. Fitch.
Senior Warden—Wm. Higman.
Junior Warden—E. F. Vought.
Scribe—A. J. Brown.
Financial Scribe—Floyd S. Bettes.
Treasurer—F. E. Wood.
Inside Sentinel—Carl E. Shearer.
Outside Sentinel—R. C. Korth.
Guide—Alexander Shearer.
1st Watch—A. B. Thompson.
2nd Watch—Roy Ripley.
3rd Watch—Homer Davis.
4th Watch—F. A. Butler.

During the evening Grand Warden F. W. Mayne introduced the speakers of the occasion. Grand Scribe Penfield addressed the lodge and was an interesting talker. Other visitors gave short but valuable talks.

The local encampment will meet on the first and third Mondays of each month and much enthusiasm is being manifested by the members.

BRYAN TO SPEAK

At Boys' Conference to be Held at Ann Arbor
November 27 to 29.

Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan will address the delegates to the Boys' Conference to be held at Ann Arbor November 27 to 29 if the efforts of J. A. Van Dis, State Boys' Work Secretary of the Michigan Young Men's Christian Association, prove successful and the signatures of 5,000 Michigan boys hold any value for the peerless leader.

Among other speakers will be Fred B. Smith, the noted evangelist and leader of the Men and Religious Forward Movement; and E. M. Robinson, secretary for boys' work for the International Y. M. C. A.

A feature in promoting the 1914 conference is to be the exhibition throughout the state of the special motion picture films made at Saginaw last year, when the boys paraded through the streets of the city in a column several blocks long.

The Get-Together Song

The following song, copyrighted by St. W. Charles of St. Louis, Missouri, has been adopted by the Republican committee of that state as the 1914 campaign song.

(Melody: "Marching Through Georgia.")

Lincoln for his country's union led and won the fight,
And his spirit is at work his party to unite,
Guiding it to lasting friendship, justice, truth and right,
While we are getting to-gether.

CHORUS.

Hurrah! hurrah! we bring prosperity!
Hurrah! hurrah! we march to victory!
So we sing the chorus, which resounds from sea to sea,
While we are getting to-gether.

Free trade and too many laws bring on hard times galore,
Chance for work is growing less and still the prices soar;
Confidence and hopeful courage we again restore,
While we are getting to-gether.

CHORUS.

Democrats crushed industries from Dixieland to Maine,
But united we defeat them in the next campaign;
Efforts made to keep us apart will fail and be in vain,
While we are getting to-gether.

CHORUS.

Countless voices rise and ring: With free trade we go wrong!
Fair protection makes the country prosperous and strong!
Far and near the shouts go up, we hear them roll along,
While we are getting to-gether.

CHORUS.

Home made goods for home consumption under freedom's sky!
Good old times for one and all where freemen's banners fly!
From the heart and from the soul we to the shouts reply,
While we are getting to-gether.

CHORUS.

THE ONE WAY TO ADVERTISE

Why Definiteness is One of the Main Features of the Business.

Give Same Plain Facts About Articles as You Would to Customers, Over Counter.

Here and there one finds a merchant who says he has tried advertising but never made it pay. The chances are ten to one that he simply needs to study definiteness.

The principle of the specific fact and the specific instance affect all writing and speaking. They make one man's advertising a partial failure, while another's is a money getter.

If one man visits a strange city he comes back talking something like this: "It was fine, grand, splendid." His talk evaporates into vague, general phrases. The people who hear him talk know no more about that city than before. He has few listeners, whatever his subject of conversation may be.

Another man remarks about the same town that it is full of buildings twenty stories high, that the streets were so crowded he had to wait ten minutes at one crosswalk to get over and that the people were always in a hurry and the street car conductors always said "Step lively."

After such a man has talked a few moments you get some idea about the place he describes. You see it with your own eyes.

Every man who has ever made a success as a newspaper writer has learned that you must give personal incidents and actual happenings to make any kind of news article interesting. If the reader can't see the thing with his own eyes the copy won't sell.

Just the same in advertising. If you merely say "Best stock in town" the reader may or may not believe you. Try picking out the best values in your store, give a few details about them so the purchaser can get some idea what they are, then name the price. The reader then sees the bargain with his own eyes, is interested, and feels a desire to buy.

That is all there is to good advertising. It does not require wit, nor literary or technical skill. Just "come down to brass tacks." Give the plain facts about an article as you would talk to a buyer over the counter. Try it and see!

CHILDREN MUST ATTEND SCHOOL

Or Parents of Delinquents Will Be Made To Answer.

Some of the School Laws and Provisions That Will Be Enforced By Truant Officer.

County Truant Officer Bashaw declares that every boy and girl of school age must regularly attend class, and if the youngsters are seen off the streets during school hours their parents will be required to answer. There are some exemptions in the school laws, but there are also many requirements. The provisions of the law which will be enforced are as follows:

The truancy law requires all children from the time they are seven years old until they become sixteen years old to be in regular and consecutive attendance at the public schools unless exempt as provided by statute.

2. Six exemptions to compulsory attendance are made:

(a) Any child who is being taught in a private or parochial school in the branches usually taught in the public schools, or who upon completion of the work in said school shall present evidence to the commissioner of schools or superintendent of schools that he has completed sufficient work to entitle him to an eighth grade diploma.

(b) Any child who has received an eighth grade diploma from the public schools.

(c) Any child physically unable to attend school. The truant officer must investigate such cases and he may employ a competent physician to determine the facts and in such cases the county or district would bear the expense.

(d) Children over fourteen years of age whose services are essential to the support of their parents may be excused by the county commissioner or city superintendent on recommendation of the board of education.

(e) Children under nine years of age who do not reside within two and a half miles of school.

(f) Any child twelve to fourteen years of age while in attendance at confirmation classes conducted for a period of not to exceed five months in either of said years.

(g) The law was amended in 1913 as follows: Any child claiming exemption from attending school under subdivisions (a) or (b) shall secure such permit as may be required under the statutes of Michigan covering the employment of minors and shall be regularly employed at some lawful work if physically able to do so.

GOOD ROADS BOOSTER

VanPelt of Chicago Becoming Identified With Men of This Class.

The following article taken from "Hide and Leather," a trade paper, speaks very highly of Mr. VanPelt's ability in hustling along other lines than that which he is engaged in:

George H. VanPelt, late, dies and patterns, Chicago, has recently come out as an advocate of better roads in and around Charlevoix, Michigan, where he has resided for the past thirty years. According to a late issue of the Charlevoix Courier Mr. VanPelt has acquired a reputation for deep interest in the good roads movement in Charlevoix county, believing as he does that better country roads are bound to increase the prosperity of the community.

ALFRED LUSK FOUND DEAD

Fell from Train Near Traverse City While Stealing Ride to Charlevoix.

Body Found in Evening by Train Crew—Leg Cut Off and Otherwise Badly Bruised.

Alfred Lusk, son of George Lusk of this city, was found dead on the Pere Marquette tracks Thursday night about five miles from Traverse City. He was beating his way and from all appearances probably fell from the freight train upon which he was riding and received injuries from which he died shortly afterward. The body was removed to the morgue at Traverse City by the authorities, but no inquest was deemed necessary. The remains were identified by a letter in his pocket from his father.

Lusk and his brother, Edgar, went to Traverse City some three weeks ago, where they had obtained work at the J. C. Morgan plant. According to a statement made by Edgar, deceased left there Thursday in company with Harrison McCall of this city with the intention of making their way to Charlevoix. It is believed they took what is known as the stone freight from Traverse City about 8 o'clock Thursday night. The train crew on that run were entirely ignorant of the accident and, according to a statement made by McCall, he did not see Lusk after they left Traverse City and knew nothing of the accident until he was so informed at Charlevoix the next day.

The body was badly bruised and one leg cut off, but showed no evidence of being dragged any distance. The position of the body when found gave evidence that Lusk had tied to death from the loss of his leg.

Alfred Lusk was thirty-two years of age at the time of his death. The remains were brought to this city Friday afternoon by his father and funeral services were held from his home on West Huribut avenue Saturday forenoon at 10 o'clock; interment at Brookside cemetery. He was a member of the local lodge I. O. O. M. and leaves besides his father and mother a sister and two brothers.

10,000 PLURALITY

Received by Chase S. Osborn for Governor in the Recent Primary Election.

Complete figures on the recent primary elections at the state department for the canvassing board give for governor:

Chase S. Osborn, 53,408.
F. C. Martindale, 47,912.
A. J. Groesbeck, 43,137.
W. J. Linton, 30,433.
G. E. Ellis, 22,248.

For lieutenant governor on the Republican ticket the vote shows:

Dickinson, 60,140.
Heinemann, 59,907.
Curtis, 55,680.

The vote for governor on the Democrat and National Progressive tickets was considerably less than the totals of two years ago. W. N. Ferris got 31,220 and Pattengill got 6,998 votes.

Despite the opposite impression, this Republican primary vote for governor was the largest in history.

The vote for congressional nominees in the eleventh congressional district for each party was as follows:

Scott (R), 10,830.
McDonald (D), 1,178.
Baker (P), 443.

J. E. Bayless, Republican candidate for congressman, polled 8,947 votes.

CIRCUIT COURT PROCEEDINGS

Frank Biosat Acquitted After Six Hours Deliberation of Jury.

Jury Was Discharged Wednesday Night—Court
News of Last Day.

Last Wednesday the trial of Frank Biosatt on a charge of embezzlement was ended and Mr. Biosatt was acquitted after the jury had deliberated for about six hours. Mr. Biosatt's acquittal was the culmination of a bitterly fought legal battle. A. L. Fitch of this city and A. B. Nicholls, former prosecutor of this county, were the defendant's attorneys, and Dwight Fitch and J. M. Harris had charge of the prosecution.

Mr. Biosatt made numerous friends while living in this city and when the verdict was rendered in his favor considerable pleasure was manifested among his friends and acquaintances. The trial lasted ten days. This was the last jury case tried in the September term of court, the jury being discharged Wednesday night.

The cases of Edward Pratt and Condy Gallagher of Saint James for violating the liquor law resulted in the two men pleading guilty and they both received suspended sentences.

The Glazier case was continued over to the December term of court.

Hiram Portman plead guilty and was released on suspended sentence.

The case of the People vs. John Benton was disposed of when John plead guilty and was released on suspended sentence.

LEVI H. DECKER

Had Been a Resident of the State of Michigan
Over 64 Years.

Levi H. Decker died at his home south of Charlevoix September 15 at 4:45 a. m. at the age of 74 years and 22 days.

He was born August 21, 1840, in Wyoming county, New York state. At the age of 10 years he moved to Michigan and lived in Shiawassee county until the Civil War broke out, when he enlisted in 1863 in Company H, Tenth Michigan Cavalry.

He returned to Michigan in 1865, where he met Miss Bethilda E. Harding, to whom he was married September 23, 1866. To this union were born eight children, four boys and four girls, all of whom survive him. He will also be mourned by ten grandchildren and one great grandchild.

The direct cause of his death was cancer of the stomach. Funeral services were held from the home Thursday, September 17th, at 10 o'clock. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

DRYS MAP CAMPAIGN

Local Option Issue to be Fought in Twenty-four Counties Coming Year.

According to plans outlined recently by Grant M. Hudson, superintendent of the Michigan Anti-Saloon League, local option campaigns will be staged in twenty-four counties next spring where saloons and breweries are now doing business and in addition vigorous fights will be made to retain the dry counties where the wets take the offensive.

This counties now wet where local option will be made an issue next year are as follows: Ontonagon, Houghton, Iron, Keweenaw, Baraga, Marquette, Menominee, Delta, Alger, Schoolcraft, Lapeer, Mackinac, Chippewa, Kalamazoo, Berrien, Jackson, Mason, Manistee, Emmet, Grand Traverse, Crawford, Tuscola, Leelanau, Iosco, and Lapeer.

Although it was reported that the anti-saloon league would attempt a campaign for statewide prohibition in 1916, Superintendent Hudson says that the league has no definite plans along this line, but he says that a statewide campaign will not be attempted until the league is reasonably sure of success.

P. M. in Better Shape.

The Pere Marquette Railroad is now operating on a paying basis, it is said. While the earnings would hardly pay a dividend they are sufficient for the road's upkeep. This has increased the line's credit. Last month only 76 per cent of the earnings were needed for operating expenses, including depreciation figures. The earnings, it is figured, will increase $200,000 a year under the new freight rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

LUCILLE LOVE THE GIRL OF MYSTERY

BY THE
"MASTER PEN"

Copyright, 1914. All moving picture rights reserved by the Universal Film Mfg. Co., Inc., which is now exhibiting this production in leading theaters. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted.

SYNOPSIS

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, international spy, from General Love, whom Loubeque hates, in Manila. Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille nurses him in an attempt to recover the papers.

Lucille gets the papers, but the ship is wrecked. She is cast ashore on a Pacific island and is taken by a native chief to his hut to nurse his sick child.

The native child is restored to health, and the grateful natives idolize Lucille. Loubeque, also cast ashore, tries various plans to recover the papers, but in vain.

CHAPTER V. A Chief's Daughter.

ALL through the night the march continued. Lucille shuddered as, from the black fastnesses of the semijungle that hedged them in, the glow of yellow eyes gleamed.

Fire balls they might have been, so steady and silent were the animals who watched the procession, but the pat of stealthy feet, the crunch of broken twigs, an occasional growl or cry told her what they were.

It was well into the day when their party was met by a native coming from the opposite direction. Lucille was attracted by the rapid conversation he held with the chief, noting the perturbation which showed so strongly on the old man's face when he turned away and redoubled his pace. It was well nigh impossible for her to keep up now. Worn out by exposure and this tramp through the jungle there seemed times when she could not drag herself along, when the tired muscles linked and refused to work.

Then quite unexpectedly through a wall of vegetation the party emerged into a great clearing upon which the sun bent fiercely. A few old men squatted before the openings to the hundred or more huts that filled the open space set down here in the midst of the jungle. Many children played about dressed only in the garments of their birth.

From a hut many times the size of any other and set at the extreme end of the clearing facing down the double row as would an officer scan his files of men came a droning sound, the low pitched wailing of many women's voices, never varying in its dreary monotone. A terrible sound it was—sorrowful, dirgelike. Instinctively Lucille lifted her eyes to those of the chief, her finger lips brushing against his hair for a sympathetic nod.

A swift gleam crossed his stern face. At a few sharp words the party disbanded, disappearing in the huts. "Come with me," said the chief. And, although she did not understand the words, she followed his swift stride toward the great hut from which the sound came.

The interior of the hut was crowded with women, the atmosphere so close as to fairly drive her back toward the tiny door through which she had entered. And to the ears of the girl, dominating the dirgelike wail, came a simple note—the crying of a child.

Instinctively she brushed through the women, sleeping over the pallet of reeds where the patient lay. Even with the fascination which her illness caused, despite the haze of delirium in the widened eyes, the black splashes of fever in the cheeks, Lucille would have known the girl for the daughter of the old man.

By signs she made it clear to the old man that the hut must be cleared before anything could be done to assist his daughter. Gradually it dawned upon her that the crowding of the hut was a custom of his people, which required vast faith to go against. She watched him eagerly, her very heart crying out for the sick child, whose last chance for recovery was being stolen by this crowd of women using up all the oxygen in the room when it was the most necessary thing for her recovery.

The chief made his decision quickly. He overruled the women's protests and drove them from the hut, leaving the opening wide.

Lucille opened her mouth, having her throat with the intoxicating air that drove out the odors the congestion had left behind. Then she turned her attention to the child.

Day and night Lucille administered to the girl, now encouraged at a diminution of the fever, now downcast at discouraging symptoms. All she had to work with were the natural weapons which nature leaves to the hands of the sensible nurse. Where the patient had been fed meat, Lucille made a broth; where which doctors had stimulated a weakened heart and system, she soothed. And so much depended upon the little brown girl. If she were to die, Lucille knew she would have made her mark in the annals of medicine.

chief who called daily to watch his daughter for a few moments, then, without a word, would disappear. And friends meant so much to her now. It was such a task she had laid out for herself, the way was so stormy and beset with thorns. But she could not lose. She must get back to Manila and clear her sweetheart of the charge against him.

It was on the eighth day she was awakened from one of the naps she had accustomed herself to taking, by the girl's turning on her pallet and regarding her out of eyes that held the light of sanity in lieu of the delirium that had seemed so impossible to combat. Slowly, very slowly, under the abrupt relaxation of the strata under which she had been, Lucille's knees sank from under her and beside the bed of rushes she knelt, shivering with incoherent sobs, filled with a joy so great the tears refused to flow.

How long she knelt she did not know, was never to know. But merciful slumber came to her and she was awakened by the tender touch of a calloused hand upon her shoulder. Startled she sprang to her feet, then laughed at her alarm as she looked at the chief and saw from the expression upon his face that he knew his child was out of danger.

She turned to the patient, still sleeping. Yes, no one could fail to see that the crisis was reached and passed. "She is going to get well," said Lucille, and the chief smiled at her time. From outside came a sudden clash of sound, a drumming, drumming sound that diminished to almost an echo only to rise slowly, gradually into a perfect thunderous wave. There was something majestic, triumphantly about it which seemed to her to flue with the majestic tones of a huge organ.

Slowly the chief's right hand reached out, his head slowly bending in obeisance. Lucille wonderingly placed her fingers upon the forearm of the man and emerged into the open, her eyes rimmed in wonderment at the slight that greeted her.

Gorgeously caparisoned in scarlet and gold, a wonderful throne of the same colors upon his back, a bronzed native astride his head, knelt a milk white elephant almost at her feet. Before the huts stood the natives, their wide shields, held across the forearms of their right hands, while they drummed out the chorus she had observed before by slapping their spears against the tightly drawn surfaces. The old chief stood motionless beside the elephant, and she realized slowly that he meant her to take the seat.

She shook her head in negation. She was too utterly tired and worn out to do anything. Before she had time to regret her decision, the old man stepped toward her, unwinding a curiously shaped amulet from about his neck. Came a crowding forward of the natives from every direction, the men in the forefront, the women and children in the rear. Something in the silence that succeeded the drumming noise, in the sober faces of the orderly throng surrounding her, made her turn toward the chief rather expectantly.

Gravely as any king bestowing an order upon a loyal subject, the old man lifted the amulet by its two golden threads and dropped it about her neck, an amulet of a curious milky blue carved into the semblance of an elephant and glittering with tiny precious stones.

Lucille looked about, smiling at what she knew to be a sign of these people's belief in her. And then the smile died upon her lips, faded from her eyes and was succeeded by one of fear.

For behind the throng, arms folded, his saturnine face impassive, cold, determined, stood Hugo Loubeque, his eyes fastened undeviatingly upon her.

What followed the ceremonial attendant upon the presentation of the white elephant to Lucille was all a blur to her. She remembered being taken to some temple, the triumphant return in the chair upon the back of the sacred beast, but always before her eyes loomed the figure of Hugo Loubeque. This afternoon, when she had come back to the hut which the chief assigned to her, she felt certain relief at knowing the man was about.

Vaguely she had dreaded his coming before but always had she thought it inevitable that he would come upon her. She knew him too well to imagine he could have survived his ship's dra and still lose track of the papers for which he had fought so hard. And the diary with his life's story, his mapped out scheme of revenge; the picture of the woman he loved which he had kept so many years—No, she had always felt that the man was far from defeated even though the belt had been thrown away long since and the contents transferred to a bag she carried next her heart.

Times there were when she would have fled from the place in a sudden fit of hysteria induced by thinking of the urgency for the information in her possession being in Manila. Cooler thought always made her grapple with the mystery for hate and place herself in the hands of this superior power which had looked after her through such startling happenings.

If the international spy was at work—and at work she knew he assuredly was, now he had located her—why did he not strike? That was the furthest part of her stay in the village—the constant strain of waiting for the inevitable.

It was the fourth day that her attention was irresistibly drawn to a native whose facial traits differed so materially from those of any of the men she had seen about the village that she studied him more closely.

The man was seated, cross legged, upon a log just a little distance beyond the village. His eyes were narrow slits that emitted sharp slants of evil light when they fell upon her, a light that frightened her and made her turn hurriedly back toward her hut.

She had not more than twenty steps before an unseen menace cast its shadow upon her heart. Though she could hear nothing, she knew accurately that the man was following her at such a pace he was obviously doing so for a purpose.

Slowly, relentlessly, the pat pat of the native's feet came to her. She halted and whirled upon him. The slits of eyes met her own and she read there the light of an unconquerable purpose. Her lips opened but no words would come.

Cautiously, stealthily he advanced upon her. There was a deathlike coldness about him that reminded her of the one she knew to be his master. She could feel the glitter of his eyes could read the meaning in the terrible hands which were outstretched toward her.

There seemed nothing to do, no way out of his clutches. She tried to shriek, but felt the sounds strangling in her throat. Her fingers encountered the slender golden threads that wound the amulet about her neck. She ripped at them as though they had ensnared her fright. And then everything became more distinct, more standing. For with a little more of fright, the menacing figure dropped flat upon the ground, dropped before her. For a second she thought the man was dead, then her eyes widened with astonishment as slowly, with face turned always down, the man crawled in a wriggling motion suggestive of a snake, back, back, back, until his body was lost in the tangle of shrubbery where she had come across him first, only a swaying of the leaves there, an occasional crackling of twigs betraying the fact that such a one had ever existed.

Lucille stared straight ahead of her. The terror that had fallen upon her was too great for immediate relief. Again her fingers sought her throat, falling upon the amulet which the grateful chief had presented to her and immediately she realized what had saved her from the man.

Perhaps it was the shock from her encounter with the strange native that made her slumber fight, for the sound was very faint that awakened Lucille from the doze into which she finally had fallen. Like the rippling of a breeze through the leaves it was, and yet something ominous about it brought her bolt upright in bed, her every faculty alert.

Gradually she made out that it came from immediately over her head. The noise ceased abruptly. Startled at the suddenness of it, she looked at the spot from which the noise had come.

Now that the Democratic primaries in the south are over the Democratic congressmen are beginning to look forward to fall elections. They are finding little consolation. There are large chunks of gloom these days in the Democratic cloak room of the house of representatives, where Democrats sit around and tell one another the truth about the situation back home.

The autocratic domination of President Wilson in forcing through legislation he thought the country wanted, but which has proven highly unpopular with the people, has added to Democratic discouragement. The Underwood tariff has torn up business generally. The blow at American interests through the canal tolls legislation is another unpopular act. The proposal to apologize to Colombia and pay her $25,000,000 has not set well with the American people generally. The breaking of platform pledges by the disruption of the merit system by providing $4,000,000 to reward Democratic henchmen for political work is another thing that has set the people back home thinking.

The result of all this is heavy disaffection among the Democratic ranks.
Coupled with this is the terrific Bull Moose slump the country over. There has not been a primary, a bye-election or a registration that has not shown that the Bull Moose party has gone all to pieces. For instance, Ohio, which gave the head of the Progressive party ticket 229,327 votes two years ago, gave Garfield, the Progressive candidate for governor, only 8,167 in the primaries the other day. This is less than one-twenty-sixth of the vote cast two years ago.

The Democrats know very well the Progressives are going back to the Republican party. They also know disgruntled Democrats are going to vote where their votes will have the greatest force. That means they will vote the Republican ticket. So it is these facts that have thrown such a scare into the Democrats. It is a "condition," not a "theory," that confronts them.

The people generally know by the feel of things there is trouble ahead for the Democratic party. Democratic congressmen themselves have this "hunch," but what makes it worse is that they are now hearing from their constituents, who are writing letters in no uncertain terms. To make it still worse, the Democrats in congress have been doing a little figuring on what actually happened two years ago. They know how many Democrats were elected to congress wholly through Republicans who voted with the Bull Moose and also that many other Democrats were elected by dissatisfied Republicans who voted the straight Democratic ticket to make their protest more effective. But this year the shoe is on the other foot. Hence the gloom.

For instance, the present house of representatives is made up of 435 members. Of these, 289 are Democrats; 129 are Republicans; 15 are Progressives; 1 is an Independent, Mr. Kent of California. There is also Mr. Kindel of Colorado, who formally left the Democratic party a short time ago, and one vacancy. Mr. McDermott of Illinois, the Democrat whose resignation was the net result of the Democratic lobby investigation. If the Democratic party loses 72 members in the fall elections it will be ousted from power in the house of representatives. The Republican and Progressive party vote combined two years ago was greater than that of Democratic congressmen elected in 79 districts. In fourteen congressional districts Democratic congressmen were elected by majorities of less than a thousand votes.
It is these facts, together with the big swing of Progressives back to the Republican ranks and the widespread dissatisfaction over legislation enacted by the Democratic congress, that is causing the gloom that prevades the Democratic cloak room.

aeroplane flights daily will be held on Wednesday and Thursday. Three big bands will furnish music throughout the fair.

There will be mammoth exhibits of live stock and poultry, besides many domestic exhibits which promise to be the largest of any Northern Michigan fair. School Children's Day will be observed Wednesday, September 30th.
The greatest display of fireworks will be shown during the fair that was ever seen in Northern Michigan at one time.

ANIMAL HUSBANDRY

STOCK ON THE RANGE.

Menziesia a Poisonous Plant That May Kill Sheep and Cattle.
(Prepared by the United States department of agriculture.)

Stockmen in the northwest are being warned that the plant menziesia is poisonous and may kill sheep and cattle. Menziesia is a straggling, branching shrub which grows to be from three to seven feet in height. In this country it is found in the southern Alleghenies and in the mountains of Northern California, Wyoming, Oregon, Idaho and Washington. The Rocky mountain species, which is the

The Shorthorn breed of beef cattle has been a pioneer in cattle improvement. Shorthorns are the oldest, most widely distributed and best known of all our breeds of improved cattle. Superiority in size is one of their peculiar merits. It requires no prophetic vision to see this splendid breed possessing so many good qualities become more and more in demand on the farms of the middle west.

one known to be poisonous, usually occurs at altitudes of from 3,500 feet to 6,000 feet on moist northern slopes, in open woods and about the "balds."
In some places it grows abundantly, and on the other hand there are long stretchers in which no specimens at all are to be found.

Stock poisoned by menziesia exhibit symptoms much like those caused by a number of other plants. There is a noticeable frothing at the mouth and weakness which causes staggering in the gait and ends in more or less complete paralysis. There is usually pronounced nausea and sometimes difficulty in breathing. It is believed, however, that a considerable quantity of the plant must be eaten before its effects become dangerous.

Where there is abundance of other fodder sheep will not eat menziesia.
The trouble occurs when there is no other food readily available. Thus when sheep are driven rapidly along narrow trails—where the plant is most likely to abound—they are apt to seize upon it, and this is also true when bedding grounds are used repeatedly and the healthy forage in the neighborhood consequently exhausted.

The remedy is for horsemen to learn to recognize the plant. A further investigation into the subject is now being carried on, but the department has already published a preliminary pamphlet, "Menziesia—A New Stock Poisoning Plant of the Northwestern States," which contains a description and pictures of the plant. The thin leaves of the shrub are one to two inches long and one-half to one inch wide. The flowers grow from terminal buds, expanding with the leaves. They are bell shaped or cylindrical, about a quarter of an inch broad and pink to greenish white in color.

Parasites in Sheep.

Swellings under the jaws of sheep do not constitute a disease, but merely indicate anemia (bloodlessness) from the ravages of intestinal parasites or some other debilitating disease, says
Dr. A. S. Alexander. On general principles medicine to destroy worms should be administered. A tablespoonful of gasoline in new milk is appropriate and may be repeated two or three times at intervals of two days. This kills stomach worms or drives them out of the sheep. If tapeworms are present freshly powdered kumala in a two dram dose is best. It is administered after starving the sheep for eighteen hours or more. Generous feeding is indicated in all such cases, and the sheep should have new grass rather than old, thinned pastures.

Remedy For Worms in Pigs.

Turpentine is a popular remedy for worm infected pigs, being given in the slop for three successive mornings at the rate of one teaspoonful for every eighty pounds of body weight of pigs.
Sulphate of iron (copperas) is an effective remedy if given as follows:
Dissolve copperas in warm water and mix in the slop at the rate of one dram for each 100 pounds of body weight of hogs, and continue this for five successive mornings. Repeat as required.
Either copperas or turpentine may be given occasionally as a preventive in herds where worms have been prevalent. These drugs should not be given to pregnant sows.—Dr. A. S. Alexander

Cause of Hog Founder.

Overfeeding, especially of corn products, will founder a hog and make it walk stiff. Then the feeder attributes it to rheumatism, when it is a plain case of founder, and the feeder is to blame for the poor condition.

ATTENDANCE CONTEST

One Along New Lines to be Tried Out by the Knights of Pythias.

The members of Pine Lake Lodge, No. 122, Knights of Pythias, have inaugurated an attendance contest along new lines, which will be started this week.

Two committees of three were chosen by Chancellor Commander A. L. Fitch whose duties it will be to see that all members turn out regularly at all meeting nights. Sides will be chosen, and the members of the committee securing the largest attendance up to February will be awarded a fine gold K. of P. emblem. The individual members on each side who have the best record of attendance will also be awarded one of the same emblems.

Last Thursday night's session, which was the first held since June, was well attended. Sandwiches and coffee were served at the close of lodge and considerable enthusiasm was manifested toward making the coming season a record breaker.

BROKE INTO COTTAGE

Boys Who Committed Theft Apprehended and Taker Confess.

A few days ago a robbery was committed on Holy Island which caused the owner of the cottage broken into to offer a $50 reward for information leading to the apprehension of the culprits.

From the cottage goods consisting of fishing tackle and various other articles amounting to a considerable sum were stolen. Sheriff Novak immediately got busy upon the case and learned that a Boyne City young man knew something of the affair.

Upon questioning him he informed the authorities that two young men of this city had told him of the affair. They were placed under arrest and taken to Charlevoix, where they denied any knowledge of the robbery.

They were kept in custody for several days and Wednesday night they confessed. Novak came over with one of them Wednesday evening and was directed to the ball park, where the spoils were hidden.

The charge is grand larceny and a jail sentence will doubtless be meted out to the culprits.—Boys City Citizen.

Sherman Wilby and Peter Marchinkowski, both of Boyne City, were arraigned Monday and Tuesday before Justice Cooper and bound over to the December term of circuit court, where they will answer to the charge of grand larceny.

NOTHING DOING HERE

Charlevoix Out of the Race at the Start on Proposition for Ball Team.

The Boyne City Bee has a "bee" in her bonnet concerning a four-team baseball circuit which would include Boyne City, East Jordan, Charlevoix and Petoskey. Baseball in Charlevoix has never received any support; in fact it has been a hard proposition to even keep the high school ball team alive.

Undoubtedly the four-team proposition would furnish considerable amusement for the fans, but when it came to financial support there would be nothing doing at this end of the line. Below is published the proposition as suggested:

"While we are talking baseball why not form a little local circuit like they have down in Barry and Eaton counties and around Mount Pleasant? Why not Boyne City, East Jordan, Charlevoix and Petoskey in a four-club league playing one game a week in each city? You remember we used to have an awful lot of fun across the lake and far more used to go to the games when we played independent ball. A little hustling during the winter would see a good league formed, that would give us more real fun than the Michigan State ever thought of and at a reasonable cost. The Bee wants to hear what the sentiment is about the city on the subject."

Then, with a shriek of horror, her eyes followed the stealthy, graceful reptile that seemed to grow from out the very roof of the thatched hut, its body wavering longer and longer before her horror-stricken eyes, its feet head moving in all directions, two little threads continuously flickering from out its hideous mouth.

With a wild scream of terror she darted through the hut opening, leaving a sign of relief at feeling the warm, clean air of the out of doors upon her cheek after the fetid atmosphere which the snake intruder had seemed to bring with him.

There at the outskirts of the village she fought against her terror.

Fighting against herself, against everything feminine in her nature, she forced herself back to the hut. And then a great feeling of relief engulfed her, for the snake was gone. But the hut was in wild disorder. Everything inside it had been torn apart. Not an inch of its surface had not been covered carefully by the disruption. No snake had brought about this confusion.

Lucille smiled to herself. Hugo Loubeque was the man who had frightened her so awfully. But she still had the papers.

CHAPTER VI.

Loubeque Watches a Tiny Flame.

HUGO LOUBEQUE sat to the hut which his native had thrown up for him, his eyes filled with a somber light. Now and then they would shift toward the squatting, evil faced natives in the corner.

Loubeque's thoughts were upon the girl, Lucille, who had thwarted him so many times. He was only just beginning to realize that destiny was working in her behalf, protecting her from him, urging her on to the desperate chances she had already taken, giving her courage and confidence to go even further than she had already.

Was it possible that he could tell, could be beaten by this pretty slip of a girl, no more than out of her teens; he, who, judging nations to be no stronger than the weakest individual, had brought about the wreck of nations; he, who had worked through the civilized and uncivilized world to prepare himself for his great act of vengeance and always worked successfully, should finally meet the culmination blow against his enemy only to find this fragile Lucille more than counteracting his stoutest efforts?

"I shall regain the papers from her," he told himself. "For how?" At times in pondering the question he would grow so enraged that he thought of taking them from her by sheer force. But always there was her face, the face of her mother whom he had loved, still loved to memory, to rise up and deter him. No, she must be tricked into disclosure of the precious documents herself.

That she carried them upon her person he knew. The scheme he had worked out through the evil eyes of the natives had picked up in the jungle and frightened into superstitious awe and implicit obedience had shown him that much. The little snake working its slender length through the thatched roof of her hut had frightened her away a sufficiently long time for him to make such a search as permitted of making place for them.

His native had brought him word of the way Lucille had saved the chief's daughter from death and in consequence been presented with the sacred amulet of the country. He realized that the ignorant savages regarded her as something to the nature of a deity. They would permit no harm to befall her so long as she remained with them.

Night had long since fallen when he stirred from his motionless position, before the somber light was burned from his eyes by the blinding flash of steel. While no visible symbol he traced exultation, there was a stealthy sureness to his stride that showed he was about to work, that the time for reflection was past.

"Get up!" he told his savage follower. The native swiftly rose and waited his commands. Fear still lay heavily upon him because of his two failures, and he was willing to dare anything now, risk even the profanation of the sacred amulet, rather than face again the flame of this man's wrath, this man who had stumbled across upon the bench and who, though helpless, had kept at him farther than his blow pipe could carry and shivered the spear as he held it uplifted to his hand, advancing with murderous design upon the toon. A small glittering thing of metal was the weapon of this man, yet he had seen a giant lion drop dead when his master raised it and threw its barking voice of orange flame through it.

Swiftly Loubeque stole through the lush blackness of the jungle that hemmed them to until he came to a scarcely penetrable wall of creepers, awing like giant hemlocks between the trees, twisting and writhing about themselves to hopeless confusion, all deriving sustenance from the stunted trunks to which they clung. More like great ropes of corded thick were than anything else, their thick surface covered with fuzzy hairs. It was the creeper Loubeque had noticed the other evening when he wished to start the night's dre, twisting about a hard sharp pointed stick against the unyielding surface of the creeper till the fletlock started flame. Now he pointed to the wall of creepers, indicating how much he wished.

But half an hour sufficed to satisfy the spy, and, without more than a nod, he turned and moved swiftly back to the hut. There he superintended the splicing of the sections of creepers and hindlog together in such fashion they should make a rope fully 100 feet long. The last fragment of the material was used, and he stared at the great coil speculatively. At a curt word of command, "Go!" the native glided noiselessly from the hut, one end of the rope in his hand.

Foot by foot, a coil at a time, the pile of creeper before the lustrous hut unfolded itself, the while he prevented any knotting. The heap upon the hut floor had almost disappeared before the constant vibration ceased and he knew the savage had finished his part of the work. He was still smiling, firmly now, when the native returned, and he commanded him to fire the end that was within the hut. Then Hugo Loubeque stepped swiftly into the opening and strode along the line of creeper rope that would link some once livid monstrous serpent through the lush grass and shrubbery until he came within a few yards of Lucille's hut. He halted, screening himself from the chance observation of some prowling native by hiding in the shadow of a great tree that faced her alone.

From far away, back in the direction from which he had just come there in the blackness of the jungle light, a strange twinkling star seemed suddenly to twinkle upon the ground, fade for a moment, then dance swiftly forward toward him. At times the flame would appear to waver, to be extinguished, but always it would reappear again, having made brave progress during the time of its apparent extinction. Hugo Loubeque suddenly stirred to attention.

Noiseless as any cat despite his bulk he moved toward the girl's hut, seeing the end of the creeper and tossing it upon the thatched roof. Then once more he took up his position in the shadow of the adjacent tree. He waited, flexed in every nerve and sinew of his frame, for the result of his experiment. And always the flame crept closer, coming more swiftly now.

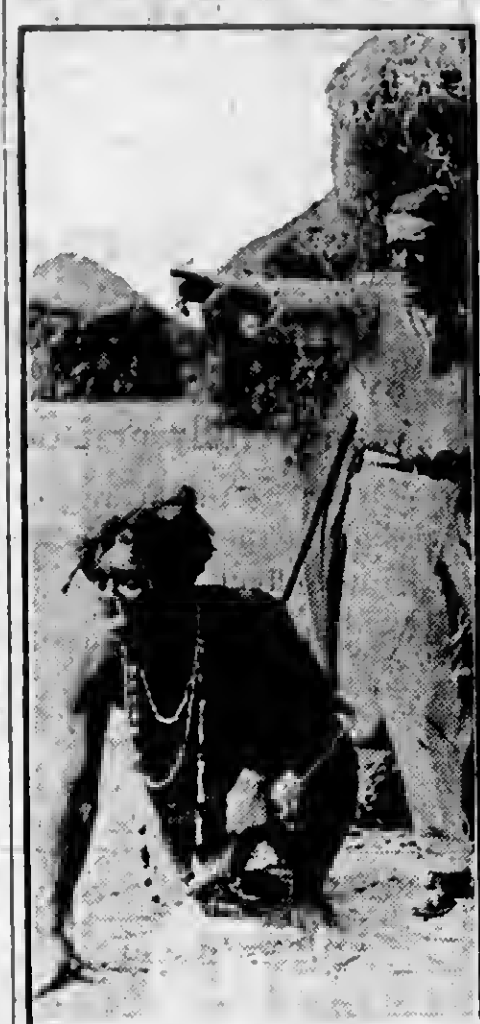

One arm thrown earnestly over his head, with slightly parted lips, Lucille slept upon her bed of rushes. She dreamed of her lover, Lieutenant Gibson, and of the happy time when she should clear him of the charge against him.

Some premonition of evil awakened her, caused her to start bolt upright upon the rushes, her every sense alert, her ears fairly pecked with the tenseness of her listening. Her first thought was for the little sack in which she carried the stolen papers and orders as well as the photograph of her mother and the diary which Hugo Loubeque had secreted in the old belt. Hastily she clutched the bag, slipping to the floor and listening.

This time a rustling, rushing sound came from directly above her. A leaping roof of yellowish flame glowed at her from the place where, the thatched roof had been. For the fraction of a second she could not stir before the awful menace. Then as a long tongue of flame reached out to ward the wall and embraced it, feeding her a second before another flame joined it and in seeming quarrel reached at the same spot, her brain dominated the situation.

With a wild shriek for assistance she darted toward the opening, feeling the hot breath of the flames high shriveling her as she left it behind. From every hut poured the outcries, stopping to stare about them for a second before darting toward the hut which had developed into a conflagration of flame, roaring menacingly.

Lucille was unconscious of everything for a moment save that she had escaped the flames. Then something caused her to return. From behind a great tree she saw the figure of a man moving swiftly toward her. He made no sound as he approached; neither could she see his face for the background of thick shadow behind him. But there was an unconsciousness of purpose about his very movement, about the long, gliding shadow of him, that told her instinctively who it was.

Simultaneously with the knowledge she became aware of the precious sack in her hand. She made as though to flee, but something horrible about the advancing man, deterred her, she hesitated. She felt herself yielding finally to the inevitable. There could be no possible thwarting of such a one as Hugo Loubeque, no chance for her, a frail, weak girl, to thwart this man.

With a little cry of despair she started to flee. He was almost upon her when a tall, half naked figure darted to her side. She reached out instinctively and clutched the friendly hand. And then she hugged the sack with the papers and diary to her bosom and her lips moved silently.

Hugo Loubeque had disappeared—disappeared so silently, as mysteriously, as unconsciously as he had appeared. But, thwarted, the man only seemed to exercise more cunning, more desperate remedies. The proofs of her sweetheart's lunacy had been close to being taken from her this time. She must not risk such a chance again. She must leave this place, must trust no longer to these people for protection, must trust herself no longer to the fate that seemed so constantly to look after her. She must hide herself away from the master eye of the spy.

Where? It made no difference. She must hide herself away. That was all.

All through the remainder of the night Lucille clung to the child she had nursed through her illness. And now the situation between the pair was reversed and she, the competent white woman, became the child while the little brown savage sat beside her steadily all through the night and made the tendering care.

She was one of the questions. There could be no sleep while the mighty spy dogged her steps, knew where she was. Morning came and passed, the sun striking obliquely down upon the village before she dared even stir outside the hut, the little daughter of the chief at her side, silent and shy, but always comforting by her presence.

Lucille felt a great desolation upon her, a sense of flitting a useless bait that day. A mighty wave of nostalgia seized her in its grip and she felt she could willingly give over everything to be back in Manila. But the thought of Loubeque made her pause. She would yet prove to him that under her fragility was a composition which had needed but the ordeal of love denied to turn it into steel, a steel against which even such a one as Hugo Loubeque might hurl himself in vain.

"But I must get away from here," she told herself. She determined to get away immediately. There was nothing to gain and everything to lose by remaining here. Primarily she wished to find some method of getting back to civilization. The papers meant nothing to any one save Loubeque here, and Loubeque knew where she was and his insatiable brain would find a method of gaining them. She must get away.

She was quite positive some difficulty would present itself in making so escape from the native friends who had fairly idolized her from the moment of the child's recovery. But they should be easily eluded.

CHAPTER VII.

A Chief Borrows From a Chief.

ON going into the little street she noticed the chief to her next conference with his daughter and an old native woman, whom Lucille had no recollection of seeing about the village before.

Had she not known this was but another servile tool of Hugo Loubeque's that future dangers she might have been saved! Coming closer, she knew that it was a stranger. Moreover, from the light upon the crease's wrinkled

BIBLE STUDY ON

"LET NO ONE TAKE THY CROWN."
Revelation 3:11—Sept. 27.
"I come quickly: hold fast that which thou hast, that no one take thy crown."—Revelation 3:11.

TODAY'S Study is a prophecy by Jesus Himself. Picturing the seven stages of His Church, the Master used these words to address out of them. There is, nevertheless, an appropriateness in the Lord's counsel at any time. So we owe, as well as those who were particularly addressed, may find instruction in our text.

It teaches, in harmony with the entire Bible, that there can be no remedy for the reign of Sin and Death except that which God has provided, to be applied at the Second Coming of our Redeemer, when He will set up His Kingdom. Meantime, God's Plan is working, and will ultimately bring a blessing to the whole world, the blessing which God has promised since Abraham's day—the blessing of all the families of the earth.

From the beginning God has foreseen how the six great days of the reign of Sin and Death could be wisely permitted, in view of the power to be exercised by Messiah's Kingdom, checked by Power Divine. Messiah will be quite concerned to cope with sin, sorrow and death, everything that now troubles humanity. The time appointed of the Father a thousand years, will be abundantly long. When the Church will have been selected from the world, as the Bride, the Lamb's Wife and joint-heir in the Kingdom, everything will be ready for the blessed work of bringing all the willing and obedient back to the image and likeness of the Creator, lost through Adam's sin and gained by Christ's death.

Encouragement to the Church.

Our text addresses, not the world, not the nominal Church, but the true Church. These, having turned from sin, having accepted Christ, having given their hearts to God, through Christ having been accepted of the Father and begotten of the Holy Spirit, are children of God; and, as the Apostle says, "If children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ" (Romans 8:17). A crown of glory is set apart for each son thus received of the Father, and the name of each is recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life.

So far as God is concerned, the matter is settled. But it still remains for the Church to fulfill their Covenant. Having presented their bodies a living sacrifice, they are to continue in that attitude—daily presenting their bodies ably, willing to endure, to suffer, to be anything and everything that God would be pleased to have them be. All who do this continue to grow in grace, knowledge and character—likeness to the Lord Jesus, and will thereby make their calling and election sure. But should any neglect this Covenant of Sacrifice, and through fear of death be subject to bondage either to sin or to sectarian errors, they would thereby fail to maintain their election and to make it sure. After a time of testing they would be relegated to a secondary place; they would no longer be counted of the loyal priesthood, even though they might still maintain their standing as Levites, servants of the Priests.

The thought of our text is: "Be of good courage. It will not be long until I will come to receive you to Myself. Let the thought of the Kingdom cheer, strengthen, comfort you, and enable you to do God's will faithfully, ably, courageously, loyally. Do not let slip from you the blessed relationship which I established for you when I made you acceptable on the basis of your Covenant to be dead with Me, to suffer with Me, to strive daily for the great prize of joint-heirship in My Kingdom."

"The crown is yours now, by virtue of the arrangement which I have made with you as your Advocate and of the Covenant of Sacrifice which you have made with Me. Do not allow your crown to pass to another; if any one of you is unfaithful, God will not permit him to have a share in the Kingdom, but will appoint another man instead of him."

The Number of the Elect.

This Scripture, with others, shows us definitely that the Church is to be composed of a fixed number—not one more or less.

This is illustrated in the Law pertaining to the Jewish high priest. The priest's head represented Jesus; his body, the Church. As the Apostle says, "Now are ye the Body of Christ, and members in particular" (1 Corinthians 12:27). According to the Mosaic Law no one could serve as high priest unless he had the full number of fingers, toes, etc.; and no one could serve who had a superfluous member (Leviticus 21:17-21). Thus the Lord indicated the completeness of the antitypical Priesthood, the Church.

Those who, after having been tested as to their loyalty, prove to be not sufficiently loyal to be of the Bride class, will constitute a Great Company, whose number no man knows.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

A SIMPLE MEAL.

DINNER MENU.
Spinach Purée.
Cucumber Salad.
Scalloped Tomatoes.
Veal Goulish.
Apple Custard.
Coffee.

A SUBSTANTIAL, yet inexpensive dinner is outlined above. Some suggestions for preparing it are given here.

A Navel Soup.

Spinach Purée.—Wash and boil until tender one pound of fresh spinach. Drain, chop fine and slimmer in a saucepan in which one tablespoonful of butter has been melted. Take from stove, add one-half teaspoonful of salt, a dash of nutmeg and one tablespoonful of grated cheese. Heat one cupful each of milk and water. When boiling add the spinach and two beaten eggs, simmer for four minutes, then place, uncovered, on the top shelf of a very hot oven for five minutes. Serve with croutons.

Scalloped Tomatoes.—Season about a pint of sliced tomatoes with a teaspoonful of salt, a scant teaspoonful of pepper and onion juice. Add a cupful of finely minced celery. Butter a baking dish. First put in half of the tomatoes, then a layer of crackers. Sprinkle with two heaping tablespoonfuls of grated cheese; then add the tomatoes, sprinkle the top with cracker crumbs and bits of butter and bake twenty minutes.

A French Method.

Veal Goulish.—Take about one and one-half pounds of lean fillet or leg of veal. Remove skin and shewers and cut into fairly thick slices or cubes of even size. Peel and slice thinly a fairly large onion and fry in a pan with an ounce of lard to a pale color. Now put in the meat, season with salt, pepper and paprika and allow to cook. Next dredge the meat with about a tablespoonful of flour, mix well and moisten with one-half a pint of good stock and a small glass of claret, cover the pan and allow to cook slowly for about an hour. Have ready two or three potatoes, washed, peeled and cut into cubes; add these when the meat is half done. About ten minutes before serving mix a little sour cream with the stew. Serve hot.

Apple Custard.—Take a half dozen apples, pare and grate those with the rind of one lemon. Add the yolks of three eggs, sweeten to taste and bake ten to fifteen minutes in a quick oven. When done spread over the top a meringue made by heating the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth, with a tablespoonful of powdered sugar and a teaspoonful of lemon extract. Put the custard in the oven to brown.

The Deciding Voice.

In a business men's club in a western town there sprang up two factions, one which criticized the steward because he did not provide the members with good meals and one which defended him hotly.

The dispute got fiercer and fiercer. Half the club wanted to fire the steward at once. The other half said he was efficient.

Then without warning the steward himself decided the momentous question.

One day at lunch time a member of the club asked the waiter:

"Where's the steward?"

"He isn't here," replied the waiter. "He said he was going down the street to get something good to eat."—Popular Magazine.

Alfred the Great of England has few equals in history, for he was in advance of his times in everything. Born in Wantage, in Berkshire, in 849, he drove the Danes out of the eastern part of England, so after ridding his country of the foreigner he occupied himself in the advancement of learning. After thirty years of wise rule Alfred died in 901 A. D.

DAILY IS SUSPENDED

Boyer City Daily Journal discontinued for an indefinite period.

The Boyne City Journal, a daily paper which has been published in that city for a number of years, has been discontinued as a daily for an indefinite period. The publishers attribute their inability to continue the daily edition to the hard times that Boyne City is now struggling with, owing to the closing of the principal mills of the city.

The daily has been consolidated with the weekly issue of the Citizen and until further notice both will be published twice a week.

Rev. John G. C. Irvine.

The Baptist pastor of this city will leave in a few days to assume the pastorate of Pentwater Baptist church. Mr. Irvine and his family came here about a year ago from Deckerville. We do not like to see our citizens moving away, especially when they have families of growing children, as our friend has. Since coming among us Rev. Mr. Irvine has identified himself with all that is best in the life of the community and he and his wife and family will be much missed in their enlarging circle of friends. We wish them Godspeed in their new home.

We understand farewell sermons will be preached in the Baptist church next Sunday, September 27th.

SUBMARINE PHOTOGRAPHY.

Device For Taking Motion Pictures of Fish in Their Element.

A submarine motion picture camera recently invented by an American photographer has been successfully employed in securing motion pictures of marine vegetation and fish in the harbor at Nassau, Bismarck Islands.

The apparatus consists of a flexible metallic tube twenty inches in diameter, which is composed of a series of joints, or sections, of overlapping hinges set in a vertical position, though the tube may be suspended at any particular angle. The pressure of the water bends the joints inward and causes the hinges to fall downward. Thus the weight is increased, the different sections are easily lowered, and the tube becomes automatically poised, even when the boat or barge above is being rocked by the action of the waves. A strong rubber covering renders the tube impervious to the water. This tube descends through the well hole of the boat or barge.

To complete the device there is a ball shaped terminal chamber at the lower end of the tube. In it ordinary atmospheric conditions are maintained, as the upper end of the tube is always open, and the operator experiences no unpleasant effects while working in it. Attached to the chamber there is a funnel in the shape of a truncated cone provided at the larger outer end with a glass port one and one-half inches thick. The length of this funnel is six feet. In order to give the correct focus for photographing through the port.

During ordinary daylight in the Nassau harbor artificial light is not necessary, and at night about nine mercury vapor lamps and reflectors are sufficient, the frame being lowered to the proper range. The operator (photographer) sits in the terminal or work chamber many hours at a time, taking motion pictures at his ease. The operator in charge was formerly an expert photographer in the United States government service.

The results of the pictures taken in Nassau harbor have been quite successful. The marine gardens, fish of many varieties, old rocks with divers descending among them, anchors at a depth of 100 feet and sharks and other monsters at their deadly work, all show up with great clearness. It is remarkable that the photographs reveal nothing above the surface of the water. The effect of a picture of a swimmer is weird if his head and a portion of his body are out of the water.

The face of one looking down through a water glass can, however, be photographed from below. It will prove of great interest to biologists and school children, as well as to the general public, to learn that the son of the inventor of the tube fought a shark twelve feet below the surface of the water. He fought single handed, with only a knife for his protection, and did neither helmet or suit of protective material. As this fight was successfully photographed from within the tube, valuable information will be secured on the methods of attacks by sharks.

It appears that no cinematograph worthy of the name has been taken by others at more than two or three feet below the surface of the water, so that this apparatus is unique for pictures have been taken with it at a depth of about thirty feet.

CHILDREN'S TEETH.

When They Should Appear and the Order in Which They Come.

The milk teeth (first teeth) are twenty in number. The time at which they appear is subject to considerable variations, even under normal conditions. The following table gives the order and average time of appearance of the different teeth:

Two lower central incisors, six to nine months.

Four upper incisors, eight to twelve months.

Two lower lateral incisors and four anterior molars, twelve to fifteen months.

Four canines, eighteen to twenty-four months.

Four posterior molars, twenty-four to thirty months.

At one year of age a child should have six teeth.

At one and one-half years it should have twelve teeth.

At two years it should have sixteen teeth.

At two and one-half years it should have twenty teeth.

It is not easy to explain where there are so often variations from the average. The order in which the teeth appear is more regular than the time of their appearance. Marked irregularities in order of the appearance of the teeth are the rule in idiotic children or those suffering from slighter mental effects.

Delayed dentition is generally caused by rickets. Many healthy children, however, frequently have no teeth appear until the tenth month of age.—Philadelphia Record.

BATHING IN JAPAN.

Natives Wash Themselves Clean Before Getting into the Tub.

Partial accounts of the luxury of a Japanese bath lead us to believe that we have something yet to learn about what is regarded by many in this country as a necessity and by more as a supererogation. In Japan the bath is not only a necessity, but a delightful recreation.

The Japanese have a way of their own of taking a bath. They have a system that in some respects resembles that enforced at swimming pools in this country. A person first wash the body thoroughly, and then you enter the tub, the water of which is heated by an individual system. There, if you are in a public bathhouse, you may smoke and doze and chat with your friends in a disipation that is said to be exceedingly refreshing. The water is kept hot, perhaps increases in heat, and when you leave the tub it is still regarded as fit for the next customer. In a private house the master and mistress may have their baths first, and the same water service for the lavigation and diversion of the servants. The ignorant foreigner, who goes into the Japanese tub for the purpose of cleansing his body and with soap spoils the water for further use, is not only guilty of a social error, but entails a hardship on the household, including the servants.—Rochester Democrat.

Recognized.

A Pennsylvania lawyer known throughout the state for his sharpness once met his match in a very unexpected quarter.

An old woman was being cross examined by him as to how the testator had looked when he made a remark to her about some relatives.

"I don't remember. He's been dead three years," she answered testily.

"Do you mean to tell me that your memory is so bad that you cannot go back three years?" demanded the attorney.

The witness was silent.

"Did he look anything like me?" the lawyer finally ventured.

"Seems to me he did have the same sort of vacant look," responded the old lady.—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

An Unconventional Duke.

Kew Parish church had among former worshippers the first Duke of Cambridge, a strong but unconventional churchman, who made audible comments while the service was in progress. To the exhortation, "Let us pray," he would reply, "By all means," and during a dry summer he added to the "Amen" after the prayer for rain, "But we shan't get it till the wind changes." On hearing the words, "For we brought nothing into the world, neither may we carry anything out," he would ejaculate, "True, true; too many calls upon us for that."—London Globe.

The Smile of God's Love.

As the ice upon the mountain, when the warm breath of summer's sun breathes upon it, melts and divides into drops, each of which reflects an image of the sun, so life, in the smile of God's love, divides itself into separate forms, each bearing in it and reflecting an image of God's love.—Longfellow.

The Noblest Arms.

We may talk what we please of lilacs and flow'rs rampant, and spread eagles, in fields d'or or d'argent, but if heraldry were guided by reason a plow in a field of arable would be the most noble and ancient arms.—Astram Cowley.

Pebble Peddling Pays.

Gathering thin pebbles on the coast near Havre, France, for shipment to foreign countries, particularly the United States, for use in the manufacture of porcelain and in grinding operations, has assumed important proportions in recent years. Approximately 20,000 tons are exported each year to the United States from Havre, according to the United States consul at that port. The business was cut down in 1913 by high ocean freights and by the higher wages demanded by the workers.—Engineering and Mining Journal.

Killing Insects With Electricity.

Electrical apparatus has been invented by M. Frigor, province of Santa Fe, Argentina, for killing insects which are harmful to the growth of trees and grain. A metallic net supported on a two wheeled vehicle is suspended over the ground, where the insects are to be killed, and 6,000 volt energy is allowed to discharge from it to the ground. The net and the earth are energized from one terminal of a step-up transformer on the vehicle, the other terminal being grounded.—Electrical World.

Proved His Gravity.

One evening I was seated upon the crowded roof garden of the Palace hotel in Shanghai safely within the international settlement, watching the three which were numerous in the Chinese city and listening to the battle and a dissertation by an authoritative looking fellow guest in the hotel during which he had just made the statement that he could take the arsenal with a corporal's guard of his fellow nationals when a shell screamed close over our heads and burst in the public garden along the bund. Others followed it. We all bolted for the elevators, but the armchair tactician was the last sprinter and bent us all to it.—Bartlett G. Young in World's Work.

Grange Column

Harmony Grange.

Harmony Grange, No. 145, met Saturday evening, September 19th, with a good attendance. The fair committee reported that our grange received the second premium at the county fair. This makes a total of $50 that we have received from that source since we organized five years ago. It was decided to hold a bee and picnic on the grange site Saturday, September 26.

The following were elected to attend the county convention to be held at Pine Lake grange hall on Tuesday, October 6: Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Coykendall, L. D. Willson and J. A. Newville. The alternates are: H. J. Wheeler, Mrs. J. A. Newville, Irving Newville and J. A. Newville.

H. L. Willson, H. J. Wheeler and W. J. Newville were appointed a committee to secure subscribers for a Farmer's Co-operative Association being formed in Boyne City.

The lecture hour was the most interesting in some time. In the two discussions—"The Kitchen the Pleasantest Room in the Farm Home" and "What is the Average Cost of Raising an Acre of Potatoes?" led by Mrs. E. J. Coykendall and O. D. Willson respectively—many good points were brought out. Each man present was asked to estimate the cost of raising an acre of potatoes. The estimates were from $25 to $50. We were also favored with a violin solo by our master, Miss Mildred Leifer.

The lecturer announced that there would be a program contest between the men and women at the next meeting. H. J. Wheeler and Mrs. H. L. Willson were appointed captains.

Fire Near Atwood.

Monday was the scene of a big fire at the farm of Henry Elzinga, three-fourths of a mile from the Atwood store, when the tool shed, stock stable and chicken coop burned to the ground. The fire started from sparks flying from the Eaton traction engine which was being used on the silo filler. About $200 worth of farm tools were destroyed. About one-third of the loss was covered by insurance.

Madill-McHugh.

Miss Alice Madill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Madill, and Donald T. McHugh were married Thursday morning, September 17th, at Saint Mary's church in this city. Rev. Father Rhode officiating.

The bride was attired in a traveling suit and wore a corsage bouquet of roses. Mrs. H. E. McHugh and Robert G. Madill, Jr., acted as bridesmaid and best man.

After the ceremony the bridal party returned to the Madill home, where a wedding breakfast was served, after which the bride and groom left for their home in Detroit, where Mr. McHugh holds a prominent position in the Ingersoll Construction Company.

Mrs. McHugh was formerly a Charlevoix girl, being a graduate of the Charlevoix high school in 1911. She was also a graduate of the Western State Normal College of Kalamazoo. Her many friends join with us in offering their congratulations to the happy couple.

Family Brawl.

Sunday night about eight o'clock a disturbance was created at the home of Wm. Thorpe on Upright avenue, when the father started to mix 'em up while in a rage. In the melee Thorpe received several severe blows at the hands of Albert Castle, who was defending Thorpe's daughter. Neighbors in the vicinity were aroused by the screams of the girl and quickly stopped the fight. No one was seriously injured by the breach of peace.

P. M.'s New Schedule.

The following new schedule of the Pere Marquette went into effect Monday morning. Following is the time of arrival and departure of trains:

Arrive—No. 11 at 9:50 a. m.; No. 1 at 4:27 p. m.

Depart—No. 6 at 7:25 a. m.; No. 8 at 2:20 p. m.

The above trains will run daily except Sunday.

FARMERS AND BUSINESS MEN

Had Banquet at Hotel Elston Last Wednesday Night.

EXHIBIT DATES OCTOBER 9-10

Farmers and Business Men Eat and Discuss Many Questions.

Live Stock, Fruits, Vegetables, Etc., Will be Exhibited Two Days Instead of One.

Wednesday evening of last week the business men of Charlevoix gave a banquet in honor of the farmers of this locality for the express purpose of "getting together" on the subject of a two-day fair exhibit instead of two one-day fair exhibits, as had been put on by the Retail Merchants Association the past few years.

About 40 gentlemen gathered around the banquet table and partook of the festivities. After the final course was served Charles See introduced Daniel S. Payton as toastmaster, who called upon the various banqueters to speak.

Mayor Nichols was by Rolfe Lewis. Both gentlemen spoke of their willingness to co-operate with the movement. A. A. Swinton of the Argo Milling Company spoke of the talk that the previous exhibits here had caused among the resorters and general public and also of the advertising value that the products had aroused throughout this district. Mr. Swinton's talk was based on his travels from one end of the state to the other. J. M. Ingalls briefly responded to the call of the toastmaster.

Wm. Johnson, our farmer friend from Ironton, was next called upon and after discoursing several of his comedy sayings, which are always a feature, took up the subject of "The Farmer and the Business Man." Mr. Johnson stated that the existing chasm between the farmer and the merchant was that the farmer was unaccustomed to the business man's pace of life. The farmer considered the simple and frank methods, while the merchants carried their dealings to a higher plane of existence, where business predominated over general good fellowship and unity of feeling. Mr. Johnson wanted to know why the institute in Ironton drew a larger attendance than the county round-ups that are held in town. Mr. Johnson conveyed his views emphatically and caused considerable thought and discussion on the points he brought up.

James Willis, master of the Barnard grange, was called upon and spoke of the good feeling that was existing among the farmers and the business men, but thought that conditions could be improved by the coming proposed fair if both farmer and business man came down to the same plane and worked in harmony. He also assured the body that he would do all in his power to push for the fair exhibit and Charlevoix county as a whole.

A. F. Bridge was introduced as the man who would take care of everyone's money. He responded to the call of the toastmaster by saying he would take care of the money, but he also wanted every farmer and business man to share in the use of it as far as legitimate. Mr. Bridge claimed that the farmers put the clitics to the front; that the exhibits we have had in the past had created an inspiration among farmers to raise better fruit and farm produce. He also stated that what was being exhibited and improved upon year after year was increasing the farm valuations.

Lisle Shanahan spoke to the assemblage from the viewpoint of the consumer, urging the co-operation of all farmers and business men. He also suggested that the farmer market his goods here at the highest possible price, that the merchants sell to the consumer just as cheap as he could, thereby aiding each and every one. Mr. Shanahan advocated home trade among the farmers and that the merchants meet outside prices as near as possible.

At this point Mr. Payton called upon the press to respond, which was complied with by Leon F. Brower, the Courier representative.

Mr. Paquette, a progressive farmer, was asked to speak and stated that he brought Jay Adams along to talk for him, and Mr. Adams was asked to take the floor. In his talk Mr. Adams suggested a street fair, where the farmer might bring in an exhibit of live stock and assist in the study of better stock and practical branches of stock and dairy farming.

Wm. Withers of Marion responded to the call of Mr. Payton and compared the Emmet county fair with the Charlevoix county fair, bringing forth the facts that Emmet county had more superior features and things of interest to the farmer. Charlevoix county's fair association, he stated, spent too much time and money on the free attractions instead of the exhibits which the farmer supplies and is the most interested in. Mr. Withers thinks that money placed on premiums would stimulate the closer co-operation of the farmers in bringing more things and better exhibits to the fairs held in Charlevoix.

Charles Danto was called upon and asserted his willingness to assist in the unity of farmers and business men to make this fair the biggest and best. Several other gentlemen offered suggestions on the live stock exhibit and after Mr. Chas. See stated the objects of the meeting and what was to be done at the exhibit the assemblage voted on the date and a committee was appointed from the farmers to meet with the committee of the merchants and the committee from the Committee of Twenty-One Saturday evening and make the final arrangements.

The dates set for the fair, which will last two days, were Friday and Saturday, October 9 and 10. The members of the farmers' committee appointed were Elmer Ingalls of Marion Center Grange, Earl Clark of Ironton Grange, James Willis of Barnard Grange and E. E. Stroud of Maple Grove Grange.

The outcome of the banquet was far ahead of the expectations of everyone present. More unity of expression and get-together spirit was manifested as the meeting progressed. It is the urgent wish of all concerned that the farmers bring in large and perfect displays of all varieties of vegetables and fruits.

The committees of the business men, farmers and Committee of Twenty-One met on Saturday evening and made the final arrangements for the exhibit which follows.

It was decided to have all fruits displayed judged by the score card system. The fruit will be on exhibit at Vought's garage on Antrim street. Wm. Johnson was appointed to act as marshal of the day. Arrangements were made to have a basket picnic for the farmers and their families at the Cohen store on Bridge street.

BAD FIRE AT EAST JORDAN

Russell House Scene of Fierce Blaze Wednesday Morning.

Was Again On Fire Thursday Morning—Over $12,000 Insurance Carried on Building.

As the Courier was going to press last Wednesday a report was sent in that the Russell House at East Jordan had burned during the night and was still burning. At that time we were unable to get the particulars. Later advices were to the effect that the fire started from the basement and at the time of discovery had gained great headway. The guests were forced to flee from the building owing to the intense smoke that was gathering. The roof, which was covered with sheet iron, made the fighting by the firemen very difficult. The roof and top floor of the building were totally destroyed, while the falling debris and water partially destroyed the lower floors. The office and dining room fixtures were saved, as well as the two back wings of the building.

The hotel is owned by Mrs. Prior, who, with her husband, was away at the time of the fire. The hotel was being cared for by Mrs. Prior's son, John Shier, and Miss Bertha Shier. Considerable money had been spent in improvements on the hotel by Mrs. Prior and this and the loss is well protected by insurance. Over $12,000 was carried as fire protection. It is reported that the hotel had been leased to a new management, who were to take possession the first of October.

Fire was discovered in the building again Thursday morning, necessitating a call for the firemen. Little damage was done by the last blaze. Later advices state that the hotel will be repaired at once and will soon be ready for business.

STEAM HEATING PLANT

Robert Bonthron is installing plant in Catholic School and Church.

The Catholic school and church are being rapidly equipped with an up-to-date steam heating plant. Robert Bonthron and his men are doing the work. Two boilers have been placed in the basement of the school building and are so arranged that both boilers can be used to heat the school or to heat the church at one time. If necessary, one boiler can heat the church while the other boiler can be used to heat the school at the same time.

The connection from the school to the church runs under ground and the pipes are covered and cemented. Six-inch pipe was used in laying the ground connections and will keep the steam pipes free from moisture and dirt. The work is excellently done and is a credit to all concerned. The heating trouble encountered in the past during the cold winters will now be entirely eliminated in both school and church.

Open to the Public.

The Courier, for some time past, has been running a Public Pulse column and has solicited the patronage of any one to compile articles of public interest giving all an opportunity to express opinions on certain affairs of special community interest. So far few people have contributed. All you need to do is write some article and hand it to us for publication. It will be gladly accepted. We want the public to discuss affairs through this means. It helps you as well as the paper.

EIGHT GOOD REASONS

Why Michigan People Should Use Michigan Flour Made from Michigan Wheat.

The following eight reasons why Michigan wheat makes the best flour bears the scrutiny of all housewives, and are being sent out all over the state by the Agricultural College.

1. It excels all other flours in flavor.
2. It excels all other flours in color (whiteness).
3. It excels all other flours for bread baking.
4. It excels all other flours for pastry baking.
5. It requires less shortening and sweetening than any other flour.
6. It fills every household requirement.
7. Michigan merchants should sell, and Michigan people should buy Michigan flour made from Michigan wheat for every reason that can be advanced from the standpoint of reciprocity.
8. Michigan flour made from Michigan wheat is all that is above claimed for it, owing to the fact that Michigan climatic conditions are most favorable for the growing of superior milling wheats.

A Big Production.

The first episode of "The Perils of Pauline," which will be shown at the Charlevoix Theatre every Saturday night, is admitted to be the greatest series of motion picture plays ever produced and shown to the public in any form.

The players, the author and the Pathe resources guarantee to you the quality of the production. The story is clean and wholesome, yet with plenty of thrills, adventures, narrow escapes, villainy and love scattered throughout. The grandest scenic effects, the most thrilling, almost unbelievable, spectacular incidents appear in every episode. People are going to see "The Perils of Pauline" because it is just what they often hoped they would be able to see some time. Come and see it. You, too, will be more than pleased.

525 ENROLLED IN SCHOOLS

Compiled List of Students Enrolled in the School System.

Superintendent Craig furnishes interesting figures—Enrollment is large for Charlevoix.

Superintendent H. A. Craig has completed the list of enrolled students in the entire school system and bears the inspection of every man and woman who has children attending any of the different departments of education. Last year the school was classed higher on the university list by Mr. Craig's untiring effort to recover lost ground. His success will undoubtedly be greater this year than last. Few cities the size of Charlevoix have as well an organized school system as this city. The prospects for a successful year in every department are particularly bright and encouraging.

The following is the list of the number of enrolled students in the lower grades of the public schools:

Washington School—Miss Bon teacher. Chart, 9; first grade, 11; second grade, 10. Total, 30. Miss Sophia Manson teacher. Third grade, 11; fourth grade, 10. Total, 21.

Lincoln School—Miss Bessie Hanshaw teacher. Chart, 23; first grade, 15. Total, 38. Miss Mary Pinucan teacher. Second grade, 7; third grade, 23. Total, 30.

Central School—Miss Jarvis teacher. Chart, 24; first grade, 10. Miss Audrey Correll teacher. Second grade, 21; third grade, 13. Miss Alida Whiting teacher training room. Third grade, 19; fifth grade, 6; chart, 6. Enid Todd teacher. Class of 32. Miss Madge Allen teacher. Class of 36.

BOYNE CITY WINS SATURDAY

First Gridiron Battle of Season Witnessed by Large Crowd.

CHARLEVOIX NEEDS PRACTICE

Many Good Plays by Both Sides—Tooley Was Star.

Durrance and Poole are Strong Players but Need Good Support—East Jordan Next Opponent.

Saturday afternoon the local high school met the Boyne City high school on the south side gridiron and were the victims of Boyne by the score of 7 to 0. Considering the bad wind which affected plays where the ball was passed through the air or kicked, the game was well played by both sides. Both teams were quite evenly matched. It is reported that Boyne had in their favor about two weeks more practice than the local team.

Durrance, Charlevoix's quarter, played a good game and Poole made things hum when he was brought into play. Many excellent plays and tackles were credited to these men. Boyne City has a well-coached team, and with Tooley, the all-star Northern Michigan player, that organization is well equipped with a hard line smasher.

The game was played in 15-minute quarters with three minutes rest between halves. The play was started at 3:10 with the following important plays:

Boyne kicked to Charlevoix, Durrance receiving the ball for a small gain. On the scrimmage Gregory made a ten-yard gain, followed by three fumbles in Charlevoix's plays. The forward pass failed. Boyne was penalized five yards for off-side play. Durrance lost on the end run, but recovered ground and made a slight gain by same play following. Durrance fumbled on a pass, the ball being recovered by Boyne City on the ten-yard line. Charlevoix held to four downs at the five-yard line from goal. Charlevoix's ball and made gain of five yards, only to fumble in next play and Boyne grabbed the ball. Charlevoix held the play for two downs at three-yard line. Then forced Boyne back to eight-yard line with the ball going to Charlevoix. In the next play Charlevoix lost ground on the end run and Durrance recovered the lost ground and made two-yard gain on his end run. By a poor pass from center Charlevoix lost ten yards. Charlevoix punted to Boyne and regained the ball on fumble by Boyne. Time was called in the next play.

The second quarter was called with the teams changing goals. Boyne made gain of five yards. Charlevoix held to fourth down and with Boyne one yard to gain. Boyne fumbled and Poole for Charlevoix got the ball, with Boyne losing two yards. At this point of the game Tooley made himself a star line-smasher. Charlevoix not being able to stop him going through. Durrance made a gain of ten yards on an end run. Gregory made a line smashing run for a large gain. By a repeated play and poor pass from center to quarter Charlevoix was the goat for a thirty yard loss. Boyne recovered the ball and Tooley smashed through the line for a touchdown. Aldread followed the play for a goal kick with one minute and a half to play. Time was soon called with the score at the end of the half 7 to 0. A ten-minute intermission was taken.

The second half was called at 4:00. Shapton was substituted in the place of Parsons by Charlevoix. Charlevoix kicked to Boyne with wind in Boyne's favor. At this play it was discovered that Boyne had kicked off ten yards closer to their own goal than they should. Charlevoix kicked from the proper place. This was not a fault of either side. Durrance made an end run for a thirty-yard gain at the close of the quarter. During the quarter many scrimmages were played by both sides and each team held each other from making gains that counted for advantage over the other.

MICHIGAN WOMAN'S STOMACH ILLS ENDED BY A WONDERFUL REMEDY

Mrs. Beamer of Flint Is Delivered from Headaches By Just a Few Doses.

Mrs. Guy A. Beamer of 1307 North street, Flint, Michigan, was for a long time a victim of stomach and digestive troubles. One of the serious effects was in bad headaches, which attacked her almost daily.

She took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy; then she wrote:

"I thank you very much for what your medicine has done for me. I never saw anything work such wonders as just the three bottles have. There was never a day in my life that I did not have my head tied up with a cloth and I have not had a headache since. I had been doctored by specialists, too, and received very little benefit."

Just such stories are told by thousands who have used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. It is known all over the United States. It clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings quick relief to sufferers with stomach ailments, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations; many are sure it has saved their lives.

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy—one dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleanser ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold by leading druggists everywhere.

LUCILLE & LOVE THE GIRL of MYSTERY

SYNOPSIS

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, international spy, from General Love, whom Loubeque hates. In Manila, Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille curses him in an attempt to recover the papers.

Lucille gets the papers, but the ship is wrecked. She is cast ashore on a Pacific island and is taken by a native chief to his hut to nurse his sick child.

The native child is restored to health, and the grateful natives idolize Lucille. Loubeque, also cast ashore, tries various plans to recover the papers, but in vain.

Loubeque, baffled, forges a message from a neighboring chief to lure Lucille away from her friends. She falls into a pitfall, losing the documents.

Loubeque's native aid steals the papers from his master, and Lucille takes them from the native after he is killed by a lion. She finds and follows an underground passage in the jungle.

CHAPTER VII.

A Chief Borrows From a Chief.

ON going into the little street she noticed the chief in ear post conference with his daughter and an old native woman whom Lucille had no recollection of seeing about the village before. Had she not known this was but another servant of Hugo Loubeque's what future dangers she might have been saved! Coming closer, she knew that it was a stranger. Moreover, from the light upon the crone's wrinkled countenance and the furious gesticulations she made toward her she felt that she was the object of controversy. And the daughter of the old chief seemed adding her pleas to those of the old woman with effect.

Lucille stood a little apart, watching the conference as it disintegrated. She had picked up enough of the language to make out an occasional word, but the gestures of the three had been unmistakable. She waited quietly while the trio approached her, feeling that in some way the problem that had been harassing her was to be answered without further worry on her part. She smiled at the chief's efforts to make her understand what he desired of her, smiled and shook her head as the withered old woman made an equally unsuccessful attempt. But the little girl took the situation in hand.

Without much difficulty Lucille made out from the chief that the old woman came from a chief greater than her father, who lived in a village not far distant; that the wonder of her curative ability had reached the white woman, and he earnestly prayed the white woman be loaned his own wife for a nurse, that she might be cured of an illness which seemed certain to be fatal.

Lucille saw from the glum expression on the old chief's face that, even though it might bring him into trouble with his neighbor chief, he was more than loath to part with her. She also saw that the child, with the remembrance of her own illness fresh upon her, had allowed her heart to go out to the wife in such sympathy that she had persuaded her father to permit the loaning.

Her heart gave a great throb of delight at this unexpected answer to her prayer. She had known there would be trouble getting away with the papers just as she had determined that she must leave. There was no possible chance of regaining civilization from here. There might be no chance in another place, but there was hope, and, while it was meager sustenance, anything was better than the strain of knowing impossibility. Anything appeared to her so long as it entailed a change, for change spelled renewed hope. Then, too, Hugo Loubeque would be temporarily at least thrown off the trail.

In an hour she had mounted the chief's own horse, her very soul rejoicing at the familiar feel of an easy creaker. Beside her rode the old woman, mumbling continually to herself as though she were keeping track of the devious turns in the wilderness of vegetation through which they way led.

Once Lucille was conscious of a vague feeling of mistrust as she looked back at the squat figure of the old woman smiling along stolidly as some heathen idol, only her ratlike eyes emitting flashes of fire from between the layers of wrinkled, brown, drooping lids.

Farther, faster she urged her horse as she saw a clear stretch of trail opening before her, her hand continually reaching up and feeling the precious burden about her neck. Then she looked back for her escort, when the ground seemed to grow soft, to slip up from under her mount's hoofs and send her hurtling down, down, down.

She knew not where nor why down into blackness, at which her mind clutched wildly, clutching nothing from the dark—down into a blackness that seemed stifling her until it reached up and mercifully compassed her consciousness.

Hugo Loubeque curtly dismissed the withered crone who banded him the sack containing the documents Lucille had worn about her neck. In his eyes glowed no light of triumph. First they had lighted with a strange relief, but now they seemed fastened upon a memory filled with vague regret as he visualized the girl, lying helpless at the bottom of the pit he had caused his native to dig across the trail.

Suddenly he sprang to his feet, once more the man of action. Pity this girl, daughter of the woman he loved, thought, but she was not the sort to be pitied while he made away with the papers for which she had come through so much already. Suddenly he tore open the bag, dumping the contents out before him and rummaging through them nervously. When he looked up the light of disappointment, almost fear, was upon his face.

The amulet, the sacred amulet which had served her so well, would continue to serve her so well as long as she continued in this land, was still in her possession. He had failed to tell the crone to steal that also. And the old woman had reported that she was merely stumped. The sacred amulet which would make her revered by his savage she chanced to meet was still here, while he, Hugo Loubeque, would not every hand against him.

He moved swiftly now, preparing for his long journey through the jungle, away from her zealous pursuit and toward possible relief, for so long as he remained here Lucille had every one for friend and assistant, while he had only those he might gain through fear.

Lucille stirred, opened her eyes in bewilderment, unable to piece together any connection between the black hole in which she found herself and the narrow trail through the jungle along which she had urged her horse. Gradually it all came back to her. Her hands sought her bosom, and, with a little groan of utter misery, she gave way to uncontrollable sobs.

The reaction did her good, worked wonders with her. In that spell of self pity father, home, sweetheart, everything, was forgotten before the horror of her own predicament. Finished with it, she gathered every faculty, mental and physical, and scrambled to her feet. Above her as she lifted her eyes she made out a streak of light, threaded between wisps of dense leafiness—the sun piercing home into the jungle. She moved forward, her hands before her, groping. Something soft and motionless and so still it caused her to shudder met the toe of her boot. She drew back in swift alarm, knowing it to be the body of the horse she had ridden, a great feeling of gratefulness at her own escape from a similar fate warning her through and through.

Mastering the innate repulsion within her, she stepped upon the corpse, her hands reaching up and finding the smooth edge of the hole that had been dug across the roadway to enter a tree, roots so stout they bore her weight. For a moment she waited, gathering her falling strength for the supreme effort. Then she sprang up, gathering her knees under her, relaxing slightly before pushing forward every ounce of her strength and drawing herself out of the warm surface of the road.

About her on every side the jungle breathed its deathly, terrible, horrible. Like some blind monster it seemed to spread its myriad tentacles in every direction, burning, eating, fastening upon the one who chanced to stray within it, sucking at one's very vitals. The chatter of monkeys and the shrieks of birds filled the air.

But no odds how bleak the prospect, how forlorn the hope, one always feels courage renewed when one has just glimpsed a greater danger and averted it. Lucille had known within the quarter hour the horror of blindness, and her heart leaped high with joy at being able to see these things, in this same jungle with her, in quite as bad a predicament, was Hugo Loubeque, and with Hugo Loubeque were the papers she had fought so hard to recover. She spoke aloud, her voice thrilling a note so foreign to this black solitude that even the animal life was silenced in amazement. "He shall not keep the papers long!" were her words.

The thought braced her as would a dose of cold water. To right, to left, before her and behind was naught but jungle. Which way should she turn to come across the international spy? She felt the amulet about her neck with nervous, plucking fingers, as though seeking to read the answer there. Safety lay behind, back along the trail to the village of the chief who had so reluctantly permitted her to answer the trumped up message from his neighbor. But she did not wish safety. She wanted the papers and civilization. In which direction to go she must leave to the power that had guided her steps so far, but she knew she must make quick choice.

As though her question was to be answered for her, she noticed the chatter of the monkeys suddenly changing, observed a wild alarm in their voices, and, looking up, saw a host, an army of them, huddled close together, then slipping swiftly in wild disorder from tree to tree.

Lucille felt a thrill of something more than uneasiness coming upon her as she started into their alarm. Swiftly she sprang back before the blazing balls of fire that were fastened upon her from the heavy wall of vines and creepers.

Again that crackling at twigs, this time in greater volume, and where before but one pair of wild eyes had stared at her there were now many eyes. She recollected the fires her savage friends had built of nights that the jungle beasts might not disturb them. But she had no means of lighting a fire. She was alone, with nothing to assist her save her own ingenuity. She retreated slowly, her hand upon her feet, holding her back even as low growls indicated that her retreat was observed and would probably be taken for a sign of fear.

At the sound the trees were shaken violently by another rush of the little tree men. It gave her an idea instantly. Even as the eyes grew more closely huddled, Lucille reached up and grasped the thick coils of creepers dangling from a giant trunked tree. Came a rush so silent and sure footed she could hear but the faint pat, pat of the leopard's feet, followed by a heavy clink of jaws. In actively she drew her feet up under her, and fear lending impetus to her movements, clambered swiftly up the vines until the welcome crutch of the tree supported her.

Higher and higher she climbed until the terrifying sight of the leopards encircling the tree was shut from her eyes by the heavy foliage beneath. Climbed until her muscles ached, climbed until even the crutching of twigs beneath failed to reach up to her.

Beneath her awaited the jungle. Above her flickered a myriad of stars. Like peepholes in some great theater curtains they were through which the master player might watch what was going on in his world. They thrilled Lucille with their familiarity. So long she had been here in this jungle she seemed to have forgotten the existence of stars, regarded them as old friends. These same stars that looked down upon her now were looking down upon Manila, upon her father, upon her sweetheart. These same stars were candles of truth that would not, could not, unblinking look upon such a disaster as threatened her being consummated.

And then her eyes were lifted, attracted in their review of the stars by the sight of a long, thin spiral of smoke rising and reaching up toward the stars in wispy fragility. It came from miles to the westward. But Lucille knew that smoke for fire and the fire to be that lighted by human hands.

CHAPTER VIII.

Loubeque Fights Down a Strange Emotion.

Loubeque could not have explained why he had tried, but he thought that Lucille still possessed the mystic amulet. He was the savage chief for saving his daughter's life and which had served in such good stead against his watchuntions worried him more than a little. True, his plot had succeeded, the pit his servant dug across the trail had swallowed her up and the old native crone had brought him the precious papers. But he was worried. He felt himself at times almost wishing to be rid of the qualms which had forbade his serving her with a death sentence. She had the mystic amulet still and, always plotting in advance those things he wished done, it bothered him not to know exactly how great the power of that amulet was.

Together with the uncertainty of his position, with realization of the intense loneliness, his inability to speak the language of any people he might chance to meet, the international spy fought his way through the jungle in more of a spirit of terror than he ever experienced before. Nights when he would build fires to fend off wild beasts that gathered in a circle and stared with their blazing eyes from out the blackness, he would find her face emerging from the flames.

"Is it possible that I love her as I loved her mother?" he asked himself. But he fought against the thought. Forcing his mind to manly desire to weary his body so at night his brain would succumb to the utter weariness that gripped him, Hugo Loubeque tried to fight away this change that was struggling to take place within himself. He noticed a growing silliness upon

The last quarter was called at 4:20.
Charlevoix lost ground on the third down by Boyne holding them within ten yards. Durrance kicked the ball up the field. Boyne carried the ball back until Durrance after a twenty yard sprint stopped the man with the ball.
In the succeeding plays the ball was in Boyne's possession and they made successive gains on Charlevoix. Poole was corked in the face and was able to carry on his part without trouble. After Charlevoix recovered the ball Poole made a big gain on an end run. Boyne then carried the ball back to the twenty yard line, where a scrimmage play was being made when the game was called.
Both teams played hard and no cleaner game has ever been played here than the one witnessed Saturday afternoon by a large crowd. The officers of the game were: Ewing, referee; umpire, Leo Powers; timekeepers, L. A. Butler of Boyne City and Pierce of Charlevoix; linesmen, Talcott of Boyne and Butler of Charlevoix.

The lineups of the teams were as follows:

Boyne City		Charlevoix
Sarasin	RE	Gennet
Flemming	RT	Weed
Martin	RG	Taylor
Dorrance	C	Mascho
Herron	LG	Dittleson
Leller	LT	Burns
Aldread	LE	Poole
Kuhns	Q	Durrance
Tooley	RI	Durrance
McLacey	LI	Parsons
		Shapton
Morton	FB	Gregory
Poson	Coach	Vogt
	Assistant	Maybee

The results of Saturday's game with Boyne City were not as satisfactory to Charlevoix rooters and coaches as was hoped. No coach can whip a team into shape so it is a variable adding machine until the required amount of preliminary training has been gone through with. Charlevoix began the game with the Boyne City aggregation after three nights of real signal practice.
Weak spots cropped out in a way that is not unusual with raw material in an opening game. The Charlevoix squad has no alibi to offer. They were beaten by one touch down. Four weeks of practice would show marked improvement in the local squad.

Coach Vogt and his assistant Mr.
Maybee saw many sieve-like places in the team's arrangement in the last week's encounter. At this early date it is impossible to give a definite lineup for the season. Mascho at center was in a difficult position, it was his first game. Gregory, who was pulled from the line this season played a fair example of ball at the full-back position. Charlevoix was weak in practically every phase of Saturday's game.
A week of good hard work will remedy the faults. The men were out bright and early Monday night full of ginger, ready to prepare for the East Jordan team Saturday. There is a saying "that defeat is sometimes the making of a team."

The schedule for the season is now nearing completion and will be as difficult a program as any Charlevoix team has entered upon. Cadillac will be played this year for the first time in years while athletic relations will again be opened with Traverse City at that city. The management has received letters from the Sox, Newberry and Alma. The schedule will be published in next week's issue.

A Family Affair

Pertaining to the Servant Question

By SADIE OLCOTT

Mr. Starkweather came home after business. His wife met him at the door, and by her lugubrious expression he knew that something had happened.
"What's the matter, sweetheart?"
"Annie has gone."
"That's too bad."
"The third servant I have had within two weeks."
"I suppose you'll have to try an other."
"I'll do no such thing. I'm going to board."
It was the husband's turn to look rueful. He detested boarding.
"Haven't you always said that your mother insisted on your learning domestic science?"
"She did."
"And that you rather like cooking?"
"It's the only thing I do easily."
"Well?"
"Well, it's very plain what you mean.
You suggest that I do the work myself."

This was received in silence.
"I'm surprised that you are willing to have your wife go into the kitchen and make a servant of herself. And how would I be able to take care of this big house? But, granting I could do it all, what would become of us socially? The doorbell rings. Mrs.
Brinkerhoff, who keeps ten servants, calls. I go to the door from the kitchen with a working apron on and my hands covered with dough. What do you think of that?"

"I think that it would remind Mrs.
Brinkerhoff of the days of her childhood. Her mother kept a small hotel and did the cooking for her guests.
The daughter was chambermaid."
"Well, if my husband is willing to make a cook and housemaid of his wife I am not willing to so demean myself."

"The servant question is yours, my dear. It is my part to provide the mon-

"TO MY HAPPY HOME."

ey for the house and your part to run it. One thing let me impress upon you I won't board. I was obliged to board before I was married. It was bad enough as a bachelor; it will be worse as a married man. Talk of respectability! Is it respectable for half a dozen families and a dozen bachelors and spinsters, to herd together under one roof? It seems to me if I were a woman, I should hold my head much higher dining in privacy even if I did have occasionally to go to the door to admit the wife of a multimillionaire whose wealth grew up like a mushroom in a single night."

"Your arguments are very plausible, but I'm going to board. This house can be easily rented, and the income from it alone will pay my board."

"You mean your board."
"And yours too," decidedly.
"Not at all. I'm not going to board.
I do not decide upon the expediency of that plan of living for any one but myself."

Mr. and Mrs. Starkweather had not yet bridged those years between the matrimonial honeymoon and working amicably in double harness. In other words, they had not yet learned that domestic differences must be settled or misery must ensue. Nor had they learned how dependent they were on each other. Quite often down in the bottom of their hearts each wished for a return to the freedom of single life.
They had now reached one of those crises which in the case of some couples are insuperable, cases in which a separation takes place and the pair are never again reconciled.

Mrs. Starkweather determined to board, and Mr. Starkweather determined to keep house. The wife engaged quarters for herself, and the husband, having rented his house, took a smaller one, removing such articles of his furniture to it as he required.
There was no quarrel between them, nor did they consider the subject of divorce. They remained together where they were, in Mr. Starkweather's new quarters in order

when the wife insisted on seeing that her husband wanted nothing to make him comfortable. A married star had attended to all arrangements, but Mrs. Starkweather would trust no one but herself to make the final dispositions.

Mr. Starkweather suggested, that they go there together Saturday afternoon and remain till Monday morning. Then the lady could go to her quarters and he would go to business.
He offered to have a dinner sent in from a restaurant. It was in the middle of the afternoon that the couple met at the husband's domicile to pass together, the husband arriving a little in advance. He let his wife in and welcomed her with a kiss. She looked about her curiously and with evident admiration. Her sister-in-law had shown excellent taste in the arrangements.

"What a cozy little box!"
"I shall be very comfortable."
The lady walked through the living room to the dining room and thence into the kitchen.

"Why, this kitchen is as attractive as the other rooms."
"Why shouldn't it be? It's the most important room in the house. It's where the food is prepared, and if there is cleanliness anywhere surely it should be here. You see, I'm going to get my breakfast here, and occasionally I may bring a friend home to dine with me. I'll bring a steak and have a few French fried potatoes and a little lettuce. No trouble to get that, you know."

"Who's going to cook the steak?"
"I'll do that. I've learned it between the going of one servant and the coming of another when you have been laid up. There's nothing nicer than a simple dinner lifted right off the fire and served hot."

"It makes my mouth water."
"I've got a colored woman engaged to come in when I want her to wash the dishes and put everything in order."

"You won't be able to depend upon her."

"Yes, I will. I'll pay her double wages. You see, I'll have from $20 to $30 a month servant's hire saved.
You can get anything done if you pay enough for it."

"Let's go upstairs."

She led the way to the second story and entered the front bedroom.

"How lovely!" she exclaimed. "It's small but small rooms are more easily taken care of than large ones. I see you have electricity in the house."

"Yes. I have that not only for light, but for power. I shall need it for various purposes."

"I see. Where is the bathroom?"

"Here."

"Isn't it lovely? How you will enjoy bathing here. Everything in the house is just too cozy for anything. Have you a telephone?"

"Yes; in this nook."

"Handy, isn't it?" She took up the receiver. "Give me 1476. Is this Peckman's restaurant? You wouldn't send the dinner that was ordered by Mr. Starkweather. All right. Goodby."

"Why, sweetheart, aren't we going to dine here?"

"Yes; on steak and French fried potatoes. Your talk about the dinners you are going to cook spoiled my appetite for restaurant cooking. I'll take care of the dinner."

"In that case perhaps I'd better put a bottle of wine on ice."

"And I must make a beginning of the dinner."

"While I set the table."

The dining room and kitchen being adjoining apartments, Mr. Starkweather chatted with his wife while he set the table, and when he had finished he went into the kitchen and chatted with her there.

"It seems all right for you to be in the kitchen here. In our other house
I never dared go into it myself. I was always afraid the cook would drive me out with the range poker. What a heavenly smell there is to that broil-ing steak! Let me hold it over the fire for you."

He took the broiler out of her hand, giving her a kiss at the same time, and going about other business. When the dinner was served and they sat down at the table the husband remarked that his wife looked as tidy as if she had been working at embroidery instead of cooking a dinner. Then, having popped a cork, he gave a toast:

"To my happy home!"

The toast was drunk in silence by the wife, who was evidently thinking very hard.

"I'll invite you to a dinner like this once in awhile," said the husband.

"I'm! Maybe I'll invite you to dinner."

"At your boarding house? No, thanks. I shall decline."

"I'm not going to a boarding house."

"Going to a hotel?"

"No."

"What are you going to do?"

"Stay here."

Starkweather rose from his chair, went to his wife and put his arms about her. Neither spoke, the two words in which the announcement was made being quite sufficient.

This happened several years ago.
The Starkweathers are still living in the little house and without a servant.
The plan has its disadvantages; but, though Starkweather's income is much larger than it was and he can afford to pay the highest prices for servants, he and his wife have got used to having their house all to themselves and revolt at having others about. They are always intending to get a servant, but never can make up their minds to have the house turned upside down and only half of it to themselves.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 4th
"Jealousy"

Feature Photoplay in Four Parts. A Story with a Moral.

THEATRICAL

"The Perils of Pauline."

Sanford Marvin, a rich retired manufacturer, has a son, Harry, and also an adopted daughter, Pauline. Harry is in love with Pauline. Old Mr. Marvin, who feels his health failing, asks Pauline to marry Harry at once so that he may see them happy. Pauline, although admitting she loves Harry, says she will not marry him for a year or two at least. She proves that she has some talent as a story writer. Mr. Marvin recognizes her talent and agrees to send her on a year's trip around the world in order that she may see life and be able to write better.

Mr. Marvin has a hobby for collecting antiques and among his other treasures is a mummy. Just after his decision to give Pauline her trip he is attacked by one of his fainting spells. While in a semi-unconscious state the mummy steps down from her case and speaks to him. This causes an attack of heart failure, resulting in his death. His will when read leaves one half of his fortune to his son and the other half to Pauline, with a provision that in case of her death before she marries Harry her share will go to his secretary, Owen. Owen is a villain at heart and plots to secure Pauline's fortune for himself. How these plots are laid, how they are carried out, and Harry's share in protecting Pauline is shown on the screen in the different episodes of the story.

Owen is a very remarkable villain and leads Pauline into a series of the most thrilling adventures.

Harry as Pauline's self-appointed protector is kept a very busy man rescuing her from danger.

"The Perils of Pauline" will be shown at Charlevoix Theatre every Saturday night.

"The Million Dollar Mystery."

The series of pictures entitled "The Million Dollar Mystery" are creating quite an interest at the Majestic Theatre.

There are twenty-three series or episodes in this subject, two reels in each episode, making forty-six reels in all. Two reels are shown each Friday night.

This wonderful picture is being produced by the Thanhouser Company at an enormous expense. The scenery is almost entirely natural settings and on getting familiar with the scenes one recognizes them readily in each series. Episode No. 7 is the next that will be shown here.

This story has created such wide attention that twenty-six of the leading newspapers of the country are running it serially as a Sunday feature.

In the Right Field.

Practical work in agriculture is being carried forward under the direction of H. J. Wheeler, teacher of agriculture in Boyne City high school. A few days since Mr. Wheeler took his class to the R. E. Newville farm, where an investigation was made regarding seed corn. An effort was made to determine the percentage of good seed in the field. The class also studied smut and searched for examples of poor corn. The soil was tested to see if the corn crop could be followed by alfalfa. Two bushels of seed corn were selected from the field and will be kept and sown by Mr. Newville next spring.

In summer the hedges are covered with a profusion of pink, white and crimson blossoms that last well into the autumn and make great splashes of color on the hills and at the roadside. The oleander has no enemies. Animals refuse to touch it, and the tree runs his thorns way all over the islands. Those who visit Bermuda only in winter miss the glory of the oleander blossoms and also many of the other gorgeous flowers. While there is plenty of bloom in the winter months, the array of flowers is even greater in summer.—New York Post.

It is not desirable to comment on the action of the city, county or state government, or have any suggestions to make regarding that. It is your opportunity to do so through this column. No article exceeding 300 words in length, unless of unusual importance, can be accepted for the Public Pulse. The Courier can pay no attention to communications not accompanied by the name of the author. A guarantee of good faith, though this need not be printed, is followed.

Editor Courier:

A man who is being solicited for his signature to "wet" petitions should think twice before signing. His name may be next to a fellow who is an undesirable citizen. One may be sure of finding himself in the company of practically all the bums in town, the gamblers and other vicious elements. Nice company on a telegraph pole for ten days. Instead of adding or abetting this unholy cause let us join the swelling tide of voters who are making the United States "dry." Virginia joined the dry states last week by a majority of about 35,000. West Virginia went dry July 1 by 93,000 majority.

Ex-Mayor Keycraft of Petoskey says Petoskey uses twenty times as much liquor since it went wet than it did while dry and that Petoskey people are heartily sick of it and will vote it out next spring and, like Lansing, will vote dryer than they ever did before. Let's boost for Charlevoix and local option.

English Infantry on the March

When Germany declared war on Russia there was the greatest activity in the English army. It is plain that with a general war on the continent it would be impossible for England to keep out of it. It was figured that the English Infantry would give a good account of itself.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

MARY'S SWEET PERFUME.

Mark 14:1-11—Oct. 4.

"She hath done what she could."—Yerua 8. HE last five days of Jesus' ministry are full of interest. The incident marking our lesson occurred at the close of the Jewish Sabbath preceding our Lord's crucifixion. Jesus and His disciples had come to the Passover, He telling them that He would there be crucified, but they thinking that He spoke figuratively. Indeed, at no time during Jesus' ministry did His crucifixion seem less likely than when it occurred.

Multitudes were at Jerusalem to celebrate the Passover Feast. Thousands of them had heard of Jesus; and many of them had been healed by Him. Just a short time before, a considerable number had discussed the propriety of proclaiming Jesus king. Indeed, on the very day after the incident of this lesson, the multitude acclaimed Him king, crying out, "Hosanna in the highest to the Son of David, who cometh in the name of Jehovah!"

But the Master knew that the masses would be only as children in the hands of the great teachers of the time; and that there was murderous hatred against Him amongst the chief priests, Scribes and Pharisees. True they hated Him without a just cause, but they had come to hate Him from their own viewpoint.

The Attitude of the Religious Teachers.

Although the Jewish nation had lost liberty long before and have no prospect of regaining it, nevertheless not since the days of Solomon had their political outlook been so favorable. The Roman Emperors had manifested willingness to co-operate with the Jewish religious leaders. Thus these felt themselves sponsors for the people. They perceived that their hold upon the more ignorant Jews was being impaired by Jesus' teachings. They felt so satisfied with themselves as claimed representatives of God and as intermediaries with the Roman government that they did not think it worth while to inquire respecting Jesus.

Many of them had lost all faith in God and a future life. Others retaining faith in God and His promised Kingdom, thought fulfillment with the Roman Empire the best way to prepare their nation for Messianic glories. From this viewpoint Jesus was a disturber of the peace. His manner, no less than His teachings, reproved them and tended to break their indifference with the people.

The religious leaders had heard that Jesus was coming to the Feast. On Jesus' arrival, they discussed how He could wisely be gotten rid of. They seem to have been unanimous in believing that His destruction would be for the good of the Lord's cause, as they misunderstood that cause. An other Scripture tells us that Caiaphas the high priest, had declared it expedient that one man perish rather than the nation. John 11:49-52. They faulted that Jesus' teaching, if allowed to proceed, would certainly awaken the people to faith in the Messianic Kingdom, and possibly incite some fanatical uprising.

The religious teachers had murder in their hearts. It was merely a question of how to accomplish the murder and deceive the people, as not to provoke those who had begun to exercise faith in Jesus. Such was their mental attitude when Jesus went to them privately, suggesting that for a certain amount of money he would inform them of the most suitable time for making Jesus a prisoner. This plan was adopted and carried out.

The Feast—the Anointing. Jesus and His disciples were the guests of Lazarus, Martha and Mary, at the house of Simon the Leper, who probably was dead. Jesus was the guest of honor. The supper had progressed when Mary entered with a vial of very expensive perfume, which she poured upon Jesus' head and, according to another account, also upon His feet. The house was filled with the perfume.

Then came a voice of murmuring—"Why this waste?" St. John tells us that the leader of the murmurers was Judas. The Apostles afterwards learned that his speech was a hypocritical. At the time Jesus understood the anger which led Judas openly to insult one of their hostesses. St. John tells us that Judas was angry because he failed to get the money himself. As treasurer of the little company, he carried the money-bag; and, as they afterward learned, he was a thief.—John 12:6

Poor Mary must have felt crushed when she heard the harsh criticism. But Jesus came to her defense. Surely the Master's approval comforted her; and wherever the Gospel has been preached, this story of her loving devotion, to the extent of considerable cost and probably considerable self-denial, has been told as a memorial of her—not merely to honor her, but especially to inspire and encourage others of God's people to the obtaining and exercising of a love that delights in service, yes, in costly sacrifice.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

LECTURE BY GIBSON FRIDAY EVENING

Grange Column

Ironton Grange.

The regular meeting of Ironton Grange, No. 707, Patrons of Husbandry, was held in their rooms September 22nd with W. F. Johnson, master, in the chair. Minutes of the last meeting were read. Sister Cora Hammond reported $35.00 received from premiums at the fair. Several communications were read and placed on file for future reference. Sisters Cora Hammond and Lillian Saunders were appointed the committee on exhibits at the fair for next year.

All grangers and their families come out to the next meeting, October 6th, as there will be something doing, a debate on Resolved, "That Agriculture is of More Importance to the Farmer Than Horticulture," led by two of the best speakers in the state.

Lecture hour consisted of:
Song No. 7 in Grange Melodies—By Grange.

Recitation—Emil Nasson.
Song—Worthy Master.
Short Talk—Worthy Master.
Song—Sister Tumath.

At the next meeting the lecture hour will be led by Emil Nasson.

Wilson Grange.

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday evening, September 26, with twenty-two members present.

The following delegates were chosen to attend the county convention: Robt. Shepard, George Jaquays, Ethel Jaquays and Leon Frost.

The ladies' auxiliary will meet Wednesday, October 7, with Sister A. Odell. After a short program, consisting of songs and readings, grange was dismissed.

The next meeting will be in two weeks.

Marion Center Grange.

Grange met in regular session Friday evening. Called to order by Worthy Master with an attendance of twenty-eight members and one visitor.

Under the head of reports of special committees the dance committee reported a good time and all expenses paid. The committee on canned fruit at the fair reported having received first premium and turned over $15 to the treasurer.

Under the head of new business the following delegates to the county convention were elected: William Poquette, Mary Poquette, Herman Himebauch and Frankie Himebauch.

The lecture hour was filled with music, stories and readings.

Peninsula Grange.

Regular meeting September 26, a good attendance and full corps of officers present. October 8th is the date decided on for the annual harvest feast at which time the men folks will take a day off for a hunt and bring in the day's game for the feast. Several of the leaders are talking of going, too.

During lecture hour the good roads topic was discussed pro and con showing a very healthy sentiment. Sister Vogel gave a reading from the Michigan Farmer. John Chew gave a short story. Samuel Persons, William Loozer and Fred Crowl rendered musical selections. At the meeting the ladies will have the "floor" and discuss the best methods of arranging their work to get the best results. Next meeting October 10th. Visitors welcome.

Struck by Lightning.

About 6:15 Tuesday morning lightning struck the steeple of the Catholic church, setting it on fire. The firemen encountered considerable difficulty in fighting the blaze owing to a lack of water pressure and the flames being confined to the inside of the cupola. Water slightly damaged the plaster in the choir loft. The steeple will have to be practically rebuilt. Father Rhoads was in the church at the time the bolt struck the church and received quite a shock.

A Correction.

In last week's issue of the Courier we were careless in allowing an error in Chas. Sey's furniture advertisement. Where we said $50,000 in stock we should have made it read $5,000. Mr. Sey says $5,000 is plenty money to have tied up in surplus stock.

FOR THE HOUSEKEEPER.

How to Mend an Iron Pot or Pan Satisfactorily.

Pots and pans, whether of iron or tin (which is only iron thinned over), get holes in their bottoms all too soon to please the economical housekeeper. Then it becomes necessary to call in the tinsmith, who puts a lump of solder in the hole. This soon melts and the hole is there again.

But nothing is easier than to repair such holes at home and without the aid of a tinsmith. First of all make the hole round by inserting the point of a knife and twisting it back and forth. Place the pot or pan upon any firm, flat piece of metal, such as an anvil, a bar of iron or an inverted balloon, so that the hole is immediately over and touching the latter. In the middle of the hole place a shot of about the size of the hole. Any piece of lead will serve if shot be not handy. Now a few sharp blows with a hammer will flatten the hole tightly and overlapping enough to hold it in place. A few strokes with a file and a rub with sandpaper complete the operation. The repair is permanent. It is said that a hole as large as a quarter of an inch in diameter can be mended in this way.

A penny saved is a penny earned.—
Benjamin Franklin.

IN France, even in crowded Paris—every one has a garden, secluded somehow from the gaze of the curious, where the family can gather in fair weather, and these gardens are usually just the courtyards between the crowded houses transformed by a few rows of box, a chestnut tree and maybe a little fountain. In America we cement up our courtyards, or if we do not convert them into gardens we put them where every one can see them and rob them of all their home value. In Italy the home is not complete without its touch of outdoors, even if it is only a balcony with morning glories and tomato vines. English people, too, have their private gardens, where they have their indispensable cup of tea shielded from the gaze of outsiders.

But it is a funny thing that most of us Americans, who are so truly outdoor people, content ourselves with having all our home indoors. Gardens we have, surely, but they are usually not gardens at all as the European would understand the term. They are decorations, flower beds, arranged for the benefit of the passerby. We are guiltless of fences and walls, and our lawns and arbors and groves might as well be public parks for all the home quality they possess.

But one thing we do have that our European cousins have to stand back and admire is the veranda, and all the time we are getting to appreciate the possibilities of the veranda more and more, and the veranda is becoming more and more a part of the home. Of course the first requisite to the hominess of the veranda is to have it away from the street. The old fashioned idea was to have it plastered over the front of the house—an enlarged entrance porch, where we might sit and watch our neighbors as they passed and where they might see us as they passed. But nowadays architects have convinced us that a spacious front veranda is not absolutely essential to the structural completeness of the house, and we have learned for ourselves that the privilege of privacy is worth more than the privilege of viewing our neighbors.

But most of us cannot live in new houses. We must make the most of the old style veranda. And in this work we have several aids—vines and screens and awnings, which, taken together, will effect a good looking shield.

A veranda should be the most comfortable and the most hospitable part of the house. It should have some place to recline—a hammock, a steamer chair or a long wicker chair, or a foot rest used in connection with an easy chair and plenty of serviceable cushions.

Then the veranda should afford opportunities for refreshment. There should be a table where tea can be served or cold drinks dispensed, and, if it is secluded enough, where lunch or breakfast on a warm day may be simply eaten. A convenient table for this purpose is one of the folding ironing tables which can be closed to form a settle.

Tragic Wager.

In 1895 three Irishmen agreed to undertake a journey around the earth on foot for a pool of $150,000. Each one of the party deposited one-third of this sum in the Bank of Dublin, and it was agreed that whoever survived the trip and returned should receive the whole amount. In case all died a Dublin hospital was to become the beneficiary. On Dec. 24, 1895, they started east across Europe and Asia Minor to Egypt, where they took passage for Australia. Their wanderings through the inner wastes of Australia proved the hardest trials of the journey, and the severity of this trip resulted in the death of two of the travelers. The third, Captain Trevelyan, completed the voyage and won the money.

Puzzled.

The lady of the house was explaining things to the new colored maid. "Ah, what's this, missus?" asked the girl, indicating a metal bottle. "That is a bottle which will keep things either hot or cold, whichever you desire," replied the mistress. "Well, for the land sake," ejaculated the girl, "how is it to know whether you want things hot or cold?"—Everybody's.

SELECT BETTER SEED CORN

Should Be Taken From the Earlier Maturing Plants.

No Better Corn Fields in Michigan This Season Than in Our Home County.

The following article from the pen of H. L. Barnum of Lansing, Michigan, offers some very good suggestions to the farmers of Charlevoix county. Mr. Barnum was employed on the Stuart farm at Ironton during the past season and is deeply interested in seeing the farming possibilities of the county developed to the fullest extent:

The impression seems to prevail quite generally in Southern Michigan that Charlevoix county is too far north to produce good dent corn, but a comparison of the corn crops in this county and in the southern part of the state this year tends to indicate that the impression is unfounded. In traveling down the state one fails to see better looking fields of corn than can be found right in Charlevoix. Corn in this county is not so mature, however, and an early frost will do some damage. Corn growers, therefore, must keep the shorter growing season in mind in saving seed corn, picking out the earlier maturing plants from which to get the seed ears. This, of course, means field selection of seed.

The plan of field selection is practiced by many farmers and is the only sure method of improving the corn crop. It is too late in the season now, however, to discuss fully this method of securing seed better adapted to the climate, but a few suggestions concerning the care of the ears selected in this or any other way are offered.

The value of rightly caring for the seed corn can hardly be overestimated. The best corn may become quite worthless for planting as the result of improper handling. Often a poor stand of corn is due entirely to seed which has had its vitality weakened or destroyed by imperfect drying and freezing. Good care consists in carefully drying the ears and this should be done quite rapidly. One of the best ways is to place the ears on racks which are kept in a shed or well ventilated building. Artificial heat is seldom necessary, a free circulation of dry air being just as effective. During damp weather the drying shed should be closed. If unfavorable weather conditions prevail artificial heat may be used in drying the corn. Seed corn, although it may have become very dry, will absorb moisture from a damp atmosphere. When first gathered the corn may contain as much as one-fourth its weight in water and it may be greatly injured in one day's time if allowed to freeze or heat in sacks or baskets; therefore the necessity for hurrying the drying process.

The dried ears should be stored in a dry place of rather uniform temperature. Well matured ears properly dried and stored retain the vitality of the seed and when tests are made in the spring a strong, uniform germination will result. Then, if the conditions at planting time are favorable, the certain increase in yield will more than repay any extra care in handling the seed.

SURPRISING DISCOVERY

Work of Constructing Sepsic Tank for New Sewer Brings Forth Peculiarities.

While at the work of digging the sewer on Alice street for the construction of the septic tank the workmen after digging down eight feet encountered a marl deposit of five feet in depth, followed by a sand deposit of three feet. Below the sand more marl was encountered and below this in the sand was discovered a cedar log. The log was perfect in every detail and measured 24 inches in diameter. No one can estimate the probable number of years the log was buried. A log perfectly sound in the conditions of ground surrounding it proves the remarkable qualities of the timber.

The septic tank is at a depth of 16 feet and this log runs crosswise, making it impossible to ascertain the length of the hidden part. Workmen claim it was the most remarkable coincidence in their experience in sewer work.

ANOTHER FIRE

Second Fire of Week at Home of Mrs. J. M. Clarke Friday About 11:30.

Friday morning about 11:30 o'clock the home of Mrs. J. M. Clarke, 523 State street, was the scene of a smothering and smoky blaze. When the firemen arrived the house was filled with smoke and for a time the whole house threatened to break out in a roaring furnace. However, there was more smoke than fire and the chemical did rapid work in extinguishing the fire.

By the active response of neighbors, who piled two streams of water from lawn house, much danger was averted. Very little water was used by the firemen from the big line of hose, the chemical being effective.

The fire, which started around the chimney from the kitchen, burned the roof quite badly, most of the damage being done from the inside. Water damaged the interior of the adjoining room. Smoke did some damage to the rooms on the second floor. None of the main part of the house was affected by fire. The estimated damage will aggregate $300, covered by insurance. Mrs. Clarke had just built a hot fire and the overheated pipe or sparks from the chimney is attributed as the cause of the blaze.

GET THE HABIT

Parents are Urged to Visit the Public Schools and See Work Being Done.

How many times during the school year do you pass the high school? Why not drop in and have a visit with your child's instructors? You will find them human. They will be glad to explain their aims and to exchange ideas. Don't wait until something unpleasant happens. Make your visit a pleasure and not a duty. Don't wait to be coaxed with pickles and cake. Don't wait for special occasions; it's the everyday work that counts and that has put C. H. S. on the map. Now the very next time you and Mrs. Best Friend meet, stroll over to the high school; visit the superintendent's office. He will be glad to introduce the high school instructors. Classes end at 3:30. The teachers are always in the building until four o'clock and often until six. Did you say YES, I will come? Thanks.

CONDITIONS BAD IN THE WEST

Hundreds of Men Out of Work and the People are Discouraged.

Mrs. Ben Nowland Says Residents of Michigan Should Be Glad They Live Here.

October 6th, 1914.

Editor Courier,

I just got back from Washington and Oregon. Visited in Vancouver, B. C.; Blaine, Bellingham, Seattle, Tacoma and Portland. Came down the Sound 136 miles on a boat. It was a lovely trip, but if the people of Michigan could know the conditions in the west they would think Michigan good enough for anybody. No work to be had out there. Mills shut down and men out of employment and they are hoping that eastern men will stay away. Three shingle mills burnt in a week. Some say they are burning them for the insurance. Can't sell the shingles. Free trade just put things on the bum out there. I wish I had time to write and tell all about the country and the conditions. I was out there two months and I saw a lot of the country. It had rained for four weeks and was cold and disagreeable. Was surprised to find such lovely weather here at home. If the people here would do as they do there—just say Charlevoix was the best place, on earth and boom their own town—they would be satisfied.

Mrs. Ben Nowland.

COUNTY'S SHARE OF BIG TAXES

Ferris Administration Has Brought an Increase of $8,340.53 to County.

Taxpayers of This County Will Be Interested in Information Given in Article Below.

Charlevoix county taxpayers are interested in the outcome of the election this fall as they have not been interested in many years. All of them have felt the burden of recent unusual state taxes, but it may not be known to many of them that the appropriations approved by Governor Ferris brought to Charlevoix county an increased tax of $8,340.53.

The entire state tax for the Ferris administration was $14,718,748.89, almost three million dollars in excess of the state tax permitted by the Osborn administration.

If this was all the loss our county has been required to meet through the unfortunate election results of two years ago we would be very fortunate. But we have had to share in the loss to every line of business that has come to our state and to our country as a whole through the changing of the tariff and through the direct assaults on Michigan interests that have been made at Washington.

The Republicans of this county were divided two years ago and their division assisted in bringing the trouble for our state and nation. But they are united now and their votes for Gov. Osborn and for our candidate for congress and the county candidates will indicate their protests against burdensome state taxes and against all the losses they have been compelled to endure through Democratic direction and mismanagement.

Motion Picture Films.

Thursday, October 1, new shipping safety regulations for motion picture films went into effect. Under orders of the Interstate Commerce Committee moving picture films cannot be shipped except tightly closed, metal cases enclosed in a strong spark-proof wooden box, or in spark-proof boxes made of sheet iron. Under former laws films could be shipped in fiberboard cases. The new film regulations are part of those governing shipments of explosives and other dangerous articles.

He will resign his position with the state game department and devote his entire time to his newly-acquired business.

"GET RIGHT WITH GOD"

Revival Meetings Now Being Held at the Baptist Church.

Rev. Lloyd C. Vinyard from Southern Illinois in Charge—People Urged to Attend.

Having arrived in your little city, we have enlisted a company of soldiers at the Baptist church and declared war on the Devil and all his forces and powers with which he robs humanity and God of that prime factor, Divinity, given us; character, or manhood and womanhood.

We do not fight the enemy as the nations of Eurasia do to-day, with shot and shell, but have direct orders from our Captain, Jesus Christ, to use the gospel and prayer. All soldiers must obey orders. This is to serve notice on the public that war, having been declared, has actually begun and we hereby notify the Devil to evacuate, for we purpose moving immediately upon his works.

A call is hereby issued for volunteers and to-day is enlistment day. When you come to join our army we do not measure your height, test your sight, figure your weight or try your health. The only condition is that you call on our Captain, who is on record as the Greatest Physician in the world, who will try your heart and if you have "heart trouble" will immediately cure you and enroll you as a member of the army.

We do not want anyone with a bad heart in our ranks (for you could not stand the heat of the battle), but we do want you to take treatment at once and join us to-day.

Everybody is summoned to meet our Captain at once and gain admission, for we take this opportunity to inform you that "the victory is ours" and no one should want to be a loser.

To the small, great, rich, poor, halt, lame, blind and whosoever will—come. Every father and mother should come, for you would like for your children to be God-loving men and women. Every young man or woman should come, for with Christ life is infinitely more to you. Every child should come. Jesus loves children. Every old person should come, for you must shortly stand before God. All should come, for to-morrow you may be in eternity. The preacher is but a boy, but is "O. O." for God. Believes in the old-fashioned way of getting people saved. Got no clubs for your head, but love for your heart, and will be glad to greet you each afternoon at 2:30 and evening at 7:30 at the Baptist church. Come. Our motto: "Get Right with God."

Lloyd C. Vinyard, Minister.

CRUSHED HIS FOOT

Silas W. Swails Met With a Painful Accident at Middle Village Last Thursday.

Silas W. Swails of this city, who piloted the Arbutus to Middle Village, near Cross Village, last Thursday, where the crew were to tow logs to Harbor Springs for Mr. Burnett, met with an accident while the crew was letting out the tow line to be fastened to the logs. The boat was moving at a good speed and in some way the six-inch line became coiled around Mr. Swails' leg, crushing his ankle and foot. But for a timely move on the part of Mr. Campbell of Harbor Springs, who threw Mr. Swails overboard, his foot would have been torn off and he might have bled to death before medical aid could be obtained. Mr. Swails swam back to the boat and piloted the Arbutus back to this city, resting his leg on the boat cushions.

The accident happened at six o'clock p. m. at the high rollway and two hours time elapsed before Charlevoix was reached, when Dr. King was called and reduced the fractured member. Mr. Swails will be unable to use his foot for about three months and, while the injury is very painful, he is resting easy.

TENNIS TOURNAMENT

First Annual Event to Be Held on the High School Courts Commencing Saturday.

The first annual tennis tournament of the high school will be held on the high school courts commencing Saturday and running through the greater part of next week. Matches have been arranged for both the men and women. There will be only single matches played.

The participants of the tournament have been practicing during the past two weeks with an idea of making this an interesting tournament as has ever been run off on the local courts. Over forty are entered.

Some Window.

Saturday C. Danto & Son had one of the best window displays ever put up in Charlevoix. Tasty in its cleanliness and arrangement, no finer exhibit of fresh meats was ever seen in a properly designed manner. Mr. McCarthy carefully selected his choice meats and displayed each neatly and prettily. Anyone looking at the window was sure to go inside and secure some of the promising eatables. If you did not see this display you missed an appetizing treat.

PUT YOUR FARM ON THE MAP

Give It a Name and Have It Printed on Your Stationery.

It Will Be One of the Best Investments You Have Made in Your Life.

Every farmer who owns his farm ought to have printed stationery with his name and the name of his farm and his post office address properly given. The printed heading might also give the names of whatever crops he specializes in and of whatever varieties of seed or whatever breeds of cattle, hogs or poultry he keeps. Printed stationery gives one standing with whatever firm or person he is writing to, besides insuring that your name and address will always be read properly.

Moreover, printed stationery increases your credit. A prominent advertiser wrote one of our readers the other day, saying: "We usually require cash with orders for all our goods, but we have found that it pays to trust a man who uses printed stationery as you do, so we are shipping your order at once."

If you want to write to your congressman or member of the legislature, or if you have a request to make to your county superintendent of schools, or if you wish to get information from any business house, in any case your letter will have increased weight and get more and quicker attention if you use printed stationery.

Even if you use postcards buy 200 to 500 at the time and have your name and address printed in the corner.

Get the habit of using printed stationery. Next time you came to town why not drop into our office and give us an order for 1000 sheets of printed note paper and 1000 envelopes to match? It will be one of the best investments you have ever made in your life.

EAST JORDAN EASY PICKING

C. H. S. Foot Ball Team Winners by Score of 32 to 0.

New Players on Home Team Made Fine Showing—Play Harbor Springs Saturday.

Brilliantly executed forward passing and swiping end runs resulted disastrously for East Jordan's hopefuls in the first encounter of the season with the local contingent last Saturday at the above-mentioned city. The final score was 32-0.

From the opening blast of the whistle the game was easily predicted. Charlevoix, with an entirely different machine that fell before Boyne City a week ago, proved too strong for the much-touted Jordan men. Forward passes and an especially open game was not what East Jordan was expecting and as a result they were completely lost. East Jordan proved effective in the old style of slam-bang football and were able to gain fairly well through the locals line, only to be stopped when within striking distance of the coveted last chalk line.

Several of the Charlevoix men were playing their first game and at times showed their lack of football instinct and previous knowledge of the finer points of the game, but altogether the exhibition was one that they need not feel blue over. O'Neill at one extremity played what might be termed a brilliant game for a beginner. He was effective in interference, reasonably sure on tackles and showed caliber in getting down the field. Auld, Krulik, Usher and Jones also got into a real scrimmage for the first experience and gave a good account of themselves. Poole, the Durance family and Mascho played stellar ball. The former two distinguished themselves by gathering in passes and ran wild over the chalk lines for touchdowns, while Mascho showed a wonderful improvement at center, both in offense and defense.

Milford of East Jordan played an all-around game. While at end during the early part of the fray he was on the job every minute and later at quarter he ran the team in excellent shape. He is a sure tackler and knows the game.

Those who witnessed the game at East Jordan last week between Vogt's Charlevoix hopefuls and East Jordan high could not help but see one thing—that it isn't essential to have big men who tip the scales at the 200 mark on a squad before a team can be whipped into a winning aggregation. Last week Dittleson, Paulson and Weed entered school supposedly to continue throughout the year. Soon after the Boyne City game these men were forced to discontinue their academic work and return to their summer positions. While their presence on the squad is missed, the team that met East Jordan last week displayed a better quality of football in every department of the game than was seen a week before. They were small, but they had the fight, and it's the fight that makes football players, and not always weight.

The men were given a layoff Monday night, but were at work on the south side field Tuesday night preparing for the Harbor Springs game Saturday, arrangements for which are about completed. Owing to the fact that Cadillac has discontinued football for the season and Traverse has not as yet made a definite reply, the schedule cannot be officially announced this week.

JOEL B. KING DIED

Pioneer Resident of Ironton Had Been Sick for Many Months.

Joel B. King, aged 74 years, a pioneer resident of near Ironton, died Monday evening from heart disease. Mr. King had been sick all summer and for the past few days grew worse, until death relieved him of his suffering.

He had lived in Charlevoix county for many years and held the high esteem of all who knew him. He leaves an aged wife and family. Funeral services were held Wednesday; interment at East Jordan.

More Raspberries.

Another fine sample of Northern Michigan raspberries were brought to this office Monday by Mrs. Henry Clarke. The sample consisted of two branches literally loaded with the luscious fruit. The berries were large in size and many had not as yet ripened. They were picked near the home of Mrs. Clark.

JACKSON MAN EATS A SQUARE MEAL AFTER WAITING 15 YEARS

A. W. Hobbs Ends Stomach Suffering Quickly With Mayr's Wonderful Remedy.

A. W. Hobbs of 1801 East Main street, Jackson, Michigan, after about fifteen years of suffering from derangements of the stomach and digestive tract, took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. He got the surprise of his life—and swift relief.

Mr. Hobbs has told his own story in a letter, part of which is given here:

"After taking three doses of your stomach remedy I am in perfect condition. I have not felt so well for fifteen years.

"I can eat anything now and it does not distress me. I hope those afflicted as I was will proceed to get your remedy at once."

The first dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy convinces sufferers of its merit. Many have found only one dose sufficient. Mr. Hobbs' experience is typical. Thousands have taken this remedy with remarkable benefit. It is known everywhere.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles and many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations. Many are sure it has saved their lives.

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. One dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleanser ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold by leading druggists everywhere.

SCHOOL MONEY

New Districts. Forfeit Primary Money—Important Information Revealed.

"District boards and boards of education shall hire and contract with such duly qualified teachers as may be required." . . . "No person shall be considered a qualified teacher within the meaning of this act, nor shall any school officer employ or contract with any person to teach in public schools of the state who has not a certificate in force, granted by the board of school examiners or other lawful authority."

"Any district that employs a teacher that does not hold a legal certificate shall forfeit their primary money for the following year or such part thereof as the number of unqualified teachers employed bears to the whole number of teachers employed." The teachers must hold a certificate at the time of making the contract. Obtaining one later does not make the contract valid. College diplomas and certificates granted in other states do not qualify. They must have certificates operating in Michigan. School boards must know the authority under which they act, hence the school board should see the certificate at the time of making the contract. Caution on the part of boards in this matter will save much annoyance and financial loss to the districts.

Apple Day Observed.

Many of the granges of Western Michigan have arranged for an apple program for their second meeting in October. This is in keeping with the plan being worked out by the Western Michigan Development Bureau for the observance of Apple Day, which this year comes on Tuesday, October 20th. Each grange having an apple program will lay stress upon the importance of this fruit and will try to create a sentiment in favor of a greater use of the apple as an article of food.

Increase in Borax Production.

In 1913 the production of crude borate materials in the United States was 58,051 short tons valued at $1,491,530, compared with 42,315 tons in 1912, valued at $1,127,813, according to an advance chapter from Mineral Resources 1913 on the production of borax, now in press by the United States Geological Survey.

All the borax in the United States is produced from ores derived from California and mainly from a few mines in Los Angeles and Inyo counties, although a small quantity was produced in Ventura county.

Thus far there has been no output of borax from the potash properties in the Searles Lake region, where the promoters expect to obtain borax as a by-product of the potash mining operations. The imports into the United States in 1913 of borax and borates were valued at $18,434, against $11,219 in 1912.

Former Resident Dead.

Word reached the Courier from Blaine, Washington, last week announcing the death of Mrs. O. H. Whitford at that place September 25th. Mrs. Whitford was a resident of this city for over 32 years. Besides her husband she leaves to mourn their loss two sons—F. H. Whitford of Blaine, Washington, and W. W. Whitford of Everett, Washington; and two daughters—Mrs. Dan Driggett of Blaine, Washington, and Mrs. Ben Nowland of this city. All were at the bedside of their mother when she passed away.

He is indeed a bold prophet who pretends to forecast either the probability or improbability of future usefulness of any raw material. As has been illustrated by the radium mineral carnottite, the mineralogic curiosity of one decade may become the valuable ore of the next. Again, the principal ore of aluminum, bauxite, was not even mentioned in a list of useful minerals published by the United States Geological Survey twenty-five years ago.

DANGER IN DELAY

Kidney Diseases Are Too Dangerous for Charlevoix People to Neglect.

The great danger of kidney troubles is that they so often get a firm hold before the sufferer recognizes them. Health will be gradually undermined. Backache, headache, nervousness, lameness, soreness, lumbago, urinary troubles, dropsy, gravel and Bright's disease may follow as the kidneys get worse. Don't neglect your kidneys. Help the kidneys with Doan's Kidney Pills, which are so strongly recommended right here in Charlevoix.

Bert Beaudoine, 328 Bridge street, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I was bothered off and on for several months by my kidneys. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and I suffered from severe backaches and pains in my loins. I used a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, obtained at the Ivy Drug Store, and they brought fine results. I am now free from the aches and pains and my kidneys are normal."

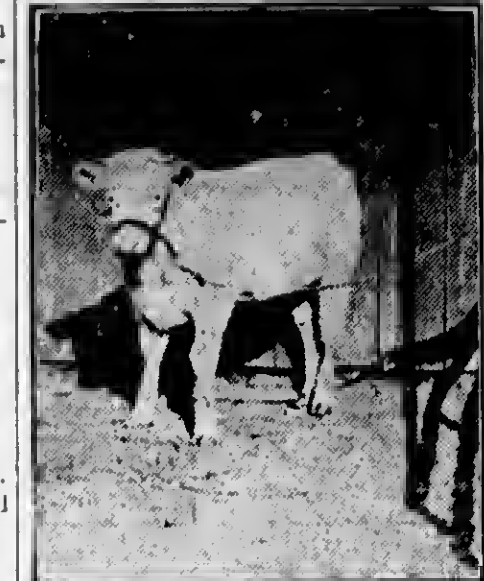

Price 50c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Beaudoine had. Foster-McIlhenny Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

HUMANE TREATMENT OF CATTLE IN SUMMER

It must be remembered that the summer is always a season of more or less discomfort for the farm stock as well as for the individuals in the household, says Kimball's Dairy Farmer.

Everything that is under your care, the horses, the cows, the pigs, chickens—in fact, all forms of live stock that are kept upon the farm—deserve your attention and protection against the discomforts just so far as it is possible for you to give it.

The greatest profit is derived only when the stock is kept where there are the least discomfort and annoyance—the least friction to be overcome by the animal in its fight for a living. If cows are forced to stand in the hot sun and drink warm water from a silage pool, they will not have the opportunity to turn so much of this rich grass and succulent food into milk.

A point not to be lost sight of is the large and rugged calves that are the offspring of Holsteins and the ease with which they are reared by hand and the rapid growth that they make up to maturity. There are cases where breeders of other dairy cattle have purchased a number of Holsteins for the sole purpose that they might have their milk to rear the calves successfully from their chosen breed. This has always proved good wisdom on the part of the owner of such cattle. The calf in the illustration is four months old.

The cow that has little to do except eat and make milk will be more contented and will make a better profit than her sister who is kept under different circumstances.

With the horses it is a little different, for usually the men work with them all of the time and they are wise to the discomforts and the dangers that are incident to excessive heat. Thus horses are usually protected, but the cows are turned into the pasture and forgotten until night.

The same things are true in raising hogs. No hog can make the best gain unless provided with plenty of shade as well as good feed. The small chickens and the old hens that are forced to be cramped in the house heat without being given any shade will not make the best growth or yield the best profit.

It is possible in all of these cases to provide shade if it is not done by nature. If the hog yards and pastures where there are trees, a shed may be built which will provide a comparatively cool place in any kind of weather, and it will protect from the excessive heat of the sun.

Another thing that must be borne in mind is the value of pure, clear water. Every form of live stock on the farm must have this in order to keep the constitution and vitality at the right degree of efficiency. Pure water is necessary for the health and development of an animal. This does not mean that the stock will have to hunt the sloughs and the pools and the silage covered ponds for their drink. There should be easily accessible a tank of clear, pure water directly from the well.

The third point in this consideration is in regard to flies. Much can be done by the use of fly repellent and flytraps to protect the stock from this pest, and if such provision is made the profit will be increased. Remember to keep all the cattle and all the stock that is under your care during the summer humanely. It will pay.

Lye and Ashes For Hogs.

A good provision for the health of hogs at this season is to keep a box or pile of fire coal, or charcoal, and ashes where the hogs feed, and mix in a few handfuls of concentrated lye, a large handful to each bushel of ash. Lye is claimed to be a preventive of cholera, and it surely does clear out the bowels, expel worms, and thereby promotes greatly the health of hogs. Cattle are benefited by taking a mild solution of lye with their drinking water. It does not harm them in the least and promotes health.

To Protect Sheep From Dogs.

The dog question is a serious one in many sections, and better state legislation is needed to protect flocks from the ravages of worthless curs. Women who fence will turn dogs. While it is expensive to fence large pastures in this way, smaller folds devoted to forage crops will carry the flock in a more healthy condition and require much less outlay for fencing. The whole forage crop area can be fenced with lower portable fences, used for confining the sheep to the portable crop ready for grazing.

LUCILLE LOVE THE GIRL of MYSTERY

BY THE
"MASTER PEN"

Copyright, 1914. All moving picture rights reserved by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which is now exhibiting this production in leading theaters. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted.

SYNOPSIS

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, international spy, from General Love, whom Loubeque hates, in Manila. Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille nurses him in an attempt to recover the papers.

Lucille gets the papers, but the ship is wrecked. She is cast ashore on a Pacific island and is taken by a native chief to his hut to nurse his sick child.

The native child is restored to health, and the grateful natives help Lucille. Loubeque, also cast ashore, tries various plans to recover the papers, but in vain.

Loubeque, baffled, forges a message from his master, and Lucille takes them from the native after he is killed by a lion. She finds and follows on underground passage in the jungle.

Loubeque's native aid steals the papers from his master, and Lucille takes them from the native after he is killed by a lion. She finds and follows on underground passage in the jungle.

CHAPTER IX.

Riches From a Weird Source.

HER knees jolted from under her as she reached out and found no downward step. Round black passages through rock vaulted aisles, some so close the sides brushed against her, she was lost. She had given herself completely up to her guides. She knew with a heavy despair that only accident could enable her to find her way back to the steps through all the turns they had made. Quite abruptly she felt her eyes blind as the mantle of blackness was thing aside. For a moment she could not see; then, becoming accustomed to the transition from darkness to comparative light, she looked with a shudder of terror upon the hairy, dwarfed, misshapen creatures who surrounded her—creatures who chattered in the gutturals of mimes, creatures whom the perpetual darkness had paled to a fishlike pallor, creatures whose hydrocephalic heads were always bent forward as though the sense of hearing had been given them in treble value because of the blindness with which the subterranean life had afflicted them.

Stick with the unwholesomeness of the sight, Lucille lifted her eyes at a shrill, chattering note in the gutturals—a note that was strangely familiar, even welcome. She stared wondering at the enormous carved statue of a misshapen man—a man with hairy torso and gigantic arms, a man whose head towered far above her and whose forehead and neck and arms were loaded with blazing rubies. The alien sound that drove the natives' crouching back came from the gigantic statue. And then Lucille saw that a huge orange-outang squatted complacently in the palms of the idol, his wrinkled, old man's face pinched curiously.

As though their fear had subdued the underground creatures once more closed in upon Lucille. Some impulse made her dart toward the orange as though for protection. The foul creatures were about her, clawing at her with their horrible, uncertain paws, like giant bats. The monkey seemed suddenly to waken to the situation. With a shrill note of rage he leaped from his squatting posture and snatched the necklace of rubies from about the idol's neck, flinging it squarely into the center of the idol. It had the effect of drawing them back for a moment. With shrill squeals the orange's hairy paw plucked jewel after jewel from the idol, hurling them at the creatures with the speed of bullets. Again and again he drove them back from her and Lucille constantly fought her way closer to this strange protector.

Her heart sank as she saw the creature had no more missiles. She caught a flash of hairy arms and body as he leaped toward her, his huge, round arms falling about him, dropping the subterranean inhabitants at every swing. Lucille, guided by some impulse, stooped and picked up the blazing necklace, extending it to the orange. He seemed not to notice. Wildly he thrashed about, the creatures dropping like ninetails. Backward, ever backward, Lucille felt her way, edging through the mob as her protector cleared a passage. The rock ribbed vault echoed and re-echoed hideously with the shrill squeals of rage from the orange, the gutturals of terror and pain from her assailants. Now they were fighting among themselves, tumbled about in a wild chaos of arms and legs and bodies.

She closed her eyes against the terrible sight. Suddenly Lucille felt her feet slipping from under her; felt her self going down toward a rippling musical sound; gently falling through the blackness as though she sank within a soft mattress of feathers.

Cold waters rose up and broke her fall, closing about her and edging her gently to and fro. Instinctively she reached out, her hands closing about a narrow strip of wood. With every atom of strength in her frail body she clung, making out finally that the object was a canoe. Slowly she slipped down the current until a flicker of narrow light glowed far ahead.

The slight inspired her with fresh energy. She drew herself up, carefully balanced the canoe against her weight, then slipped into the bottom and lay there exhausted. She groped about as the sides of the subterranean cavern expanded. The light grew broader. A paddle encountered her fingers, and she thrust it out into the water. Came a crunching of wood as it ripped against the rocky sides of the shallow ravine, and she stared in dismay at the useless handle that alone remained to her.

Gently, lazily the canoe floated down toward the ever expanding wedge of light. Slowly, very slowly, the fresh air of the jungle met her quivering nostrils. And even as she opened her mouth, having her throat with the intoxicating odor that had been so repulsive to her before, the canoe was lifted up, snatched up and whirled about in a gigantic swirling circle.

Lucille instinctively thrust the broken shaft of paddle into the water, finding it useless. She crouched low. Round and round in ever narrower circles she was whirled, the black water white now as it lashed itself, raging circles from the exact center of which rose a jagged toothed rock, a rock that imperturbably, cruelly waited this duty morsel being brought him.

Faster, faster, in ever shortening circles the creamy foam of savage waters drew the frail canoe toward the ugly, black rock that rose from out its center. Round and round in the circles of waters the frail craft sped. Then for a brief fraction of a second the circular progress was halted, the canoe heaving level steady, quivering as another face seized it and tumbled to light against the whirlpool. Lucille held her breath, measuring the length of time a new hope arrived in hours instead of the seconds it really was. Then the craft shot out of the current and continued upon its wild chase toward the rock.

It was now a matter of but two revolutions at best before the end. Lucille saw this with eyes that flinched not, yet that refused to hold any dread. Something flashed against her cheek, and her hands instinctively reached up, clutching, grasping, clinging to a thick tangle of creepers.

The canoe whirled out from under her while she clung there, the savage whirling leaping, snatching at her feet.

Desperation leaped her strength. For just a second she rested, then bravely reached out and clambered along the thick vine until she saw the earth beneath, then dropped and lay panting upon the ground, shivering with a nervous chill as the reaction seized her.

Long voices speaking in English tones awakened her from the state of self pity which followed the chill. She looked up swiftly, now that the dense fastnesses enclosing her were really pregnable, fearing a new enemy

She Clambered Along the Vine.
Pate had been so kind to her and man so unkind that she realized her chief danger came from the man with the recollection of what she had to guard. She clutched at the little sack, thrilling at the rustle of the papers she had fought so hard to gain, at thought of what they meant to her sweetheart in Manila. The diary told her that Hugo Loubeque had thousands of men working to do his will.

The shrill protesting creak of oarlocks drove away her fear, supplanting it with one of wild alarm. The men were going away—were leaving her alone here. Of the millions of inhabitants of the globe, why should she think every man a worker of the spy? She flung herself wildly through the tangle of thick vegetation that barred her way from the sound, crying aloud at the top of her voice for assistance even though she knew no sound could carry to the men. She found herself standing upon a pebbly little beach that snatched a serene crescent of water from the ocean. Straining her eyes, she could dimly see a large row-boat at the tip of the crescent, its objective point being obviously a beautifully slender yacht anchored well out.

Lucille waved her arms in the air wildly, running up and down the beach in desperation as she saw her opportunity for escape from the terrible jungle receding. Her throat was racked from the dry sobs which escaped her, sobs of rage and chagrin at her own cowardice and folly.

Suddenly she stopped dead in her tracks, her fists tightly clinched as she pressed them against her breast. "It is coming back!" she gasped, for she made out that the boat had stopped; that it was being turned.

Over and over again she repeated it. She had been seen at the last moment and was going to be taken away. And the prayer was not even finished before the boat grounded lightly at her feet and she found herself speaking to a heavy featured, youngish man who was evidently in command of the yacht.

There was something sinister about the man whose eyes were fastened upon her face in such bold admiration that she instinctively drew away.

Suddenly he turned to his men, roughly ordering them to prepare for the row out, then assisted Lucille to a seat alongside himself. Try though she would she could not feel the joy that seemed natural as the boat slipped through the water propelled by the sturdy oarsmen. She studied them keenly. Rough, powerful men they were, but she was woman enough to know them to be the sort easily handled by a beautiful woman—the weaker the easier. And she saw that the captain was heartily disliked. She noted also that two of the oarsmen had faces that showed signs of recent battling. The intuition that had served her so well before told her Captain Wetherell, for such was the name he used in introducing himself, had been a party to this.

There was something uncanny, mysterious, about the yacht, especially about one stateroom which was always locked—save once, when Lucille caught through the partly opened door a glimpse of a man who looked like a Chinaman. But she could not be sure. The door was closed quickly.

CHAPTER X.

Mutiny!

IT was the sixth day out that for the first time she saw the man upon the deck in daytime. Captain Wetherell was scanning the sky, his brow clouded and his heavy jaw thrust forward like an angry bulldog's. Lucille was standing beside the old boatswain, questioning him and whiling away the long sultry day by listening to the stories he loved to tell her. She started toward her cabin. She heard a swift step across the deck and hurried the faster, only pausing to look back when she reached her door.

A little cry of pity and rage came from her lips when, with an ugly oath, Wetherell lifted his great fist and flung at the old seaman. Every womanly impulse rose up within her at the outrageous, menial for attack. Forgetful of her own precarious position, forgetful of everything save the pain of the old man upon the deck, she started to his assistance, when the door of the Chinaman's stateroom snapped open, and the occupant strode across the deck toward Wetherell and spoke with Wetherell in low tones of suppressed passion.

The captain eyed the man angrily for a moment, then turned and slipped away, his very back dropping like that of a whipped cur. Lucille turned to enter her cabin, but something caused the door to stick open a scant inch or so. She felt an inclination to scream, for old, but amazement at recognition of the man who stepped into the cabin behind her, softly closing the door, held her dumb. For, under the fellow coloring, the made up, slanting eyes, the Mongolian mask he had so cunningly

BURNS ON GOOD ROADS.

Robert Burns was evidently an advocate of good roads. Long before road improvement became a popular movement and before the days of steam rollers and automobiles the poet wrote:
I'm now arrived—thanks to the gods!
Through pathways rough and muddy,
A certain sign that makin' roads
Is not this people's study.
Although I'm no' w/ Scripture cram'd,
I'm sure the Bible says
That heedless sinners shall be dam'd
Unless they mend their ways.

GOOD ROADS ARE MEANS FOR LARGER CROPS.

Investigations Show How Agricultural Output Depends Upon Highways.

That an improved road will increase vastly the productivity of the area through which it runs has now been satisfactorily demonstrated by studies conducted by the United States department of agriculture in Virginia. Conditions in Spotsylvania county were investigated with particular care, and the results have proved surprising. In 1909 the county voted $100,000 to improve forty miles of roads. Two years after the completion of this work the railroad took away in twelve months from Fredericksburg, the county sent 71,000 tons of agricultural and forest products hauled over the highways to that town. Before the improvement of the roads this total was only 40,000 tons annually. In other words, the quantity of the county's produce had risen more than 45 per cent. Still more interesting, however, is the increase shown in the quantity of the dairy products. In 1909 these amounted to 114,815 pounds. In 1911 to 273,028 pounds, an increase of practically 140 per cent in two years. In the same time shipments of wheat had increased 59 per cent, tobacco 31 per cent and lumber and other forest products 48 per cent.

In addition to this increase in quantity the cost of hauling each ton of produce was materially reduced. In other words, the farmers not only produce more, but produce more cheaply. For the cost of transportation to market is, of course, an important factor in the cost of production. From this point of view it is estimated that the $100,000 spent in improving the roads in Spotsylvania county saved the farmers of that county $41,000 a year.

In the past two years the traffic studies of the federal experts show that approximately an average of 65,000 tons of outgoing products were hauled over the improved roads in the county an average distance of eight miles, or a total of 520,000 "ton miles." Before the roads were improved it was estimated that the average cost of hauling was 20 cents a "ton mile," after the improvement this fell to 12 cents a "ton mile," or a saving of 8 cents. A saving of 8 cents per mile on 520,000 "ton miles" is $41,600 a year. The county's investment of $100,000, in other words, returns a dividend of 40 per cent annually.

Because this saving, in cases of this character, does not take the form of cash put directly into the farmer's pocket there is a widespread tendency to believe that it is a fictitious profit, while as a matter of fact it is just as real a source of profit as an increase in the price of wheat.

GOOD ROADS AT LOW COST.

California Counties, Cities, Railroads and Other Organizations Give Aid.

A bulletin recently issued by the California highway commission presents some interesting facts and useful information.

In it the commissioners tell how they are providing 2,700 miles of trunk line highway with a bond issue of $18,000,000.

The new highways are being built for an average of $6,000 a mile, although various engineers declared the system could not be built for less than $30,000,000, or nearly double that cost. The commissioners induced the counties to donate all lands needed for rights of way for the state highways and to build the necessary bridges, gutters and incorporated towns along the route to agree to pave and maintain the sections within their corporate limits at their own expense and secured reductions of nearly 50 per cent in freight rates on materials by assuring the railroads that hundreds of thousands of tons would have to be transported.

Extremely low prices on portland cement were obtained by offering the cement companies cash contracts that would increase their output 25 to 40 per cent when the plants were working only 50 to 60 per cent of capacity and stimulated the lowest competitive bidding among contractors by buying materials in large quantities for cash, thus obviating heavy credit.

The commission adopted as standard construction a cement concrete base covered with a carpet of asphaltic oil and screenings, the pavement being usually fifteen feet wide and four inches thick. About 315 miles of these roads were under contract last March.

To insure safety to travelers grade crossings are eliminated as much as possible; long sweeping curves are substituted for abrupt turns and the roadway widened. Nearly all grades are within a 4 per cent maximum, and bridges, culverts and underpasses are all made of nearly permanent materials.

Entered at Charlevoix Postoffice as second class matter.

The average man, now the controlling element in elections, votes for the highest good of himself and his family. He is not swayed so much by political oratory as he is convinced by the conditions which surround him. With idle men and with idle freight cars, with business failures and the cost of living going still higher, and now with an additional hundred million dollar tax imposed for the purpose of covering Democratic extravagance, will you not, Mr. Average Man, vote to put an end to this gross carelessness in the management of our national affairs?

Why should the hundred million dollar tax the Democrats are about to foist on the people be called a "war tax"? This country is at war with no nation on earth. We are not mixed up in the terrible European conflict at all. The truth is, the Democrats proposed this tax to cover their own gross extravagance of the people's money. The tax ought to be termed an "urgent deficiency tax," since its main purpose is to raise money to supply the deficiency in revenue resulting from the Democratic tariff law.

An aeronaut has been engaged to scatter suffragette literature in the eastern states from a balloon. What does a civilized people think of the cruelty in dropping a "Votes for Women" bomb on a noncombatant while he is putting out the week's wash in the backyard?

A DETERMINED effort to force back the German right wing is being made by a gallant corps of publishers who have had no excuse for getting out a new war map for nearly two weeks.

THEATRICAL

Eugene Walter's masterpiece and greatest theatrical success, "Paid in Full," which has delighted the amusement seeking public of the world for more than five years, has been chosen and produced by the All Star Feature Corporation for the company's fourth release. Mr. Walter's "Paid in Full" needs no introduction and the success which it has enjoyed as a play is undoubtedly destined to be continued in this film production.

Louis Reeves Harrison, whose writings in the trade journals of the moving picture industry are particularly well known and whose scenarios have been most generously endorsed, has adapted the play in scenario form and the result is a departure of considerable merit. "Paid in Full" has been produced after several weeks of careful preparation under the personal direction of Augustus Thomas, director-general of productions for the All Star Feature Corporation, and with him there has been a wonderful Broadway cast, the great majority of whom are of the original theatrical company.

"Paid in Full" can be seen by the citizens of Charlevoix at the Majestic Theatre Wednesday evening, October 14th.

Violated Game Laws.

Three Wexford county men took a chance on hunting partridges before the opening of the season and were caught near Boyne Falls last week. When arraigned in the justice court all three pleaded guilty and paid fines amounting to $78.95.

APPLE DAY

October 20 is Set Aside for King Apple—Eat One That Day.

There is a systematic movement under way in this country to popularize the apple and make it a factor in every home in the land. This is a commendable move and should receive a hearty support by everybody who is interested in building up a home industry by furnishing a domestic market for a fruit that is recognized as the preserver of health and vigor. The apple is a natural tonic and people who make a practice of eating an apple regularly seldom have any need to call in a physician. It is one of nature's restorers and too much of the fruit cannot be taken into the human system. The wonder is that people will eat so many oranges and bananas, which are at their best an artificial fruit, when the apple is so cheap and palatable.

October 20th has been designated as national apple day, when every man, woman and child in the country is expected to eat an apple for the good of the cause. By eating one on that day it is believed that the taste will linger and that each family will lay in at least a barrel to be used during the winter. If everybody would use more home-grown fruit it would not only help the health of the nation to a remarkable extent. The apple is a national fruit and deserves a wider use than it now has throughout the United States. With a bumper crop this year and prices that will be within the reach of all there is no reason why several bushels should not find their way into the cellar of every family in the country. By laying in a winter supply the market will be helped and additional encouragement will be given the grower.

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY

Extensive Plans Under Way for the Two-Day Farmers' Produce Exhibit.

Plans for the coming two-day Farmers' Produce Exhibit to be held at Vought's garage on Antrim street Friday and Saturday of this week, are about completed and a large and enthusiastic number of exhibitors are expected.

All exhibits must be in by 1:30 o'clock Friday, and on the afternoon of Saturday will be sold at auction, the proceeds to go to the exhibitors.

Farmers and fruit growers are urged to make displays this year, as the showing made will have a great deal to do with having similar days in the future.

CAPTAIN GENETT DEAD

Well Known Lake Man Passes Away at His Home in This City Tuesday.

Captain John Genett, for the past 20 years a resident of this city, died at his home on the north side Tuesday forenoon. About two months ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis and on the day of his death had another stroke, which he was unable to survive.

Captain Genett came to Charlevoix about twenty years ago from Sheboygan, Wisconsin, and during his residence here had been occupied in the fishing industry. He leaves to survive him two sons—Grover and John, Jr.—and three daughters—Mrs. Sherman Castle of Petoskey, Mrs. Harry Glossinger and Maeta Genett of this city.

Funeral services will be held Thursday at 10 o'clock from the home of his daughter, Mrs. Harry Glossinger, on Dixon avenue.

SPECIAL—Buster Brown Bread, 5c, and 10c. 9 pounds Sweet Potatoes for 25c.—Mrs. B. W. Miller. Adv. 4011

NEW WEIGHT LAW

All Packages Containing Food Must be Labeled—Effective September 1.

Public Act No. 162 passed by the state legislature at the last session requiring all packages containing food to be labeled with the correct net weight took effect September 1. It says that any package or box must be labeled with the net weight of food it contains.

Lard pails, cereals and bottles containing everything except beverages must be labeled. The solid foods must be labeled with the weight in pounds, ounces and grains, while the liquids be labeled in gallons or the fraction.

There has been some discussion as to whether or not this law will apply to packages of wheat. Many dealers trim the edges from the meat after weighing and if they did this with the new law they would be compelled to wrap the trimmings up in a separate package and send it with the rest of the meat. The same thing would apply to chickens, as most of the chickens are trussed and trimmed after weighing. If the dealers sold according to the trimmed weight they would have to charge a higher price per pound, and this would make it seem as though their prices were higher.

frightened fascination. It was the change in his tone, the difference in his working of the demand that told Hugo Loubouque's patience had been finally frayed to the breaking point, that craft and diplomacy would be things of the past did she not relinquish the papers to him now. Yet duty, love—twin shadows, writhing, yet of iron strength—held her back from obedience.

"Think, Miss Love, think of our positions. Match my strength, brute strength, against your own; measure the strength of any one of the thousands who implicitly obey me. Those waters tell no tales, give up no ghastly secrets. Think of that, Miss Love, I beg of you, then give me the little bag you wear about your neck."

His voice was full of pleading, yet his eyes held a death message which made her shudder.

"You seek to save the ones dear to you, child. You think me wicked, cruel, relentless, and I am all of these things. Forty years ago I might have done as you do now, but all the impulses of that time are dead, killed by your father; all the love I ever had, the only love, has been dead for forty years, killed by your father; all the ambition of that time of youth, the bapptism of hope, the pride of fatherhood, is dead, has been dead for forty years, killed by your father, General Sumpter Love. And you—you think that I would stop at violence to prevent your thwarting me; you think I would trade those forty years of hate for the faint splash of a girl's body on the waters of this great waste?"

The while his tones grew lower, they carried a vibrant thrill that struck at her very heart. His face was flinty as, with passionate pleading, she lifted her eyes to his. Instinctively she recoiled as a shadow fell between them. Loubouque, frowned as Captain Wetherell joined them, his eyes flashing a questioning glance at the pallid face of the girl. Then the spy bowed gravely and stepped on the deck, followed closely by the captain of the yacht.

Whispers of the men growing louder came to her until she could distinguish the angry voice of Wetherell, lifted now in surly rebellion. Lucille shrank back against the wall visualizing from the man's tones and the expression on his face. A greater horror than the waves came leaping to her mind. Hugo Loubouque was her protection from this brute. She knew it was true.

And then Captain Wetherell stepped inside her cabin, without the formality of knocking, closing the door cautiously behind him, his every movement furtive, his face wearing a sheepishly leering expression.

"What—what do you want?" Immediately the question passed her lips she realized she had made a mistake, that her tones showed fright.

"Don't be alarmed," he said softly. "I have settled with Mr. Loubouque. You need have no further fear of him, my dear."

Fear! Lucille felt a great yearning for the spy, a need of his protection even as a moment before she had thought it impossible to be in such mortal terror of any one as she had been of Hugo Loubouque and his crafty manner.

"He understands who is master of this boat now. He attempts to give me orders, to tell me to force you to give up some papers, to threaten me."

"What do you want of me?" Even as she spoke a thrill of conscious triumph surcharged her as she realized the trouble had left her voice.

Wetherell halted momentarily, held back by her charge. Then her helplessness gave him courage and he moved closer.

"Want?" he repeated, then with short, barking laugh, "I papers and I want you."

He leaped forward, clasping her about the waist with his great arms, the right hand moving toward her mouth, closing over the delicate lips and smothering her cry of wild alarm. He sprang back with a low toned oath of surprised incredulity even as her brittle laugh echoed through the cabin. Slowly, a step at a time, inch by inch, Lucille forced the man toward the door. In smothering her screams he had freed her right arm and her tiny fist, fighting against his, beating at his body, had encountered his revolver, which she deftly abstracted and had pressed against his chest.

"The papers are quite safe where they are," she murmured sweetly, the glint in her eyes belying the tones. "Come, captain; let's see how the men you have bullied like the sight of you now."

Wetherell opened his lips to curse, but there was an expression of icy determination on the girl's face. In the tense lines of her figure, in the tremulous feel of the gun against him that made him do her bidding. Only when he felt the cabin threshold beneath his feet and knew another step would bring him in sight of the crew did he halt.

It was a scant fifteen seconds the man and girl stood there, their eyes challenging. But the eyes of Lucille were steady, determined; those of the captain were turbulent, defiant. Wetherell flinched and dropped his murderous expression. Then he marched across the threshold and upon the deck before his men, while Lucille felt the joy of such a triumph as she had never known before.

As the sailors looked up and saw Captain Wetherell solemnly marching under the impetus of the revolver in Lucille's hand they straightened and stared, open mouthed, unable to believe the evidence of their own eyes. Gradually it dawned upon them that the tyrant, the brutalizer, the man they all hated and feared, had been subjugated, cowed by this slip of a girl. Whispers grew louder, louder, and she caught the approval in the eyes that constantly drew closer to her own until she was surrounded by a cordon of sailors.

Only through winning the crew to her side could she maintain her position. Backing away, but still holding the revolver level upon the captain, she cast an appealing glance about upon the men.

"Friends," she whispered, then, surprised at finding how low her voice was, swallowed the lump in her throat and continued bravely: "Friends, I am just a weak girl, and I need your help. I have two enemies upon this ship. One of them I was more afraid of than anything or anybody in the world until a short half hour ago. He will do anything to steal from me some papers I have rescued from him after he stole them from my father. My sweetheart, the man to whom I am engaged, was accused of the theft and arrested. And I have fought so hard to keep them."

"The murmur of sympathy from the men died down before a still more poignant silence, a silence that broke before a shout from one on the outskirts of the crowd. All eyes were turned in the direction of his pointing finger, and from out two great smoke spirals that seemed to come from the other side of the ocean rose slowly, majestically, the thin outlines of a huge boat. The girl, seeming disaster from that slight, read it on the sneering face of her victim.

"But I am more afraid of your captain, men," she cried, her voice thrillingly vibrant. "He came to me in my cabin and demanded the papers. He threatened me, seized me in his arms and tried to make love to me. He did this to a weak girl, men. He would treat me as he has treated you. I ask you all to protect me and yourselves from this man's brutality. You see what a coward he is. You see how he does not dare."

She was lowered into the boat.

Her voice was drowned in the chorus of shouts that rose at the welcome announcement. Wetherell's shoulders slumped still more, while his eyes darted from face to face, triumphant, cunning, ferculous. A faint booming sound reached out to them across the waters, distracting their attention. Something dark and round described a parabola from the spout of a ship and leaped through the air toward them; came a splash of water not 100 yards away, a splash followed by a cry of alarm.

"They're firing on us." Wetherell, heedless of the pointing revolver in the hands of the girl, sprang forward, feding the puzzled, frightened men.

"Mutiny!" his great voice rose in derision. "Mutiny now when you hear a girl lying to you! Mutiny now when we have a cargo of arms and ammunition in the hold for the Chinese rebels and a government warship is pursuing us! Mutiny now and put the man and woman in command who hired me to carry this cargo!"

"It's a lie!" Lucille's voice was shrill now.

"Lie, is it? Very well. Where did I pick you and Loubouque up? On the same bit of land, us the men know. If he is your enemy, how did you two happen to be at the place where I picked up the cargo? Tell them what the Chinese government does to a sailor on a boat carrying arms and ammunition which cannot be accounted for. My brave men, let this girl get you out of the noose you are running your heads into, but don't bother me any more!"

Again the fatal booming sound from the warship whose outlines were growing more and more distinct each moment; again that splash, followed quickly by a rippling hiss of air as a great cannon ball sped across their bows. The proximity of their danger threw the men into a panic. All thoughts of injustice, of chivalry disappeared instantly before the omnipresence of the menace that threatened their lives. They rushed upon Wetherell in a body, pleading, fairly on their knees, for him to take command and avert the disaster that was upon them.

Of them all he alone knew the position of the yacht, the fine points of navigation, the crooks and turns of the ocean in this vicinity.

Wetherell straightened as another cannon ball hurled across the path of the yacht. His voice rose stentorian as he whirled, pointing a finger toward the girl.

"Take that passenger's revolver from her. Bring the Chinese passenger on deck. They must not be found aboard if we are captured. Lower a fireboat from the davits and set them adrift with provisions for three days and a rush of water."

Lucille felt arms about her, the pistol whirling from her grasp and recoiling toward Captain Wetherell, who, with a malicious smile, picked it up and thrust it in his pocket.

She did not protest—there seemed no use for protest, for anything. In a haze she found herself in the tiny boat that was being lowered. As through a thicker haze she glimpsed the face of Hugo Loubouque, facing her. The creaking of the davits ceased, and the tiny craft bobbed about on the bosom of the waters. She did not move. It seemed a dream, a nightmare. Hugo Loubouque silently, grimly, seized an oar, motioning her toward the second.

"We must get out of the firing zone," he said quietly, reassurance, almost gently. Singularly enough, as she tugged at the great oar she almost felt kindly toward the spy.

HOW SHEEPMEN MAY AVOID MUCH TROUBLE

[By F. Kleinheins, shepherd at Wisconsin experiment station.]

Constant care is the price the sheep raiser must pay if he is to keep his flock free from the dreaded maggot at this time of the year.

In some sections rains and sultry weather have greatly increased the danger from this source. In the experiment station flock a number of cases of maggots have been found, which is unusual for so early in the season.

Whenever a sheep has a filthy spot on any part of its body, when it continually twists about or when it frequently bites at the wool in a certain place, it should be examined for maggots. The wool should be cut close to the skin when it is seen to be fouled and the spot treated with a weak solution of any of the coal tar dips.

The Tunis sheep has proved a valuable animal to cross on the native sheep in the dry regions of the United States. The history of this sheep in America dates from 1792, when a United States consul brought ten head to this country. According to the Arizona experiment station, this breed has done well in the dry ranges when crossed on the native breeds. The illustration shows a pure bred Tunis ram.

If maggots have already lodged on the animal the solution should be used much stronger.

Coal tar is the most effective remedy when the pests have bored into the flesh. It should be worked gently into the holes made by the maggots.

Turpentine, which is used by some farmers to kill maggots, is not recommended. It is too harsh in its action and often eats the skin entirely away, leaving the raw flesh exposed.

CHOOSING THE STALLION.

Saving on the Service Fee is the Poor—ast Kind of Economy.

[By Professor J. S. Montgomery, Montana experiment station.]

The progressive farmer who keeps brood mares is confronted with the problem of choosing a stallion to which to breed. In many cases it is merely a question of eliminating the worst, as there are many communities that are not supplied with a good stallion. In many other cases, however, the saving of $5 on a service fee plays an all important part. Fifty-five per cent of the stallions licensed in the state are grades or less than grades, which shows that too many are neglecting the matter of patronizing a good sire and are thereby reducing their profits. A saving of $5 on a service fee often means a loss of $100 or more when the colt is two years old.

When looking at a stallion it is well to ask yourself: "How much would he be worth as a gelding? If his colts are like him, will they be good market geldings? How much improvement will he make when bred to the average farm mares?" The answer to these questions will decide whether the horse is a suitable sire or not. In answering them it should be kept in mind that good feet and legs are the first essential of a marketable horse. If the stallion does not have them he cannot be expected to produce them in his offspring.

Worms In Sheep.

Sheep become infested with worms from pasturing on contaminated fields, especially those on low ground. Gasoline is the remedy for stomach worms. These worms infest lambs. Tapeworms infest older sheep and are well treated by giving freshly powdered kamala in one or two dram doses. The dose of gasoline is one tablespoonful in four ounces or more of sweet skim milk. Small lambs take less in proportion.

Concerning Oilstones.

The production of oilstones (shelud lug bones and whetstones and seyle stones) in the United States in 1913 amounted to 267,352, a decrease of $24,896 compared with 1912, according to the United States geological survey. Oilstones were produced in Arkansas, Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky, especially in Arkansas, which has led in the production for many years. New Hampshire led in the production of seyle stones, but Vermont, Ohio and Michigan also contributed important quotas.

Abrasive Garnet.

The production of abrasive garnet in the United States in 1913 amounted to 5,308 short tons, valued at $183,422, according to the United States geological survey. This was the largest in the history of the industry and an increase of 361 tons in quantity and of $20,185 in value compared with the production for 1912. The industry was confined to three states, New Hampshire, New York and North Carolina.

Here's To My Auto.

My auto, 'tis of thee, short cut to poverty—of thee I chant. I blew a pile of dough on you two years ago, and now you quite refuse to go, or won't or can't. Through town and countryside you were my joy and pride; a happy day. I loved thy gaudy hue, thy nice white tires so new, but now you're down and out for true, in every way. To thee, old rattlebox, come many bumps and knocks; for thee I grieve. Badly thy top is torn, frayed are thy seats and worn, the whooping cough affects thy horn. I do believe. Thy perfume swells the breeze, while good folks choke and wheeze, as we pass by. I paid for thee a price would buy a mansion nice, now everybody's yelling "ice"—I wonder why? Thy motor has the gripper, thy spark plug has the pip, and woe is thine. I, too, have suffered chills, ague and kindred ills, endeavoring to pay my bills since thou wert mine. Gone is my bank roll now. No more 'twould choke the cow, as once before. Yet if I had the mon, so help me John—amen, I'd buy myself a car again, and speed some more. Ex.

HOW TO SAVE JUICE FROM CANNED FRUIT.

Almost all canned fruit has a quantity of juice left over, which no one wants and is consequently almost always thrown out. It may be made into a delicious sauce for cottage and bread puddings or may be used as flavoring in tapioca. To make a pudding sauce add a little lemon if it is too sweet or a little sugar if it is too sour and dilute if too strong. Then thicken with flour mixed in with the same amount of butter. This makes a delicious sauce.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SALADS OF THE SEASON.

ENDIVE can be used in a salad, but it is much stronger than lettuce and should not be combined with so many other vegetables. When making the successful salad sometimes one dressing, sometimes another, sometimes one garnish and sometimes one flavor is wanted. The same dressing, garnish and flavor cannot be used with every summer salad.

Novelty Salad.

Stuffed Tomato Salad.—Scoop out the centers of even, firm and not very large ripe tomatoes. Leave the top cut off for a cover. Dice the firm pulp, removing some of the seeds, and mix it with chopped olives and mayonnaise dressing. Put a tablespoonful of the mixture in each tomato and replace the covers. Serve on lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Egg Salad.—This is made with hard boiled eggs—six of them—cut in quarters and arranged on lettuce leaves. Sprinkle these with French dressing and garnish with parsley. Boil hard two more eggs, chop the whites and run the yolks through a sieve. Sprinkle this egg garnish over the whole salad. A little onion juice can be added to the French dressing if onion flavor is desired.

A Delicious Combination.

Cauliflower and Asparagus Salad.—Cauliflower and asparagus can be used for salad. Both vegetables should be cooked tender and should be very cold. Separate the cauliflower into little heads. Arrange the asparagus tips in the center of a salad bowl carefully, so that they are not broken, and surround them with the cauliflower heads. Sprinkle chopped parsley and French dressing over all and set in the refrigerator to become chilled through before serving. This salad depends for its delicacy on the delicateness of the vegetables and in having them chilled.

Cheese Ball Salad.—Press balls of cream cheese between English walnuts, and serve three or four of these balls on lettuce leaves with French dressing.

For another chop large olives and mix with cream cheese, moisten with French dressing, mold into balls and serve on lettuce.

For still another, make balls of the cheese, roll them in minced parsley and serve them, with toasted wafers, on plain lettuce dressed with French dressing.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON TWO PASSOVER MEMORIALS. Mark 11:25-26—Oct. 11.

"As oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do proclaim the Lord's death till He come."—1 Corinthians 11:26.

THE subject of today's lesson is one of the most interesting features of Jesus' ministry. He knew that the Apostles did not realize that this was to be His last supper with them. Although He had intimated the nearness of His death, they had found it impossible to comprehend that any such disaster could be near. Jesus, however, with full consciousness of what it meant, was longing for the consummation of His work.

St. Peter and St. John were the two sent to make ready the Passover. In the evening of the same day, Jesus with the entire Twelve met to celebrate the Passover Supper. Every thing, we may be sure, was in exact conformity with the requirements; for Jesus and His Apostles were bound by the Jewish Law—the New Dispensation not having been ascribed to Kingdom Honors Desired.

The Apostles, believing that very soon Jesus would be enthroned as king, could think of little else but the degree of honor which they would have in the Kingdom. Perceiving their mental attitude, Jesus said to them, "The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; but ye shall not be so; but he that will be the greatest amongst you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve."

There were new standards, difficult for them to understand, and apparently still difficult for Jesus' followers to comprehend. The One who will be chief in the Kingdom will be the One who was the chief Servant in the flesh—the Lord Jesus Himself. The Master intimates that the same principle holds respecting all His followers.

The disciples had made no arrangements for foot-washing, none wishing to assume the role of servant. In that sandy country foot-washing is almost a necessity. By way of rebuke Jesus arose from the table and performed this menial service for His disciples, telling them the import of the lesson and intimating that no matter how humble a service they could render each other, they should gladly perform it.

As the supper proceeded, Jesus grew heavy-hearted and said, "One of you Twelve, eating with Me as a member of My family, is plotting My betrayal." There may have been a double object in this statement: first, it would show that Jesus was fully aware of the premeditated betrayal; second, He may have meant it as a final reproof to Judas. At very best a traitor's course is dishonorable, but doubly so when the traitor accepts the hospitality of the one against whom he is plotting.

Consternation spread amongst the disciples. Even Judas joined in the general inquiry, "Is it I?" St. John was next to Jesus, and St. Peter beckoned him to ask who was meant. The inquiry was probably whispered, heard by Jesus only. Our Lord's whispered reply was, "The one to whom I give a sop." Presently He handed Judas a sop, a mark of special interest. St. Peter and St. John thus knew the affair.

Apparently Judas soon withdrew, the record being that "Satan entered into him." The spirit of the Evil One got complete control while he weighed and balanced the matter of selling his best friend for thirty pieces of silver. It is therefore probable that Judas was not present when Jesus instituted the Memorial Supper.

Signification of the Memorial. The Memorial which Jesus instituted is separate and distinct from the Passover. As Jesus explained its meaning, the Apostles did not comprehend its significance.

But after the Pentecostal enlightenment the Holy Spirit enabled them to understand. Now we may see the import of Jesus' words, "This is My body, broken for you."

We perceive that He could not have meant that the bread and the wine were turned into His actual body and blood; for He still had His body and blood. Therefore He must have meant, This bread represents My body, which will be broken for you tomorrow; and this wine represents My blood, which will be shed for you tomorrow—My life given up.

Neither should we think that Jesus meant that special virtue would result to the disciples from eating this bread and drinking that literal cup. We should properly look far beyond and see that He meant this: Only as by faith you partake of the merits secured by My death can you have the great blessing provided for you as My disciples.

The Apostles firmly believed that Jesus' death was for their sins; and constituted the basis of their acceptance with the Heavenly Father. They realized that only as they appropriated the life of Christ would they be recipients of the promised blessings.

Harmony Grange.

Harmony Grange, No. 1451, met on Saturday evening, October 3rd, with an attendance of nineteen members and five visitors from Pine Lake and Boyne Valley granges, and to say that all enjoyed themselves would be to put it very mildly, because some of the visitors laughed until the tears rolled their cheeks.

There was a program contest between the ladies and gentlemen. Although the ladies won, the men created a great deal of merriment. The judges were Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Snyder of Pine Lake Grange and Mrs. Mary Ikens of Boyne Valley Grange. The ladies' program was as follows:

Instrumental Solo—Mrs. O. D. Willson.
Reading—Mrs. W. H. Willson.
Violin Solo—Miss Mildred Leller, who responded to an encore.

The men started their program with two selections on the victrola; after which they gathered around the organ and tried to sing, but, owing to the absence of an organist, they didn't make a very great success of it, but finally finished the song amid much laughter from the audience. Mr. Wheeler gave a comic recitation about the "Widow Malone," after which Irving Newville gave a very fine bass solo. Then followed a reading by L. D. Willson and a recitation by O. D. Willson.

The discussion "Corn Improvement by Selection" was led by O. D. Willson, followed by E. J. Coykendall and Irving Newville. The next was roll call, responded to by each man giving a recipe of his favorite dish. Three of the men—H. J. Wheeler, O. D. Willson and L. D. Willson—furnished samples of their favorite dish made by themselves. They were devil's food, baked sweet apples and candy respectively. J. A. Newville concluded the program with a vocal solo.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Wins Bronze Medal at 11th Annual Apple Show in Boston, Massachusetts.

The Western Michigan Development Bureau has been awarded a bronze medal by the International Apple Shippers Association because of the splendid exhibit of apples from Western Michigan at the fifth annual apple show conducted by this association at Boston in August last. The medal is considerably larger than a silver dollar and bears upon the face of it an apple with the monogram of the association, the name of the association and the words "Apple Exhibit Premium." On the reverse side is engraved "Awarded to Western Michigan Development Bureau, Honorable Mention Boston 1914." Twenty-four Western Michigan fruit growers sent apples to this exhibit, which was a better showing than was made by any other part of the country. There were exhibits from the New England states, Canada, the central states, the southern states and the western states.

This is the third time that Western Michigan has won honors at the shows put on by this association. In Chicago in 1912 a number of Western Michigan growers were awarded ribbons, and at Cleveland in 1913 the medal for the best showing of apples in group one, which includes the states from Maine to Minnesota, was awarded to the exhibit from the Traverse City State Hospital.

Governor Ferris Makes First Political Speech in Charlevoix This Year.

A large crowd greeted Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris at the opera house Tuesday afternoon. Many business houses closed their doors for an hour to allow themselves and employees an opportunity to hear the speech.

For about an hour the governor talked along the various phases of his administration during the past two years. He admitted that he had made mistakes, but promised that he would not make them again. He spoke at length on the conduct of the various departments and of the work that had been accomplished.

In closing he stated that he wanted another term—that he would make an effort to make possible better support to all public institutions, especially those in whose charge is given delinquents, epileptics and other dependents.

THE COUNTY WITH A CLIMATE

Farmers and Business Men Should Work for Its Best Interests

VanPelt of Chicago, Advises the Building of a Road That Would Last 100 Years.

There is a reason why the farmers of Charlevoix county and the business men in the three cities of Charlevoix county should form an organization for the promotion of the best interests of the county. In fact, such an organization is a necessity at the present time in order to band ourselves together so that we may get what is coming to us.

Charlevoix county is a county with a climate. No other county in our state, nor any county in any other state, has such a wonderfully good climate as has Charlevoix county and I honestly believe that, as a community of interests, we are free to face with the peremptory necessity of taking a deeper interest in the development of our county. It is the duty of every voter, as well as non-voter, to think seriously of the problems that confront us, in order that we may make effective contributions by word and deed to help form sound public decisions on the vital questions that pertain to the future welfare of our county. It must be Charlevoix county first, last and all the time. The things we complain of to day can mostly be traced to our own neglect of public duties, either at the polls or otherwise. I firmly believe that if this county is to be put to the front of all other counties it behooves each and every one to get up and work. None are so big that they can afford to ignore the necessities of these times, nor none too poor to lend a helping hand. The plan can be worked out and the county as a whole will be the gainer. Its results will encompass all of Charlevoix county.

A road that will last one hundred years, with no charge for upkeep, which can be built in one year or two at the outside, and which would encircle Pine Lake, would add to the value of Charlevoix county in ten years more than this entire road will cost, and now is the time to build it. Every dollar paid out for the building of this road would be paid out in Charlevoix county except for the cement.

There! I have given my plan away, which I did not intend doing at the present time, but I have had so many letters inquiring about it that I feel it is pretty nearly time I should make it known, but will not give it all away. I want the farmers to think over and decide what they would like and how much they could save with such a road, one that would last one hundred years and one that their children would have to help pay for.

It has been said of a chain (and truly so) that it is as strong as its weakest link. So is a road. Just as big a load, or small rather, as can be drawn through the worst piece of road, just so good is that road. A mile or two of fairly good road is no "grounder" for a heavy load than the poorest part, but if it were good all the way, and one could haul three tons instead of a half ton or a ton, how much would a farmer add to his net profit when hauling a load of produce to market?

What I claim, and what we all know, is this: That the present way of building roads is entirely too expensive for us all. This excessive tax falls equally hard on the well-to-do as on the poor, the farmer and city man alike. There is a reason, and it stands to reason, that a couple of miles built according to the present method, between any two points, which has to be rebuilt by the time the next two miles are finished or perhaps sooner, proves conclusively that there never will be a time when the entire road will be in perfect condition, and such is the case with our present manner of road building.

Now, why should we continue to pay out our money for the building and rebuilding of such roads when a road can be built which will last one hundred years, the upkeep of which will be practically nothing for the first ten or twenty years. There is a reason for building a road that will last one hundred years. It will pay for itself. Of course road builders would have to be engaged, with competent engines, to see that it is built so that it will last one hundred years, and this can be done. Then, when we get our share from the state we will have something to show for it that will be of lasting benefit.

Compare this plan with the present way and see what a great saving could be made every year on our road tax and then add to it two important items, the saving it would be to a farmer who could haul three tons instead of a half ton or a ton and the inducement it would be to the vast number of people owning automobiles to come up here to make purchases all along the line of this road. The top of every hill, as well as every hillside, would be dotted with just as nice cottages as any we have in Charlevoix.

The country is ripe for immediate action. The devastation going on in the old country will be an inducement for our people to spend, as statistics show, $600,000,000 here instead of abroad every year, and Charlevoix county with its unequalled climate stands the best show of any place in the United States if we will give the people what they want in order to draw them here. California has spent many millions of dollars on its roads and they have not as good a climate as we have, but they take thousands of people from the eastern states who go there with their automobiles and spend their money freely.

I recognize that this is a progressive step, but progress means success and there is not a man in Charlevoix county or one who owns land bordering anywhere on Charlevoix county who would not be benefited by it, but we cannot afford to build for this purpose without building them so that they will last for one hundred years. The gravel or rock road being built now will not stand the test of the heavy automobiles. That is an acknowledged fact by all road builders, and something more expensive and durable has to be built, and the quicker we do it the better we will be off.

Yours truly,
George H. VanPelt.

MICHIGAN APPLES

Crop for 1914 Will Be 33 Per Cent. Larger Than in 1913.

The production of apples in the state of Michigan for the year 1913 was 19,356,039 bushels, which means about 6,500,000 barrels of apples. There is every indication at the present time that the crop in Michigan this year will be fully 33 percent greater than last year, and in many sections of the state the farmers are not picking the apples because it is claimed there is no market for them. Apples and potatoes to Michigan are what cotton is to the Southern States, and if the South is going to be relieved at the present time by disposing of its cotton in single bale lots in order to provide a market and to provide funds for the grower with which to meet his living expenses, why should not the Michigan producer be cared for in the same patriotic way.

A bale of cotton costs about $50.00. A barrel of apples would cost two or three dollars, at least half of which would go to the grower. If every family would immediately purchase a barrel of Michigan apples it would give an immediate stimulus to the apple growers of the State and would enable them to market this year's crop, a considerable portion of which is yet unpicked. If one million barrels of apples could be disposed of in this way within the next two weeks, it would mean the placing into circulation among the farmers of Michigan at least a million dollars and would prove a wonderful benefit in the fruit growing districts of the State. Michigan is producing fruit which in the matter of flavor is far superior to that brought in from outside States, and every effort should be used to stimulate the consumption of the home product.

1914 CROPS BEST EVER GROWN

Monthly Report Shows Prices and Production Best in History.

Average Yield of Potatoes is 176 Bushels per Acre—Wheat Yield Also Large.

The monthly crop report just issued shows that the past year has been a very good one for farmers. On top of the high prices comes the announcement that the crops are much better this year than ever.

The potato crop is a fine one, especially in northern Michigan and the Upper Peninsula, where the average yield is 176 bushels per acre. The wheat yield is also the best in many years.

Wheat—The estimated yield of wheat in the state is 18.71; in the southern counties and upper peninsula 19; in the central counties 21, and in the northern counties 16 bushels per acre. The estimated total yield for the state, sections and counties will be given in the November crop report.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in September at 89 flour mills is 271,023 and at 88 elevators and to grain dealers 267,413, or a total of 538,436 bushels. Of this amount 375,364 bushels were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties; 146,685 in the central counties; and 16,387 in the northern counties and upper peninsula.

The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the two months August-September is 3,000,000. Forty-one mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in September.

The per cent. of acreage sown this fall as compared with last year is 101 in the State, 98 in the southern counties, 107 in the central counties, 103 in the northern counties and 106 in the Upper Peninsula. The average date of sowing wheat in the state is September 19th, in the southern counties the 23rd, in the central counties the 17th, in the northern counties the 14th and in the Upper Peninsula the 11th.

Rye—The per cent. of acreage sown this fall as compared with last year is 99 in the State and central counties, 98 in the southern counties, 103 in the northern counties and 101 in the Upper Peninsula.

Barley—The estimated average yield per acre in the State is 26, in the southern counties 24, in the central counties 29, in the northern counties 25 and in the Upper Peninsula 31 bushels.

Oats—The estimated average yield per acre in the State, southern and central counties is 32, in the northern counties 31 and in the Upper Peninsula 35 bushels.

Corn—The estimated average yield in the State is 34, in the southern counties 33, in the central counties 37, in the northern counties 35 and in the Upper Peninsula 31 bushels per acre.

Potatoes—The estimated average yield in the State is 110, in the central counties 107, in the southern counties 103, in the northern counties 112 and in the Upper Peninsula 176 bushels per acre.

Beans—The estimated average yield in the State and southern counties is 11, in the central and northern counties 12 and in the Upper Peninsula 16 bushels per acre.

Blanchard Seriously Ill.

F. S. Blanchard, Charlevoix's pioneer hardware merchant, who has been suffering for the past year with acute stomach trouble, was taken with a hemorrhage last Friday, and is now confined to his room at the Hotel Elston. At this writing Mr. Blanchard's condition is somewhat better.

KEROSENE EXPLODED

When Leonard Thompson Was Using It to Start Fire Under Boilers.

Leonard Thompson, engineer on the Str. Hum, was badly burned Wednesday morning while using kerosene to start a fire under the boilers of the boat.

The Hum reached Charlevoix in the morning on her regular trip and had gone to the coal docks for coal. While loading, the fire under the boilers nearly burned out, and in an effort to make a quick fire, Thompson poured kerosene oil from a can into the fire box. An explosion was the result, the flames shooting back into his face, badly burning him, about the face, neck and arms.

PLAYED IN BLINDING RAIN

Weather Conditions Bad for Football Game Saturday at Harbor Springs.

Charlevoix Lost Game by Score 18-19—Boys Giving Good Account of Themselves.

Playing in a blinding rain and on hostile territory the local high school football aggregation were defeated at Harbor Springs last Saturday by the margin of one point. The score was 18-19.

The Harbor was represented by a formidable bunch of pig skin chasers and not until the second half when the score stood 13-0 did Charlevoix realize the precarious situation. The locals buckled down to real football—then and with a slight display of the open game, were able to cross Harbor's goal line three times, while one touch down was chalked up for the Harborites.

The field was in such condition that it was wholly impossible to drive the oval over the cross bar on tries at goal. Harbor Springs was successful in getting one over, but Durance failed in all three attempts.

For the locals Gregory at full was the most consistent ground grinder. Repeatedly he was called upon to penetrate the Harbor defense and never once did he fail to respond, with satisfactory gains. Krulik, Carey, Poole, Durance and O'Neill gave good account of themselves. Wilson and O'Connell were the most dependable men for the Harbor.

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE

Charles P. Chaddock Had Lived in the County for Forty-Seven Years.

Charles P. Chaddock of East Jordan, a pioneer resident of this county, died last week at the home of his brother in Breedsville, Michigan, where he had gone for a short visit. Mr. Chaddock was 74 years of age at the time of his death, and had lived in Charlevoix county for the past 47 years.

He was one of the earliest settlers and for nine years was the first marine engineer of the inland lakes. He was one of the most respected citizens of this community and won the respect and love of all who knew him.

Mr. Chaddock leaves four children and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss. He was a member of Peninsula Grange and an active worker for all that would be of benefit of the community.

The funeral took place last Thursday from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Jacob Graff of East Jordan, and interment took place at the East Jordan cemetery.

BROKE HIS ARM

Beaver Island Boy Meets With Accident on Tug McCann Sunday.

Peter Burns, a young lad living at St. James, met with an accident last Sunday on the Tug McCann that will keep him out of mischief for some time.

When the McCann cleared from the island Sunday for a trip to Charlevoix, Peter hurriedly made up his mind to board the boat and was not discovered until Charlevoix harbor was in sight, as no passengers are carried on tugs of this kind.

Lake Michigan was very rough Sunday and the boat rolled and pitched a good deal. Peter was standing in the bow of the boat and in some manner lost his balance and fell against the towing post, breaking his arm. Dr. Armstrong reduced the fracture and Burns was taken to his home at St. James the following day.

Fine Growth of Alfalfa.

If anyone is looking for a fine growth of alfalfa it can be found on the property owned by the school district on the south side. Sample of alfalfa sowed the 25th of June, with stalk measuring all the way from three and one-half to five feet were brought to this office the first of the week by E. S. Stacks, who had the preparation of the ground under charge. Mr. Stacks says the alfalfa crop which was sowed at this time has made a remarkable growth, and next year will produce several cuttings.

SUMMER SCHOOLS

Teachers Spend the Summer in Better Fitting Themselves for Their Work.

It has not been many years since there was a general idea that colleges and schools must be closed throughout the summer. There seemed to be a feeling that good work cannot be done in the summer time, or that students would not attend. At the session recently closed there were enrolled at the normal schools and universities as follows: University, 1,600 students; State Normal College, more than 1,500; Western State Normal, 800; Central State Normal, 660; Northern State Normal, 420; Ferris Institute, 1,000. It is a significant fact, that more than 6,000 students were taking the work during the summer session. It is significant from the standpoint of the institutions in that during this session the cost of operation is far less than at any other time of the year, on account of heat, light, etc. It is significant from the standpoint of the students that they are taking the opportunity offered by their general vacation for making further preparation and increasing their efficiency. Never before has the state been getting so large returns for the money the taxpayers are putting into the state educational institutions. And never before have the teachers been so well prepared for their work in the public schools of the state, as this larger use of the state institutions has brought about and made possible.

MONEY SAVING ADS.

Offers of Great Bargains Made Each Week in Columns of This Paper.

The man or woman who makes a weekly practice of reading the advertisements in this paper is the one who knows where to shop economically, where the best values are offered for the least expenditure of money.

Our merchants are not spending their money for advertising space in this paper without having something enticing to offer you.

They are not spending this money with the expectation of making a few sales at large profits. They could not survive under such conditions.

They have marked their goods down to the lowest possible margin of profit, and are depending upon their advertisements to bring their offering to the attention of the great mass of the people. It is the most effective method of publicity they can employ.

They are depending entirely upon the up-to-date mercantile policy of many quick sales at small profits.

It will more than pay you to read the advertisements carefully every week.

FARMING AND FRUIT CULTURE

Progress in Charlevoix County Along This Line Most Pronounced.

Farmers' Produce Exhibit Said to Be One of the Best Ever Held in the State.

Charlevoix has been put on the map by one of the biggest, best and most enthusiastically received produce exhibits in the history of this section.

In former years Charlevoix merchants had put on two one-day exhibits, which proved more or less a success. Last spring the idea of making this annual event a two-day affair, was suggested, and a small group of enthusiastic hustlers got together and began to formulate the plans.

The plans were well laid and Friday and Saturday's exhibit was the result. Business men and farmers worked together. Although only a small amount of cash was available, there was a big fund of energy, good judgment, and hard work, and brains count. The result showed that this section of Charlevoix county is in the ranks of the progressive counties of the state that are alive to the advances in farming and fruit culture and the well-banded progress that comes from hearty co-operation of city and country for the welfare of the entire community.

At 1:30 on Friday afternoon the exhibits were practically all in the building and those in charge soon had them listed and in place. It is the opinion of those who saw the exhibit and none better was ever held in the state. Bushels are carefully selected apples, of many varieties adorned the shelves, as well as fine specimens of pears, vegetables of all kinds, grain, etc. Altogether there were 394 entries. That Charlevoix county could produce the best that could be grown was in evidence throughout the building.

The attendance both days was large, especially on Saturday, when the large and roomy garage was filled to its capacity. Friday evening's lecture given by John H. Gibson of the West Michigan Development Bureau, at the Charlevoix theatre, while most instructive, was not well attended on account of the rainy weather.

Many took advantage of the opportunity to eat their basket dinners in the Ayers' building, where free hot coffee was served them by C. Danto & Son. The sale of the articles on exhibit commenced at 1:30 Saturday afternoon. Practically everything was sold, the highest bushel of apples bringing $1.90 and the total amount of exhibits sold amounting to over $150.00.

A fine exhibition of registered and grade stock was made on the vacant lot near the court house by Wm. Withers, H. E. Cobelent, Elmer Ingalls and R. W. Paddock.

All fruit was judged under the score card system, which resulted as follows:

LUCILLE & LOVE THE GIRL of MYSTERY

SYNOPSIS

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, international spy, from General Love, whom Loubeque hates. In Manila, Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille nurses him to an attempt to recover the papers.

Lucille gets the papers, but the ship is wrecked. She is cast ashore on a Pacific island and is taken by a native chief to his hut to nurse his sick child.

The native child is restored to health, and the grateful natives idolize Lucille. Loubeque, also cast ashore, tries various plans to recover the papers, but in vain.

Loubeque, baffled, forges a message from a neighboring chief to lure Lucille away from her friends. She falls into a pitfall, losing the documents.

Loubeque's native aid steals the papers from his master, and Lucille takes them from the native after he is killed by a lion. She finds and follows an underground passage to the jungle.

Lucille falls into the hands of a tribe of ape men, whose leader drops a necklace of priceless rubies, which she takes. She and Loubeque are rescued from the island by a yacht commanded by Captain Wetherell.

The girl and Loubeque are set adrift in an open boat by Wetherell after she repulses the captain's advances, and he takes the papers.

CHAPTER XI.

In an Open Boat.

THE great copper ball of sun squatted comfortably upon the horizon's rim, battenning into itself and surveying with tolerant contempt the tiny bobbing craft in which were Hugo Loubeque and Lucille. The tiny yacht was showing its heels in grand shape to the battleship, and the guns from the great boat were roaring in real earnest now, as it was evident that the battleship had no intention of obeying the signal to haul in.

The pair who had fought one another so cordially stared at the scene until both boats melted into the sun, below the sun, then dropped beyond the horizon.

Hugo Loubeque was watching Lucille narrowly. Their predicament seemed not to worry him. "The fact that the captain of the battleship had consigned himself and his enemy to such a fate was of little account. Life to him had been a succession of dangers equally appalling, and he was still alive.

"The papers, Miss Lucille," Loubeque said quietly, "will you kindly give me the papers to take care of?"

The papers! Then the spy did not know that Captain Wetherell had possessed himself of the precious bag he had so splendidly misjudged the fate that had been given him, had so misused the marvelous brain. Again came that feminine instinct to proselyte, and again did a glance at his determined face make her desist. She would fight and fight and die fighting to prevent him accomplishing his aim, but, to save her, she could feel no hatred against this one who would wreck those she held most dear.

"You still have hope," she murmured, anxious to hear him answer in the affirmative.

"Hope!" he laughed aloud. "Child, it is written in the stars that I shall not fall, cannot fall. You have read my diary. You know what I have done to accomplish my ends. I have overthrown notions, have thousands at my feet. And all for what? That when I struck at the man I hated there should be no chance for failure. And now the last chance has been overthrown. I faltered, Lucille. I faltered when I should have put you out of my path forever; when I should have made an end to your interference.

Besting has intervened, Lucille. I know it, feel it—in my heart."

She watched him, fascinated, as he coolly rose and examined the provisions apportioned them, counting each biscuit, testing the water keg.

"By stinking there is enough for three days," he said quietly. "I think it would be better to wait till morning." He drew his coat off and passed it to her, frowning down her reproaches at the deprivation. The want of it made her realize for the first time that she had been chilled through by the cold night air and she flushed him a look of gratitude, watching him as he bent over a slip of paper after a long scrutiny of the stars.

Then she slept.

She woke to a sensation of pain in her head, as though some giant weight rested there, pressing down as though to crush the forehead. For a moment she did not realize where she was, stared about her perplexedly, tried to identify the gentle, undulating motion of the boat, the soft sweeping sound of the waters. Then her eyes met the melancholy eyes of Hugo Loubeque.

The sun was bending down upon them fiercely, as though it would consume those hardy intruders. Her head ached, when she would have spoken, she found her tongue swollen, her voice thick, her lips parched.

"Water—please," she stammered, then glared in horror at the international spy's downcast face. Loubeque moved carefully to her side, placing his hands upon her arm.

"There is no water," he said gently. "In these harry they put an empty keg in the boat. It is the test of fate, my dear. Try not to think of it—try."

He did not push for the pity within him at her brave struggle not to show her fear, her pain. Her lips trembled as she tried bravely to smile, then, with a determined effort, she sat up again. Her head ached maddeningly and the sun seemed to fairly sizzle down upon her.

"Last night when I discovered the keg was empty," Loubeque said resolutely, "I started working out our reckoning. We are well within the fishing zone of the coast. There is always a chance of being picked up. Don't fear, Lucille."

She smiled bravely, the effort only making her realize that the heat was paralyzing her facial muscles. After that she sat quite still, enduring in silence the maddening heat, the worse thirst. At times she thought she would be unable to stand it longer, that she must reach into this endless expanse of ocean and drink—drink; that she must plunge over the boat's side and allow the salt water to be absorbed by her body.

Night came and the stars, but night and stars from which all kindness had fled. She knew it would be impossible to endure the strain longer. Loubeque's silent figure was motionless. In one long, gliding motion she half rose, then dropped swiftly from the boat, the water encircling her, cooling her, lapping at her ears in soothing refrain that lulled her senses to a glorious sleep, visionless, profound. Then in a flash of sanity came the horrified face of the man who was dragging her back into the boat. Darkness, blank, impenetrable—slumber, golden haunted—sun and desert with mirages of water that receded before her lips—light of mingled happiness and triumph in his eyes—a look that brought dimly back to her the memory of certain things yet to be accomplished, but which she had not the strength to completely recall, a look so transitory that when she fought her eyes wide open he was gone, and she was conscious of being in a strange place, a black figure rising from the corner, then slumber once again.

Instinct forced her finally from the lethargic slumber, the instinct common to all higher forms of animals of protecting one's treasure. Her hands groped at her neck, where a slight tug had awakened her. Something brushed across her hand when she forced her eyes open, the figure she remembered to have seen in the corner was still squatting there, a figure that might have been hunched upon her for the burning eyes fastened upon her. Nervously she flinched at her neck, the feel of the ruby necklace meeting her fingers and puzzling her for a moment before it started a chaotic chain of recollections that finally marshaled themselves in semblance of order.

Out of the delirium of fever she fought remembrance of all that had happened since Hugo Loubeque dragged her back in the boat, recalled vividly from the subconscious brain that had attained ascendancy during that harrowing period, his tender nursing of her, his denial, his stern self-mastery when the blazing sun, the thirst, the hopelessness would otherwise have compelled him to give up the fight; and then the fishing boat, the blessed relief of water, the breaking of the fever and consequent repelling of burned out nerve fibers, the arrival in this house and the spy's leave-taking.

A cat and mouse game she played for two days with the silent Chinese woman nursing her. The woman had discovered the necklace, and Lucille knew she was constantly after it.

Short periods of time there were when the nurse would sleep listlessly and then Lucille walked warily up and down the floor, gradually regaining perfect power of locomotion. That necklace meant everything to her in this strange country. It meant the ability to travel, to do anything she pleased in her fight to regain the precious papers that meant honor and liberty to her falsely accused sweetheart.

And with the return of strength came a terrible uneasiness, a great fear. Hugo Loubeque, tender though his care of her had been, had left immediately she was out of danger, and she knew his motive was to seek the papers that Captain Wetherell had stolen.

It was dawn of the third day that the nurse slipped from the room, slipped out with a stealthiness that some how sent a chill through the girl and made her sit bolt upright in the bed, then as the door closed, spring toward the chair beside the door. The soft patter of slippers upon the floor without made her stiffen with resolution as she hid herself so that the opened door would secure her from sight. Then the door opened an inch at a time, slightly, cautiously, while the woman slipped inside the room, looked at the blanket upon the couch where Lucille should have been, then beckoned to a slender, yellow robed young Chinaman, who entered even more noiselessly than the nurse had done. The girl in hiding shuddered at sight of the vicious knife the young Chinaman passed to the woman. The man muttered a guttural deep in his throat as he crooned. Evidently the revolver he carried bothered him, for he placed it upon the chair. Lucille's fingers darted out, closing upon the welcome butt just as the woman leaped across the distance that separated her from the couch upon which the blanket bulged deceptively, driving the ugly knife down with a force that sent her off her balance. Lucille knew she could hide no longer and stepped from behind the door, the revolver leveled upon the pair, her voice shaking despite herself.

"Hands up!" she cried.

The man crouched, crouched away from her, but the sight of the girl there seemed to enrage the woman completely. Brandishing the knife wildly, she leaped forward, then lurched from side to side simultaneously with the discharge of the gun, slipping, wounded, to the floor in a heap. The man crouched still further away, and Lucille advanced upon him.

Somehow she felt no compunction now, felt no fear, only felt the necessity for immediate haste in getting away. She signalled to the fellow that he should get out of his robes instantly. Sounds of activity came from every direction. She was shaking like a runaway horse with the strain. The young fellow was equally nervous, but the revolver at his chest, inside him, Lucille forced him under the blanket, hissing a warning in his ear which he evidently understood, as it was emphasized by a meaning prod that was more eloquent than any other language—the point of a Damascus-like gun. Voices were in the hall now. Lucille dragged the body of the woman under the couch and squatted in the woman's place just as the door opened and a head was poked inside. She mimicked something inarticulate, guttural, peevish voiced, and the head was withdrawn after the owner cast one glance at the figure under the blankets. He had no sooner closed the door than the girl picked the knife from the floor and ripped the blanket into strips, securely tying her prisoner and gagging him.

Then, after waiting a second at the door, mustering her courage, she stepped into the hallway and down into the open air.

The Mystery of a Voice.

IT was the sight of the ocean that braced her against the chill that threatened to send her back. She shrank her shoulders and marched steadily down the foul-smelling, dirty little street until she glimpsed a building taller than any others surrounding it and decorated with a gorgeousness of elaboration which made her forget everything save admiration for the skill and patience expended in such work. Before the door stood a closed palanquin, evidently the vehicle for a personage of great consequence from the (Continued on page 6.)

The announcement that Postmaster General Burleson favors a change in the rural delivery system whereby carriers will have to bid for the work and obtain it by bidding lower than any one else, is causing great apprehension among rural carriers all over the country. This is the old star-route system revived. Under it, the bidder would not doubt be allowed to take on as many contracts as he could handle, and every rural carrier would become the employee of the contractor, instead of Uncle Sam as he is now. In time, the contractor could become a big corporation which would fix the compensation of the men who do the work at $600 to $800 a year, instead of $1,000 to $1,200 which the Government now pays them direct, and the contractor who would get rich on the work of the carriers. The contractor would come to own the horses, wagons or automobiles and the carrier would become a mere driver. Postmaster General Burleson is also doing his best to transfer the parcel post into a freight post. Mail-order houses under such a rule would soon be delivering a bundle of shingles by mail. The weight of the parcel has already been raised to 50 pounds for certain zones, and Mr. Burleson now wants to raise the limit to 100 pounds. The threatened change to 100 pounds, postal experts say, would certainly not be a move to bring the farmers nearer their market, but one to build up the big cities at the expense of the country districts.

The new peace treaties, if we are correctly informed, mean that hereafter a country that goes to war must be able to tell what it is fighting about.

A CAMPAIGN slogan that is catching on among workingmen who voted for Wilson is, "I love my party, but Oh, you job!"

We are "Watchful Waiting" for that reduction in the cost of living the Democrats promised two years ago.

ONCE more the political war cries resound.

MEANWHILE the days go on contracting.

FOR NIGHT TIME PROTECTION

War Ships Surround Themselves With a Circle of Brilliant Acetylene Lights.

Battle ships actually hurl these light buoys far out on the water—using specially constructed apparatus for the purpose. These light buoys are constructed to light up automatically the instant they fall. They give an intense white light that would show up any craft attempting to enter the circle. These marine lights are similar to the 2,000 candle power Acetylene lights used by fire chiefs in the big cities. Both kinds generate identically the same Acetylene used extensively for lighting and cooking in country homes.

GOOD ROADS AS INVESTMENTS

The Cost and Returns of Improved Highways.

LAND VALUES INCREASED.

Farmers Find It Possible to Work All Their Land With Profit as Soon as Improved Roads Furnish a Cheaper and Easier Way to Market.

Approximately $200,000,000 was spent last year on public roads in the United States, according to statistics prepared by the United States department of agriculture. In 1904 the total was only $70,000,000. In nine years, therefore, the increase has been over 250 per cent.

This awakening to the importance of good roads has, experts say, been due largely to the principle of state aid to counties and other local communities. New Jersey began the movement in 1891, when it passed its state highway law. Massachusetts and Vermont followed a year later, but other states were slow to move. In 1904 only fifteen had state highway departments; today there are only six that have not.

The value of this state aid is, however, not to be measured by the figures alone, for the bulk of the money comes from the counties and townships. Last year local communities contributed, in round numbers, $150,000,000, as against appropriations from state treasuries of $50,000,000. The true importance of this $200,000,000 lies in the fact that it means expert supervision of the expenditure of a considerable portion of the vast sum of $200,000,000. The best engineering skill is available for all works of importance, and there are co-operation and a constant stimulus to further improvements. The money contributed by the state does not only build more roads; it makes better those that other money builds.

At the present time there are in the United States 23,711 miles of roads improved either wholly or in part by state aid. Of the 22,354 miles of roads in the United States, 231,771 miles, or approximately 10 per cent, are classed as improved.

From material gathered by the United States department of agriculture it is now possible to prove not only that good roads are a profitable investment, but to determine exactly what dividends they pay. An investigator assigned to this problem in any given locality first ascertains the extent of the territory that is tributary to any main road, much as one might ascertain the territory tributary to some river. The next step is an accurate estimate of the total products of this territory. Of this quantity a certain portion is consumed on the farm; the rest is shipped over the road in question. The whole calculation can then be checked by investigators at the shipping point to which the road leads. The investigator is eventually able to state positively the cost of hauling (on of produce on that road, to express in terms of those "ton miles" the freight traffic on the road and, finally, the total cost to the community served by the road of hauling its goods to market. Armed with these data, it is easy to decide how much money can be profitably spent in improving the road and what are the returns that the investment yields to the community.

These returns are of various kinds. First and foremost is the reduction in the actual cost of hauling, the plain fact that it takes less time and labor to haul a load over a good road than over a poor one. Less obvious is the effect of improved roads in increasing the total output of a community. In the case of one county in Virginia, where particularly thorough records have been kept, this output was more than double. The farmers found that with a market always and readily accessible to them it paid to work the land to its maximum production. This explains the very remarkable rise in farm land values which nearly always accompanies road improvement.

WHAT TO EAT TODAY.

DINNER MENU.
Vermicelli Soup.
Parsnip Fritters.
Boiled Green Corn.
Sirloin Steak in Gravy.
Lettuce and Deviled Cheese Salad.
Frozen Custard.
Coffee.

WITH steak one may serve almost any vegetables. A nice dinner may be made up with the vegetables suggested here.

Seasonable Vegetables.
Parsnip Fritters.—To make the fritters cook parsnips forty-five minutes in boiling salted water and then drain, plunge into cold water, when skins will be found to slip off easily. Wash, season with butter, salt and pepper, shape into small flat cakes, roll in flour and saute in butter.

Boiled Green Corn.—Remove the outer husk which incloses the corn and put the cobs into a large stockpot in boiling unsalted water. Cover and boil. When tender drain, sprinkle with salt and serve with melted butter. If desired when removed from the pan the corn may be sliced from the cob with a sharp knife and reheated with a little butter, milk, pepper and salt.

Quickly Fried.
Sirloin Steak With Gravy.—Take sirloin steaks one-fourth of an inch thick, season with salt and pepper and fry in butter over a quick fire on each side just for a minute. Make a pan gravy with beef extract and chopped parsley. Serve with dried French fried potatoes.

Lettuce and Deviled Cheese Salad.—Beat a cream cheese to a cream, adding cream if necessary to accomplish this. Season with one teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, one tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, a few drops of onion juice, a little salt and a teaspoonful of paprika. Mix well and let stand where it will get cold and hard. Make into little balls and serve on lettuce leaves with or without a garnishing of sliced cucumbers or radishes. Serve with French dressing.

A Cooling Dessert.
Frozen Custard.—One quart of milk, three eggs, one tablespoonful of cornstarch, three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, a pinch of salt and flavoring to taste. Put the milk in top of double boiler. Beat the eggs, sugar and salt together, add to the boiling milk slowly, stirring all the time (do not let it boil). Remove from the fire. When cold add the flavoring, put into freezer, pack with ice and salt. Freeze same as ice cream.

HAND VERSUS MACHINE.

Old Time Methods Linked With Skill Are Sometimes Best.

A remarkable example of old time methods by which well trained men secure accuracy and a low cost of output, with very simple machines, retaining old customers and securing new ones in the face of modern competition, was located recently by the American Association in London. It was in 1854 that William Ford Stanley rented a small shop and parlor on Great Trenchard—originally a rural turnstile leading to the sheep pasture in Lincoln's Inn Fields—for about $3 a week. There are some antiquaries who believe that the real "Old Curiosity Shop" was here instead of across the common. Here Mr. Stanley invented the T square, with the blades screwed on the head instead of being mortised in, as formerly.

Here, little by little, adding a room here and there as it could be obtained in this old and crowded section of London, the business has grown and made an enviable name for itself.

It is an exemplification of the use of personal skill against specialized machinery, for in nearly every operation accuracy depends on the skill of the man doing the work—men who have done nothing else for years and years.

Here is an example of the care used in testing theodolites. This is a basement room, the structural steel columns and concrete walls showing the care taken to prevent vibration from above. The testing stands are of heavy castings to insure rigidity. Against the wall and opposite each testing stand is a telescope so arranged as to give the same effect as when looking at a fixed star in the heavens. Cross hairs are arranged in the telescope to give the effect of infinite distance, because in London, as in most large cities, it is not often possible to get such view in the open air either by day or night. While retaining many of the same methods which have been in vogue since the business started, the skill which secures their old time accuracy has also been retained, and production is possible at a cost which enables them to hold the market they have created.

MAKING AN EPIGRAM.

The Prize Winner Was Evidently a Married Man's Effusion.

The head epigrammatist of the great wit and humor factory bent over his work bench and rested his gaze upon an epigram that had been used and used until it was cracked and frazzled. "It's a shame to throw it away," he said, "for I believe it can still be turned about so that it will have a comical value. I know what I will do. I will offer a prize to the workman who brings in the best new twist." So when the workmen were gathered

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Celebrated Tuesday Evening at the Home of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Wheeler.

Thirty-eight of the friends, including the members of the G. A. R. and Ladies of the Relief Corps, met at the residence of Comrade L. H. and Mrs. Wheeler on south Bridge street on Tuesday evening, the 13th, to celebrate their golden wedding.

A bountiful supper was spread and was enjoyed by all those present. Many handsome and valuable and very appropriate presents were presented to Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler by their friends, who extended congratulations and wishing them a long and happy future.

The only regret of those present was the bad condition of the health of our honored comrade Capt. Harrison Berdan, who has now passed the 84th milestone, but is looking forward for many more years of peace and happiness in this life. One of them.

BOARD IN SESSION

Regular October Meeting of Supervisors Being Held at Court House.

Charlevoix County's board of supervisors are now in session at their regular October meeting. Committees are hard at work and within the next day or so will be able to make their reports.

The only two committees to make a report was that of the court house committee, which recommended that a new vault be built in the basement to take care of surplus records and books. The County road commissioners filed a report, showing the amount of road built so far this year, also made recommendation as to the roads to be built the coming year.

PORTABLE FIRE ESCAPE.

Life Saving Device That Runs on Track Suspended from Cornice.

A recently patented fire escape that can be moved from window to window of a burning building consists of an extension ladder suspended from trolley wheels, which run on a suitable track permanently attached to the building just below the roof cornice.

A person standing on the ladder or on the ground can move the fire escape to any point where it is needed, and in the case of flames bursting out of a window the ladder can be pushed aside so as to enable those on it to descend in safety.

Misplaced Sympathy.

Sitting near the door in a subway car was a middle aged man reading a newspaper. At one station there got aboard this car a mother and her son, a small boy maybe four years old.

As those two came through the doorway and into the car the small boy, quite by accident, of course, hit the middle aged gentleman reading the newspaper a good, smart kick on the shin, causing the man to wince, while the boy's progress was checked for a moment by his thus kicking up against something.

The mother looked down, but she said nothing to the man. It was to the boy she spoke:

"Did you hurt yourself, dear?"

Which seemed a case of misplaced sympathy.—New York Sun.

The City and the Child.

New York city—the length and breadth of Manhattan and Boston, from the Fenway in three directions to the water front, are as unfit for a child to grow up in as the basement of a china store for a calf. There might be hay enough on such a floor for a calf, as there is doubtless air enough on a New York city street for a child. It is not the lack of things—not even air—a city that renders life next to impossible there. It is rather the multitude of things. City life is a three ringed circus, with a continuous performance and interminable side-shows and peanuts and pink lemonade. It is jaded and jostled and trampled and crowded and hurried, and it is overstimulated, spinning and premature.—Suburban Life.

Studied Insult.

"I wish," said the waiter who had been serving the man with the grim face and the pert looking girl, "I could think of some way to get even with that fellow." He complained about everything I put on the table and growled about every move I made. "What did his bill amount to?" "A dollar and ninety cents." "And how much money did he hand you?" "A two dollar bill."

"It's easy. I have it in two nickels when you return his change."—Chicago Herald.

rich silk robes that overflowed the sides of "Lucille" came a hoarse whisper. This time she knew she had made no mistake. She even identified the direction from which the voice came. But surely nobody save Hugo Loubeque knew her in this place, and Hugo Loubeque—

Something small and compact felt at her feet and she stared at it wonderingly, incredulously, recognizing it for the diary of Hugo Loubeque, the international spy. The sound of the closing door made her hurriedly snatch it from the ground and conceal it beside the ruby necklace. Then she shrank back against the side of the house, eyeing the portly, sawn-faced Chinaman who came slowly and unhesitatingly toward her.

Evidently the owner of the palanquin, a personage of great circumstance from his dwelling and personal attire, she judged. Her fingers pressed against the diary and considered the matter. The touch of them gave her a swift idea and she cautiously drew the necklace from about her neck, detaching one from the strand and knowing the stout hair wire so none should escape because of the loosening. She looked at the piece for a moment, recalling her father's contemptuous sentence regarding the corruptibility of the Chinese, then advanced toward the man just as he reached out to enter his vehicle.

His face was impassive as he stared blankly at her. Finally in desperation she held out the ruby to him. He turned it over and over in his fingers. His eyes were fairly glowing when he lifted them once more and then he nodded, no word moved toward the palanquin and stepped in side, averting herself under the silk robes and hurrying to the corner where the owner entered.

Her thoughts ran riot during that trip. Where and the diary of the spy come from? Surely not Loubeque, yet none but Loubeque was familiar with her name. Possibly its possessor had been a prisoner.

Whether or not one of his crew they had possession of the diary and precious mementos. But why confined? What could it all mean? She racked her brain for an answer, was so absorbed in the puzzle that she did not notice until she heard a familiar voice calling with the owner in Chinese. But she would have recognized that voice in any quarter of the globe, would have known it anywhere, for it was the voice of Hugo Loubeque, international spy and her enemy.

His tones were light, happy; he appeared satisfied with himself and with life. She looked out to find herself upon a quay, a great boat docking there, its hold being filled by coolie stevedores. And, stepping up the gang-plank, a blond smile upon his face, moved Hugo Loubeque.

Lucille thrilled. If Hugo Loubeque smiled, he was happy. If the spy was happy it was because he had secured the papers once more. If he stepped upon this giant boat it was because the papers were in his possession. If they were in his possession then she would follow.

But the diary? Her fingers told her that this was no phantasm, no figment of an overwrought brain. She held the diary and Hugo Loubeque was boarding the boat. If he boarded the boat it was because he was not yet aware of his loss. Whichever it was, she must follow him. She must be aboard the boat when it sailed.

Through the days when Loubeque watched Lucille hovering about the black borderland of death in the house to which he had been recommended by his subordinate, the governor of the province to which the fishing smack that rescued them bore them, his brain had fed upon one thought. The papers in the possession of Captain Wetherell must be found. But how?

The day before he saw Lucille was out of danger, the problem was answered for him by a call from the governor of the province, in whom he recognized a man he had been instrumental in aiding, and one who feared him greatly.

Instantly it was all clear to him. Here was one he need fear nothing and confession to him would be of no avail. He had found out, aboard the boat, exactly where the shipment of arms was to be made. He knew Wetherell might go hundreds of miles out of his course before the vengeful man of war, but he also knew that the goods must be landed at the designated place before he received his pay.

Leaving a sum of money with the nurse Loubeque decided that when Lucille recovered she would be sufficient to pay for her word to her people and escape from this, the last of her adventures. He led a company of picked soldiers aboard the fishing craft provided for their transport and sailed toward the spot where the delivery was to be made.

There in a bay islet he arrived barely a day before the yacht put in with its ill-fated cargo. The skirmish with the landing crew lasted a scant hour, but already the spy had discovered that Wetherell, the man he wanted, was not with the outfit and he began laying plans for taking the yacht.

Captain Wetherell, impatiently waiting for his men to return for a second load, had finally tired and was bringing it ashore himself. From the shore suddenly shot out the boat his mate had taken in, but instead of the crew he knew so well the crew were now being manned by Chinese soldiers. In a minute he found the side of his boat rattling against that of the other, with soldiers piling recklessly upon his small crew.

He caught a flash of Loubeque's face about him, saw that resistance was utterly useless. Swiftly his hand sought the precious bag in which were the papers he had stolen from Lucille. He drew it open hurriedly, the sealed packet of papers—which formed the major bulk of his contents and the diary falling at his feet. He felt Loubeque's eye upon him, caught a flash of the spy as he sprang at him, and with a derisive laugh hurled the bag with the heavy packet overhead.

Without a second's hesitation the spy was in the water after it. Wetherell fairly choked with rage as he saw the man he hated close his hand over the bag. Then he was conscious of the diary still in the bottom of the boat and, picking it up, thrust it in his shirt.

Wetherell scowled heavily as Hugo Loubeque, having been helped into the boat, brushed against him his face smiling grimly as he looked down into the eyes of the yachtmaster.

"Very foolish, Wetherell. Now, I think the sight of you making a little boat up a hill with a swordsmen, he did you studying the chances of place to take that boat from your shoulders would be about as pleasant as anything I'd care to look at."

Wetherell did not answer. Only, even after being bound, the feel of the diary that had dropped from the bag gave him some comfort.

The yawning side of the great vessel stood open before Lucille, the coolie stevedores trundling their great loads of merchandise across the wharf and disappearing within, as though swallowed up forever.

Lucille was suddenly unde conscious of the fact that she was very weak. Nervously she fingered the ruby necklace about her throat, trying to think of some way another of the precious stones might be made to work its magic influence. She could buy a passage with it, could bribe many aboard the boat, but she must not be seen by Hugo Loubeque.

Fiercely she fastened her little teeth in her lower lip. Hugo Loubeque had the precious papers in his possession else he would never have smiled so serenely to himself as he boarded the boat. She had his diary, but it could not be used against him now. There would come a time when it would prove of the utmost value, but not now. What could she do?

She Shrank Away in the Shadow of a Packing Case.

peared beside the pair, offering to translate the soldier's words.

"He is hunting an American girl I left in the town. It appears she shot and wounded her nurse and bound a Chinese soldier taking his clothes and making her escape," said the spy.

"Well, there's no such person aboard," firmly retorted the officer of the ship.

Again Loubeque turned to the soldier but the man shook his head vehemently.

"He must search the vessel. Those are his orders," interpreted the spy, then, "you really can't blame him, captain."

The officer nodded consent, adding grudgingly that he would stand for anything that did not entail delaying the boat's sailing on schedule.

As the eavesdropping girl watched the soldiers march the gangplank and disappear in different parts of the boat according to the instructions given them by their superior, she could see from the spy's words that he would not delay his own departure to assist her; that once more his motive of revenge was all dominant in his nature; that tenderness for the daughter of the woman he loved would never again interfere with the carrying out of his plans.

Surely, some power greater than that of even the international spy was looking over and defending her! She loved her head in mute gratitude.

She was roused from the mood by a hurried clamor aboard the boat. The coolies were working madly now, while upon the deck she saw signs of activity that told her the ship was about to get under way. Under the lasting memory of a loss, five stevedores were rushing toward the bales behind which she was concealed. Lucille knew the time had come for her to act without any further flinching.

In two swift, catlike leaps she had reached the yawning side of the boat. For just a second she hesitated before the terrible blackness that met her eyes there, then, with a little shrug, she stepped inside, darting about between piles of merchandise, leaping further and further away from the voices that reached but dimly to her now, hiding away at every slightest sound.

LIVE STOCK NOTES.

Caution the sheep flock has as much to do with the improvement as care and feeding.

The raising of poor lambs is one of the most unprofitable of farm operations, as the raising of good ones is one of the most profitable.

Newly purchased hogs should be carefully examined for vermin and should not be turned out with the herd until they are known to be free from these pests.

Pigs like variety and make much more satisfactory and profitable growth when this fact is kept in mind.

The boar needs good food and plenty of exercise.

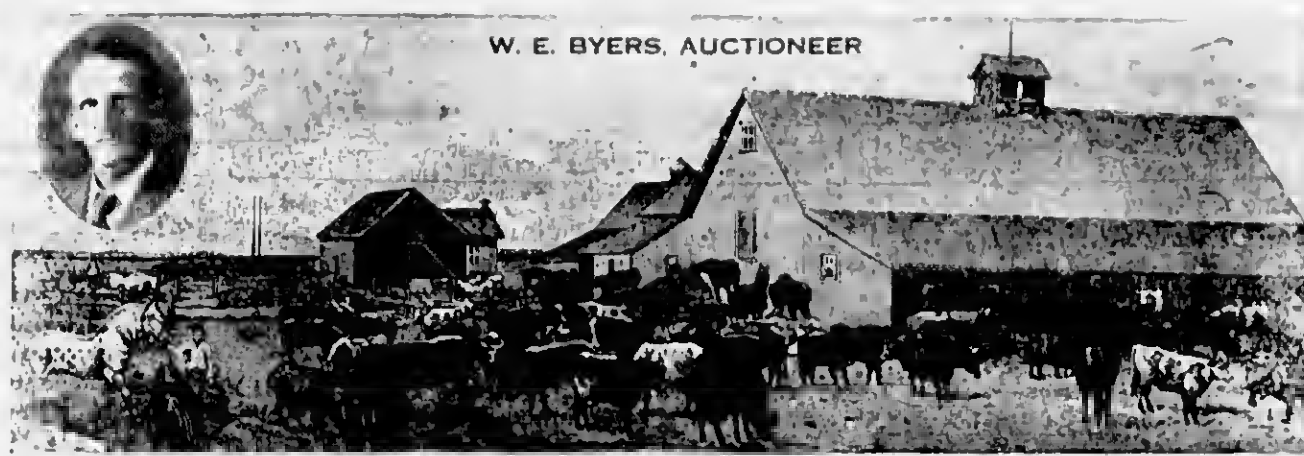

When the lambs are about four months old they will graze by their dams and can safely be weaned.

An Ownerless Million

How an Immense Sum of Money Can Cause Its Possessor Annoyance and Trouble.

By THOMAS HOWELL HEATH

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

I jumped on the Congressional Limited one winter afternoon as the train was moving out of the Washington station.

It was a hurried business trip to New York, of which I had only an hour's notice. I had the afternoon papers and a small hand bag.

When shown to my seat in the parlor car I noticed that the chair next to mine was occupied by a woman; also that she was pretty, aristocratic looking and dressed fashionably.

So far as could be seen, she had nothing in the shape of bundles or baggage with her except what appeared to be a lot of stationery wrapped in pink paper and tied with a red cord, which she kept on her lap and carelessly handled from time to time.

Just before the train reached Philadelphia she got up, stood a moment apparently undecided and then, turning to me and extending the box in pink, surprised and pleased me by asking with a smile, "May I trouble you to look after this?"

"Certainly, certainly, with pleasure," I replied as, soon as I could get my wits together, but she had not waited to hear.

She had left the pink covered box in my hands and had gone, I supposed, to the buffet car.

After the train had left Broad street station and the woman had not returned I asked the porter what had become of her and was astonished when he said that she had got off at Philadelphia.

It was evident that the pink covered box had been intentionally left with me, but why, and what did it contain?

Great as my curiosity was to know the contents of the box, I would not unwrap and open it in the car, and when I did open it in the privacy of my room in a New York hotel I was very glad that I had pinned that restraint upon myself.

A MILLION DOLLARS ALL IN MY POSSESSIONS.

What sort of stationery do you suppose was in that pink covered box?

Ten packages of crisp, new United States $1,000 gold certificates, with a band of paper around each package as they used them in banks. Upon each band was written "One Hundred Thousand Dollars," 100 notes in each package, a grand total of $1,000,000.

My first impulse was to take the million dollars and go to Europe on the first available steamer.

Impulse, did I say? It was really a calm determination that lasted through the greater part of the night and included the selection of a steamer sailing the next day and was not abandoned until my avarice was convinced that a large reward, at least 10 per cent of the whole, perhaps double that, would be offered by the owner of the money, who would be sure to advertise for its return.

The decision that it would be better to have one-tenth of a million as a reward for honesty than the entire million as a weight upon my conscience was not easily arrived at, but, once reached, it was cling to with all my strength.

Sleep was entirely out of the question with $1,000,000 in cash in the room with me. I spent the night thinking, and such thoughts!

In the morning I tore up the box, which had really originally contained stationery, and carefully dropped the pieces into a waste pipe. The money I wrapped in my nightshirt, which I put in the hand bag.

This hand bag was near being the death of me that day.

I ate breakfast with the hand bag in my lap and one hand always touching it and attended to the business which had carried me to New York without ever once letting it loose, and I am sure I never look my eyes entirely away from it once while on the train returning to Washington.

I thought of the New York train

there was no advertisement in any of them concerning the loss of a large sum of money.

Another sleepless night in the room with a million dollars followed my return to Washington. The next morning I hired a box in a safe deposit vault and got rid of the awful and worrying responsibility.

I waited a week, and still there was no advertisement of the lost fortune. My associates began to comment on my increasing restlessness and nervousness and to suggest that I would better take a rest.

I intended to take a long rest and a luxurious one as soon as the ownership of the million dollars was settled.

Perhaps the money was stolen property and the thieves were afraid to advertise its loss. I concluded to advertise for the owner myself.

After many advertisements had been written and torn up I decided on this:

Large sum of money left on Congressional Limited between Washington and New York. Will be restored to owner upon proper identification. Address Caretaker, P. O. box 1211, Washington, D. C.

For a full week this was run in all the daily papers of Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York at an expense to me of $35.70. I took receipts from each paper and preserved them as souvenirs of my stay in milliomredom.

I had any number of answers, but none of them got within a million miles of my million.

Having sought diligently for the owner of the million dollars and spent my own good money freely in advertising, without success, was I not now the legal and legitimate owner of it?

That question had my poor brain doing a continuous twenty-four hour stunt. I answered it in the affirmative twenty times a day, but the plagu thing wouldn't stay answered.

I began to feel quite as worn and haggard as I looked and to wonder why the possession of a million dollars, with the probability that it would all be mine growing into a certainty, did not bring me more pleasure. I asked myself whether all millionaires were as much troubled about their money as I was.

Six weeks had passed since the million dollars was placed in my possession, and I began to make plans as to what I would do with it. I no longer expected the owner to turn up.

I had not mentioned the money or the suit number in which it had come into my possession to any one and was still undecided as to how I should account for my sudden wealth when I began to spend the money.

After mature deliberation I decided to make my appearance as a man of wealth gradually.

I would make a deposit of $10,000 in one bank.

After taking ten of the $1,000 notes from my safe deposit box it occurred to me that it would be a good idea to carry them to the United States treasury and get notes of smaller denominations for them.

On reaching the cash room of the treasury I handed the ten $1,000 notes through the wire wicket teller's window and asked that he give me fifties for them.

It did not surprise me to notice a rather astonished and startled look on the teller's face as he took the notes or that he should step to one side and examine one of them carefully through a glass.

I did not suppose that ten $1,000 notes were passed through the wicket very frequently by any one except runners for the banks; consequently it seemed the natural thing that they should be carefully examined.

His deliberation, however, in counting and recounting these fifty dollar notes was getting on my nerves, and I was about to speak impatiently to him when I felt a light touch on my shoulder and a low but distinct voice said near my ear, "I want you."

"Well, I'm here," I answered, facing the speaker impatiently. "What do you want with me?"

"I want you to go with me," he replied with a smile, without raising his voice.

"Why should I go with you?" I asked rather sharply. "I don't know you."

"No, but I think you'll go," he answered in the same exasperatingly calm tone.

"Why?" I demanded, somewhat frightened by his manner, without having any clear idea why I should go.

"Because," he said, almost in a whisper, "you are under arrest."

"What for?" I managed to ask, at the same time trying hard to think of any reason why I should be arrested.

"Trying to pass counterfeit money," he replied, turning back his coat and allowing me to see the United States secret service badge he wore.

"You are out of your head," I retorted angrily, but at the same time the awful truth flashed upon me—my million was counterfeit.

"That may be," he said as he reached for the notes, which the teller handed him, each with the word "Counterfeit" cut across its face. "You can talk about that to Chief Wilkes, Comer."

Fortunately I was well known to Chief Wilkes. He not only accepted my story, but added to it by telling me that the woman had learned from a confederate on the train that his men were hot on her trail and, being obliged to get rid of the counterfeit money somewhere, had given it to me, thereby securing her own release when she was arrested and searched immediately after leaving the train.

The chief went with me to the safe deposit vault, got the rest of the counterfeits and destroyed them. He congratulated me on getting out of an ugly predicament so easily.

To this day I am unable to say with certainty whether relief or regret was my stronger feeling over the loss of the ownerless million dollars.

A Conundrum.

What is that which is always found in place, yet always out of order? The letter "c."

A MARKET IN SPAIN.

With a Bargain in Cheese Plus the Price of the Compliments.

At early morning the market place of Medina is a rare sight, says C. Bogue Luffmann in his "Quiet Days in Spain." It is thronged with hundreds of tilted carts and pack animals, loaded with all the materials that the population requires. So universal is the practice of buying in the market square that there are very few shops, and those are both small and ill-furnished.

At a stall in the market place a bright eyed dapper little woman was offering tiny cheeses of goat's milk. A countryman examined one carefully, tucked it in his pocket and put down a real. I thought the cheese a bargain and sold to the little woman. "I'll have one," and gave her a peseta, which is four reals. She beamed and gave back two reals. I remarked, "The price of the cheese is one real."

"Ah," said she, with a winning smile, "but you are a caballero." (A gentleman.)

I enjoyed her audacity so much that I had to laugh and say, "You are a little rogue," and she, seeing that she had beaten me, curtsied and laughed as she cried, "Ah, great señor mine, you are many times a caballero!"

I do not complain. Such incidents and compliments are cheap at the price.

ROYAL DOUBLES.

Understudied Who Played the Role of Monarch in Public.

In a land of distrust like Russia it is only natural that the precautions taken should be of the most drastic order; hence the use of a royal understudy who has always been a conspicuous figure at that court. Indeed, it was the understudy of the late Czar Alexander III—a man named Komaroff—who was murdered in Moscow some years ago, when the murderer thought he had covered himself with glory by assassinating the czar.

Nicholas, like his father before him, was an understudy, and the many state functions he attended at the opening of his reign, when the relations with his people were less strained than they are today, were attended for the most part by proxy.

No monarch, however, made such frequent use of his understudy as the late Emperor William of Germany. Every day as the clock struck 12 the emperor came out and bowed on the palace balcony. It was not until some time after the emperor's demise that the secret was made known that the man who appeared daily on the balcony was the royal understudy. And the person who gave the secret away was the great Bismarck. —London Black and White.

Trinidad's Asphalt Lake.

The proverb about the folly of building on sand might be written to include the vicinity of the Trinidad asphalt lake. This remarkable body of pitch is perhaps the nearest thing to the "goose which laid the golden egg" that has ever been found, for it has the obliging faculty of replacing during the night the asphalt which has been dug from its surface during the day.

That the replenishment "comes from somewhere" was graphically illustrated a short time ago when a house located near the edge of the lake began settling on one side, not to stop until the digging of pitch in that vicinity ceased.

The pitch is dug laboriously from the lake by axes, using pick and shovel, and is carried on an overhead tramway directly to the waiting ships. —Wide World Magazine.

As a Clown Sees Us.

"It is lots of fun to watch the big crowds that throng the circus or any huge amusement place," says a famous clown. "Just as soon as they get within the doors they all grow younger except the children, and they become just a wee bit older. Highbrows call it the psychology of the happy crowd, but we clowns say it's the 'old uns getting gay.'"

"A great big crowd, no matter how old or dignified they may be in everyday life, are just about nine years when they smell the sawdust in the ring. My, it's fun to watch them! Many a time we clowns laugh at real happiness just because the 'old uns' make us laugh with their happiness." —Cinefant Enquirer.

The Business Instinct.

The business man noticed that the friend he was talking to continually examined his watch.

"Don't let me keep you," he said, "if you have an appointment."

"Oh, no," said the other. "I sent the wife to London this morning on a visit and took the precaution of insuring her at the booking office for $500. I am just thinking that I shall know in another twenty-five minutes if I have $500 or a wife." —Manchester Guardian.

Progress.

"My daughter is having her voice cultivated."

"Is it improving?"

"It's growing stronger. She used to be heard only two apartments away. Now we get complaints from the next building." —Washington Star.

Britain's Capital Crimes.

There are five capital offenses under British law: murder, high treason, piracy, arson in the port of London and attempts to destroy public arsenals.

Look Out For Them.

An evidence of how badly some people like to be "stung" is the large number of people who have this week been patronizing an Indianapolis oil concern, buying a 50 gallon steel drum full of kerosene oil for $10.00. A good 50 gallon steel drum can be purchased through our local oil dealer for $3.25 and he will be glad to fill same for 7.04 cents per gallon or $3.52 making the drum full of oil come to $6.77 and a higher test of oil at that.—Bellair Independent.

Semi-Finals Saturday.

Owing to the condition of the courts, the tennis tournament was called off last Saturday. The first matches were played Tuesday afternoon. The semi-finals will be seen on the high school courts Saturday morning.

TOPIC "FRANCHISE"

Interlocking Meeting of W. C. T. U. Held at Harris Home Friday.

The W. C. T. U. met Friday afternoon with Mrs. Frank Harris with Mrs. Agnes Rodger presiding. The devotionals were led by Mrs. Lewis.

It was decided to send five copies of the Young Crusader, four for the schools and one to be placed in the library. Also one copy of the Temperance Educational Quarterly to be placed in the library. The following delegates were chosen to attend the District Convention, to be held in Petoskey, October 27 and 28: Mesdames Alcox, Annie Metcalf, Wilkinson, Lewis, Burns, Harris, Geiken and anyone who can go are invited to go as visiting delegates.

Mrs. Armstrong had charge of the program, the topic being "Franchise". Quotations on suffrage were read and arguments discussed. It was generally conceded that, if women had the ballot, the condition of things as we find them now would be different and that women should have the ballot to clean up the dark places.

K. OF P.'S TO HOLD BIG HUNT

Game To Be Scored By Points and Losing Side to Serve Supper.

Nothing Larger Than an Elephant Nor Smaller Than a Red Squirrel to be Killed.

The final details of the much-talked-of hunt and game supper to be pulled off by members of Pine Lake Lodge, No. 122, Knights of Pythias, were taken care of at the regular meeting last Thursday night, when it was decided to hold the big event Wednesday, October 28th, and the supper on the following night.

The committee named to prepare the rules and regulations governing the hunt reported they were ready to submit their decision as soon as the captains of the opposing sides were chosen and to offer other valuable suggestions as to conducting the event. Art Alcock and A. J. Usher were then named as captains of the two sides, which are to be called the "Reds" and the "Blues." Selections were made as follows:

The "Reds," Art Alcock Captain. Jay Adams, Sam Alexander, W. R. Barney, Bert Beaudoin, Harold Bedford, Robert Bonthron, Frank Courier, Fred Coon, W. P. Fanning, F. M. Glessford, A. J. Hamilton, F. D. Hammond, B. A. Hermon, Chas. Hyers, Chas. Jefferies, Charles Lamphar, E. C. Lewis, E. V. Madison, Merrett Miller, John McCall, Oluf Nordrum, M. Orvis, R. W. Padock, D. S. Payton, L. S. See, Will Scroggie, W. Scott, L. R. Smith, F. L. Slaght, George Stafford, John Timmer, E. B. Ward, Capt. Weaver, F. E. Wood, W. P. Walker, G. E. Dutton, R. N. Faulkner, W. F. Graham, Wm. Kibbe and Judge Mayne.

The "Blues," A. J. Usher Captain. L. P. Adams, Ward Ainslie, Doctor Armstrong, J. H. Baker, A. Bergeon, W. C. Bellinger, Leo Carey, Joseph Courier, R. A. Emrey, A. L. Fitch, Chas. Gonser, O. D. Hammond, W. E. Hampton, E. J. Hiller, W. F. Johnson, R. C. Korth, Richard Lewis, Rollie L. Lewis, D. F. Meach, Andrew McCall, Harry Nicholls, V. Orvis, E. E. Orvis, W. E. Parmelee, George W. Priest, Joe Shores, Dick Shapton, L. E. Smith, Jess Smith, Lisle Shanahan, Grant Squires, N. R. Washburn, Ainos Webster, Mont Withers, H. B. Wood, Ed. Vought, Geo. Eagleton, Geo. Glados, Elmer Johnson, William Marshall and Nels Palmer.

As a matter of fairness to both sides a part of the rules and regulations are published below:

The hunt shall be held between the hours of 12 a. m. and 7:00 p. m. of Wednesday, October 28th, and shall be confined within the limits of the State of Michigan.

Any Knight convicted of hunting outside the hours named and offering game for scoring shall be fined $1.00 and sentenced to 4 hours solitary confinement in the property room and then blindfolded and kicked into Round Lake.

All game must be delivered to the committee at the Castle Hall not later than 9:00 p. m. of the above day. "Sore feet" and "all in" will not be accepted as sufficient excuse.

Hunting with rifle is strictly forbidden. German siege guns and the use of dum-dum bullets is also forbidden unless authorized by the committee, and then shall not be used within 40 miles of the Castle Hall.

Game killed by any person not a member of the order will not be accepted or scored. All game except birds shall be cleaned before taken into the Castle Hall. Any Knight taking an undressed elephant in the hall, or an undressed skunk, shall be fined $7.00.

The side securing the least number of points must properly prepare for cooking all game accepted and shall serve the same to the members of the order on the evening of the day following the hunt at 6:30. If it is the opinion of the committee that the losing side fails to serve the meal properly they shall be sentenced to pay a fine of $3.98 and serve an apprenticeship of 99 years at Adam Pfister's.

Each Knight shall wear a badge emblematic of the color of the side to which he belongs and shall retain his badge until after his game is scored.

Wolf—Timber, 1000; plains, 999; at the door kinds, 2000.
Raccoon—500; southern coon, 30; Fred Coon, special.
Skunk—No. 1, 200; No. 2, 150; human, 28.
Rabbits—Jack, 30; cotton tail, 22.
Red Squirrels—5.
Geese and Brant—200.
Ducks, Plover and Snipe—150.
Fish, Duck and Hell-divers—0.
Partridge—100.
Crows—20.
"Old Crow"—23.
Members are requested to be careful, not to shoot at "something moving," and also not to shoot non-game birds. "Safety First" will be the motto, and, lastly, don't shoot any of "Bill" Johnston's chickens.

FELL FROM TREE

Mrs. Ben Nowland Meets With Serious Accident While Picking Apples.

Mrs. Ben Nowland was quite seriously injured Monday afternoon by a fall from an apple tree while picking apples. She was on a limb, which broke, allowing her to fall a distance of some twelve feet, striking on her back, severely injuring her. The last reports as to her condition are that she was injured quite badly, although it is not known how serious the result will be.

Masons, Attention!

Charlevoix Council, R. & S. M., will be constituted Friday, October 23rd. Most Illustrious John H. McCollum of Saulte Sainte Marie and Companion Arthur McCloud, grand lecturer of Michigan, will be present. From 20 to 25 members are also expected from Petoskey. The R. S. and S. E. degrees will be conferred. All turn out.

DEER HUNTING SOON TO OPEN

A Sport Which Will Be Enjoyed by Many from Charlevoix.

No Man Who Handles a Gun is Satisfied Until He Has Shot One.

Deer hunting is a sport which is enjoyed with passionate enthusiasm by thousands of Americans.

No man who has handled a gun and has made himself fatal to animals and birds is satisfied until he has shot a deer. The reason for this is a mystery. A deer is a large mark and is much harder to hit than a sparrow. Its market value is about one-tenth the cost of getting within close range of it. It frequents countries which are infested with mosquitoes, gnats, flies, midges and guides, who can cook up a mess of flour into a substance harder than a granite tombstone. Yet, the hunter pines and is dissatisfied until he has crept upon an unsuspecting deer with great pleading eyes and has knocked a tunnel through it with a heavy rifle ball.

The probable reason for the popularity of deer hunting is the love of adventure. The deer, to be sure, does not leap upon the hunter and bite him in the neck as the tiger does. It dies in a quiet and gentlemanly manner, like a calf at the butcher's, and gets its revenge by making the hunter carry it fourteen miles through the woods in circles, hunting for the camp. The adventure comes in dodging other hunters. The supply of deer is so short and the number of hunters so great that the latter are often used as substitutes for game. Each year scores of hunters are shot in a tragic and irreparable manner by other hunters, who have searched for deer until they are willing to take a waving bit of underbrush on faith.

There is no keener disappointment in hunting than to put a shot straight through the forehead of a large deer and then to find on rushing to the spot that said deer is only a guide or fat business man from Sandusky. One disappointment of this kind usually embitters a man for life against deer hunting.

When a man has refrained from slaughter until he has gotten into position where he has a mark as big as a cow he often suffers from buck fever. His hands tremble, his knees shake and he is unable to pull the trigger. This is a most peculiar disease. It doesn't hurt the hunter and it is as good as a health resort for the deer. Some people say it isn't a disease at all, but just a sense of shame.

(Edited and published for the benefit of local sportsmen who are beginning to show symptoms of being affected by the call of the wild.)

THE TICKET THAT IS WORTHY OF UNITED PARTY SUPPORT

The Republicans of Charlevoix county have nominated a County ticket which is worthy of the support of every member of the party. There was no lack of splendid candidates from which to make a selection and the selections made were no reflection on those who failed to get the most votes.

The result seems to be accepted with general satisfaction and any little disappointment which might have cropped out at first have gradually disappeared, and the splendid ticket presented by the Republican party will hold the united support of the party and attract the support of some who ordinarily vote another ticket.

Chase S. Osborn

No better selection could have been made for governor among the five candidates presented than Hon. Chase S. Osborn. Here are a few points in his favor:

1. He is personally clean.
2. No hint of boodle attaches either to this or his former campaign.
3. There is not a single piece of legislation passed on his recommendation as governor, which any political party dare asked to have repealed.
4. He stands for personal purity of character, the rule of the people, and is opposed to machine rule and saloon domination.
5. As governor he saved the people of Michigan over a half million dollars by insisting on cutting down unnecessary appropriations.
6. He is a Republican in the truest and best sense of that term, and has expressed himself as ready to stand on the platform of the party which nominated him.

Luren D. Dickinson

Is a type of the highest and best citizenship. Clean of life, honorable in business, a staunch representative of the best there is in statesmanship, he has made good in every position he has held and will prove a popular choice among the voters of the state.

J. Lee Morford

Of Otsego county is a man of whom his county is justly proud. As representative from that district he is familiar with the work of the legislature. He is a good man and will add strength and character to the senate.

Herman I. McMillan

Of East Jordan has served one term as state representative and acquitted himself well. He was found supporting such measures as were for the best interests of his constituents and in state matters stood for worthy and progressive legislation.

Charles Novak

While Charles Novak, chosen at the August primary as candidate for the office of sheriff by one of the largest majorities ever given a candidate for office in the county, may not be considered a pioneer resident, he has lived in the county for a number of years and no man enjoys a larger acquaintanceship, nor stands higher in the estimation of his fellow citizens. Of genial disposition, he has a faculty of making friends and his capability for service has been illustrated by the splendid record he has made as under-sheriff for the past four years. As a candidate for sheriff he stands for the proper enforcement of law and efficient administration.

Richard Lewis

Candidate for county clerk, is as strong and capable as could possibly have been selected. He stands for valuable experience. It is not necessary for us to call the attention of the voters of Charlevoix county to the fact that Mr. Lewis is capable of filling the office, for his past record as a public servant is well known to every one. They know that the work of this important office has always been done with the strictest honesty and accuracy. Clean, honest, genial, "Dick" Lewis is a tower of strength to the Republican ticket.

George W. Weaver

The Republican candidate for treasurer, is a representative man of the entire county. During the years he has piloted his boat between this port and Boyne City he has made the acquaintance of a large number of the residents of Charlevoix county. The office of county treasurer is a very responsible position. The administration of its affairs deals directly with the interests of every tax payer. It requires the services of a man keen and level headed, and we believe the people of Charlevoix county can congratulate themselves on having a man so well qualified as Capt. Weaver as a candidate for one of the most important positions in the gift of the electorate.

Romeo A. Emrey

One of the many reasons why Mr. Emrey was the choice of the people at the August Primary for Register of Deeds was that he had proven himself efficient, courteous, accurate and prompt in fulfilling the duties of the office. Also because it was thought he would be able to give even better service during the next term than he has during the past. A firm penman, prompt, accommodating, he has been tried and found not wanting.

Rollie L. Lewis

The office of county prosecutor will find in Rollie L. Lewis a young man eminently fitted for the work. Thoroughly educated, a graduate of the University of Michigan in the law department, a strong thinker, forceful talker and popular citizen, he will acquit himself with honor and serve the people with economy and efficiency.

Robert W. Kane

The office of circuit court commissioner will be admirably filled by Robert W. Kane, an experienced and well known lawyer of this city.

Coroners

As coroners, William H. Marshall and Allan M. Wilkinson are too well known to need any argument for their election.

Ernest Robinson

Ernest Robinson is the present surveyor. He is careful, honest, knows his business, and is in every way an ideal man for this important place.

Lewis E. Smith

In many counties the office of drain commissioner is one of the most important. Charlevoix county has not as yet reached this point, but in the selection of Lewis E. Smith as commissioner, chose a man capable of taking care of any of the duties which might arise.

ROAD MEETS APPROVAL

Should Adopt Motto "A County With a Climate Which Grows Fruit With Flavor."

Chicago, Oct. 19, 1914.

My Dear Editor,—

I was much pleased with the fine notice you gave my letter and I think if Charlevoix county will adopt this motto "A county with a climate which grows fruit with flavor" that it will make a red-hot ad. for our county.

I have talked to a good many people since my return who have been to Charlevoix and in every instance I find their approval of building a road that will last one hundred years, and without a single exception every one has said that if that could be done they would go up there and stay all summer and some of them have signified their intention of buying property around Pine Lake.

Now, it is up to you "people" to know what is for your own good. Everybody knows this will not benefit me any except in the saving of road tax, which would neither make me rich nor poor.

Very truly yours,
George H. VanPelt.

Charlevoix Harbor Gets But Small Amount To Do Work Badly Needed.

The harbor allotments recently made show that Charlevoix harbor received but a $2,000.00 appropriation to do the large amount of work badly needed at this port. The amount is entirely too small and will merely serve for carrying away the debris and in a small way preserve the present improvements.

The allotments include: Michigan—Ontonagon harbor, $10,000; St. Joseph, $3,000; South Haven, $4,000; Muskegon, $4,500; Ludington, $6,000; Frankfort, $4,000; waterway across Keewenaw Point, harbor of refuge, $75,000.

DEATH ENDS HIS SUFFERING

Charlevoix Loses One of Its Pioneer and Well-liked Business Men.

Forrest S. Blanchard Had Suffered for Many Months from Ulcerated Stomach.

Charlevoix is again called upon to mourn the loss of another pioneer business man. Forrest S. Blanchard died at his room in the Hotel Elston Thursday morning about seven o'clock. Mr. Blanchard had not been in good health for some time. On Friday prior to his death he was taken with hemorrhages of the stomach and continued to grow worse until again taken with a severe attack Thursday morning. Ulcerated stomach which caused severe hemorrhages was the immediate cause of his death.

Forrest S. Blanchard was born at Albion, Michigan, and was 68 years of age at the time of his death. He came to Charlevoix about 30 years ago, and engaged in the hardware business with his brother-in-law, L. D. Bartholomew. The business was continued under the name of L. D. Bartholomew & Co. until about five years ago, when Mr. Bartholomew retired from the business, Mr. Blanchard continuing the same under his own name.

He was united in marriage to Miss Genevieve Tallman in July, 1907, who died February 9, 1912. He leaves to mourn his death a sister, Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew, two nieces, Mrs. Blanche Robinson of Atlanta, Georgia, and Mrs. Winifred Smith of Owosso, and nephew, Forrest Bartholomew of Chicago.

Funeral services were held from the Bartholomew cottage on North Michigan avenue Friday afternoon at 1:00 o'clock and the remains taken to his old home at Albion for burial.

Everybody always spoke a good word for Mr. Blanchard, and his death is mourned by a host of friends. He was not a forward man, but earned a deserving popularity through a natural winning personality. He neither sought trouble nor gave any man occasion to question the uprightness of his character and the sincerity of his motives. He valued greatly the friendship of his neighbors, and with much inconvenience to himself would cheerfully accommodate a friend in need. There are few men who leave this world for a better resting place, that leave behind more pleasant remembrances of kind deeds done than does Mr. Blanchard.

COUNTY TO REMAIN DRY

Wets Fail to Properly Post Affidavits in Three of the Precincts.

County Road Commissioners Make Report on Roads Built and to be Built Coming Year.

There has been "something doing" every minute since the opening of the October session of the board of supervisors, the chief bone of contention being whether or not the local option question would be submitted at the spring election.

Section four of the Local Option Act contains the following provisions: "To enable each and every elector to determine for himself if his name has been fraudulently attached to said petition it is hereby required that signatures on all the petitions residing in any one and the same township, ward or election district shall be attached to one petition or list, separate from those of any other township, ward or election district, and that an exact copy of said petition, and of all the signatures thereto, shall be posted in three of the most conspicuous places in the said township, etc."

In the second and third wards of Boyne City one person obtained the signatures on one blank, and then another person filled out another blank, both circulated these petitions, obtained the names, each posted them in the same place, also obtained affidavits, which were made at the same place, time and before the same notary public, and filed them in the office of the county clerk without being attached together.

In the second ward of the city of Charlevoix two different petitions were circulated by two different people. Both petitions were posted at the same place, at the same time, and affidavits were made by both parties, before the same notary, at the same time.

For the above reasons and several others of similar nature the petitions were thrown out and the question will not be submitted. The matter has never been before the supreme court to construe the act or the points raised, and Prosecuting Attorney Fitch, to whom the matter was referred, hesitated to place upon the act such a construction as would make it possible to have the local option question submitted to the people in either a wet or dry county, but, on learning that the attorney general had held that the act must be strictly construed, and must be interpreted to mean that only one petition could be filed from any one district, he advised the board in accordance with the opinion of the attorney general.

Last year a similar thing happened in a southern Michigan county when the dries presented the petition, and this year the same condition of affairs exists in Delta and Allegan counties. Tuesday the board voted to adjourn without date and it is improbable that the wets will have another chance to bring the matter before the people until the October session of 1915.

The committee on county road commissioners reported that 1 1/2 miles of 16-foot gravel road had been built on the Emmet and Grand Traverse state road; one-fourth mile of stone and 1 1/2 miles of 9-foot gravel road on the Boyne City and Charlevoix road; one mile of 9-foot stone road on the East Jordan and Boyne Falls road; two miles of 9-foot road graded and the bottom course of stone laid on one mile of the East Jordan and Charlevoix road; 1 1/2 miles of 9-foot gravel road built on the Boyne Falls east road, and two miles of road surveyed on the Boyne City and Deer Lake road for 9-foot track. The committee recommended the completion of these roads under construction, after which the following roads are to be built: Commencing at the foot of Green Sky Hill and running southeasterly on what is known as the Charlevoix and Boyne City road, 3 miles or more, one mile in a southerly direction on the Boyne City and Deer Lake road, also two miles on the north end of what is known as the Boyne City and Charlevoix road; also continuing on the north end of the East Jordan and Charlevoix road three miles or more; and two miles on the road between Boyne City and Boyne Falls, commencing at Boyne Falls. The committee also recommended that a three mill tax be raised for the building of good roads.

The board will probably finish its business today and adjourn Thursday forenoon. A four mill county tax will be recommended, although at Tuesday's session three and one-half mills was discussed.

GAVE DOCTORS ENOUGH TO BUY FARM--RESTORED IN ONE DAY

Battle Creek Man Finds New Life in First Dose of Wonderful Remedy.

William N. Goss, 218 Aldrich St., Battle Creek, was troubled with stomach and intestinal ailments for years. Year after year he spent endless time and money with specialists and in expensive treatments that failed.

He took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy at last and wonderful results followed. When he had taken only one bottle he wrote:

"I got more relief out of one bottle of your wonderful stomach remedy than I did in all my years of treating with specialists."

"If I had all the money I have spent for doctors' bills I could buy a farm. I will certainly recommend Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy."

Mr. Goss' experience is like those of thousands of others who have taken this remarkable remedy with such astonishing results. It is known everywhere because of its merit. The first dose proves.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid secretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it is saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. One dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleanser ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold by leading druggists everywhere.

HOW FAR IS PETOSKEY?

Not So Far That the Statements of Its Residents Cannot Be Verified.

Rather an interesting case has been developed in Petoskey. Being so near by, it is well worth publishing here. The statement is sincere--the proof convincing:

S. L. Wixon, 509 Wachtel Ave., Petoskey, Mich., says: "A few months ago I had an extremely lame back and severe pains across my loins. I could hardly get around. I couldn't stoop or lift or rest well, and mornings I was stiff and lame. My kidneys were sluggish and the kidney secretions were unnatural. I got a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured me. I don't have any backache or pains in my kidneys now."

"I tried one at all dealers. I don't simply ask for a kidney remedy. I get Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Wixon had. I wrote Milburn E. Propoy, Petoskey, N. Y."

School Reports

COUNTY NORMAL.

(Bessie I. Allen)

Rose Groenink was absent from school one day last week.

The editors for the week are Cora Driggett and Marie Laniman.

Miss Whiting has commenced to instruct the class in primary reading.

Marybelle Haire and Irene Gregory were normal visitors Thursday night.

County Truant Officer W. F. Bashaw gave the class a visit Thursday morning.

Bernice Bush and Ruth Mitchell called at the normal room Thursday afternoon.

Cleo Thorne and Gladys Waterman are serving on the housekeeping committee.

Cora Driggett, Cleo Thorne, Gladys Waterman and Bessie Allen have joined the high school girls' chorus.

The class had the privilege of attending the Friday morning session of the board of supervisors and listening to a discussion on good roads.

The class has been divided for the purpose of debating. The captain of one side is Clara Thorsen, and Ward Genett is captain of the other.

Willard Howe, a graduate of the first of 1914, gave the class a visit

Friday afternoon and informed them that he has a school at Pomona, Michigan. He has twenty-eight pupils with all the grades included and is getting along very nicely.

NEW YORK'S FIRST LAW SCHOOL.

Now that New York's four law schools are graduating hundreds of pupils annually, it is interesting to recall the time when New York had no law school and a local newspaper could say, "It is strange if a series of law lectures in so large a city as New York would not pay." This was printed in June, 1855, in an item which began, "Mr. George H. Moore stated at the late annual dinner of New York university that a law department of that institution was really created, and its professors really delivered their inaugural addresses." Benjamin F. Butler, Esq., Judge Kent and the late David Graham constituted the law faculty.--New York Tribune.

Connecting the Clock.

A striking clock can be made to sound the hours on an electric bell in a distant room by fastening wires and a battery to the striking hammer and clock gong, the connection being made when the hammer hits the gong.

LOOK WITHIN.

The Chinese in archery have one rule, which they call the "Rule of the Superior Man." It runs thus--"When the archer misses the center of the target he turns around and seeks for the cause of the failure in himself." There seems to be a hint in this "look within" scheme for others and not for archers alone.

LOCAL DRUGGIST SAYS:

"TAKE ONLY ONE DOSE."

We want to tell those in Charlevoix suffering from stomach or bowel trouble that we are agents for the simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler-I-ka, the remedy which became famous by curing appendicitis. This is the most thorough bowel cleanser known and JUST ONE DOSE relieves sour stomach, gas on the stomach and constipation almost IMMEDIATELY. You will be surprised at the QUICK action of Adler-I-ka. B. A. Herman, druggist.

After the Battle.

A naval engagement with an odd sequel was the battle of Portland, Me., between the American ship Enterprise, 16 guns and 102 men, and the British ship Boxer, 14 guns and 100 men. The Enterprise was commanded by Lieutenant Burrows and the Boxer by Captain Blythe. The battle was on Sept. 4, 1812, in the bay not far from Portland, and resulted in the capture of the Boxer, both commanders being killed. The two vessels were brought into Portland on Sept. 7. The bodies of the two commanders were rowed ashore by sailors of both ships and after a public funeral service were buried side by side in the village cemetery--Philadelphia Press.

You Cannot Afford to Drink at All

World Wants Steady Men--Keeley Institute Makes Them--No Place for the Inebriate--and None for the Man Who Drinks Occasionally--Work of the Local Institution--Men and Women Can be Treated in Seclusion for Liquor, Morphine, Cocaine, Tobacco, Cigarettes and Nerve Exhaustion.

What Must You Do for the Inebriate.

You want to do what is best, of course, for his own sake and for the sake of his family.

It is not wise to upbraid him; his own conscience is doing that, besides you must remember that the man is diseased and that a symptom of his condition is an irresistible craving for liquor; he simply can't stop drinking; the stage when an irresistible craving for liquor is a grave injury to us and them. There are thousands of people who have taken alleged "cures" and the failures are wrongfully attributed to us, though such persons have never taken so much as one dose of our medicine. The right place is known by the name "The Keeley Institute," and this is the only one in the state. If you prefer to send a patient to some other establishment that is your right; we are unwilling, however, that the blame which attaches to their failures should be placed upon us and it is unjust that it should be.

Do You Always Succeed?

That is a proper question and one which we will frankly answer. In all cases where a full course of treatment is taken and where our instructions are followed a cure is effected. The Keeley cured man who smokes cigarettes generally relapses. If he tries to be a moderate drinker he will fail and soon be as badly off as ever. The Keeley Cure will enable a man to be a total abstainer.

The so-called failures of the Keeley Cure are only failures of the man. There is no question about it. Every man who takes the Keeley Cure properly is cured of the craving for drink and, if he chooses, he can and will remain sober as long as he lives. AT LEAST NINETY PER CENT. REMAIN SOBER. Is not that a good record? Compare it with hospital statistics of any kind and you will see that we stand at the head.

Is the Cure Expensive?

The Keeley Cure costs money, of course; but how little does it cost in comparison with its benefits and the increased earning capacity of the cured man? The charges at the Keeley Institute are more moderate than in hospitals or sanitariums; all medical attention costs money.

Every patient who comes to us for treatment has special care and attention and the treatment adapted to his requirements. Lady patients are treated privately in their rooms. Every patient on arriving has a thorough examination and because of our long experience there is no phase of these cases with which we are not able to cope.

Our system of treatment allows patients freedom from physical restraint; we have never confined a patient, as under our system we have never found it necessary to do so.

Sometimes the absurd idea prevails that we cure patients by nauseating them. Nothing can be further from the truth; a "CURE" accomplished in that way would not be lasting; it is a fraud and deception and cannot last. From the beginning to the end of our treatment there is neither sickness or nausea. Improvement in the general health begins the first day and continues without interruption during the whole period of treatment. At the conclusion of his treatment here the patient cures his addiction, but by the building up and strengthening of the nervous system his general health is also vastly improved.

Some patients, supposing that we cut off liquor and drugs abruptly, hesitate to come to us, knowing from experience the suffering such a course entails. Liquor patients are permitted to use liquor under the direction of our physician until they can get along comfortably without it.

Drug patients are given support as required and need not fear suffering or collapse. The reduction is carried on so gradually that in many cases the patient does not know when he is without the support of the drug; many refuse to believe it at first when told they have been entirely off the drug from five to ten days.

How Do We Do These Things?

Our answer is, with the Keeley Remedies, and our physician has been thoroughly instructed in their use, having had twenty-two years experience in this work and understands the requirements of his patient; there is no phase of any of these cases which can surprise him.

Remember in all this time that we never have lost a patient by death while under treatment. The internal remedy is taken a teaspoonful every two hours until eight doses daily have been taken. There are four hypodermic injections each day, a process which involves no pain, soreness or other inconvenience; each patient is thus seen by the physician four times each day. In this connection we may call attention to the fact that hypodermic medication is approved by all physicians of standing and all reputable text-books. Sometimes quacks advertising nostrums having no merit prate of the dangers of hypodermic medication, etc. This is a favorite argument with the promoters of several so-called "CURES," who, having no knowledge of the subject of inebriety or its cure, seek thus to attract attention to themselves. Only the ignorant are appealed to or influenced by such an argument. They seek to climb by pulling others down.

"It is always the tree which bears the best fruit which has the greatest number of clubs thrown at it."

Have We Interested You?

We hope so. If we have we accept it as a compliment and invite you to send to us for more detailed information. We have a large variety of well-printed pamphlets dealing with the different aspects of our work, all of which are sent free on application. You need not hesitate to write us, as all correspondence with us is strictly confidential and business men are our staunchest friends.

An Attractive

proposition for you in quality and price. The American Bell Furnace is given preference over all furnaces for durability and economy. They are practically indestructible because castings are made from best gray iron that can be obtained. Jackets extra heavy preventing heat from penetrating and heating your cellar. The furnace is built on lines that obtain all heat units possible from fuel and radiating all heat instead of going out chimney and also consumes all gases. The new type ball bearing grates operate so easily a child can operate them and sift the ashes from coal instead of dumping and waisting coal as other types do. You can't buy a better furnace no matter if you pay double our price, and a strong guarantee is given by the manufacturers. The planing and installing is done by an experienced furnace man from factory. For further information see

FROM HALIFAX TO VANCOUVER

New Transcontinental Automobile Road.

IT IS ALMOST COMPLETED.

Motorists Will Soon Be Able to Go
From the Atlantic to the Pacific Over a Beautiful Highway 3,000 Miles Long.

Motorists will soon be able to make the run from Halifax on the Atlantic to Vancouver on the Pacific over one of the longest and most beautiful automobile roads in the world. This motor highway of over 3,000 miles, lying entirely in Canada, is rapidly nearing completion.

The most difficult portion of the road to construct is that through the British Columbia mountains. This section is being fast pushed to a finish, so it is reported to Washington by Consul General R. E. Mansfield at Vancouver.

The road runs from Halifax to Sud-bury, from Sudbury to Winnipeg and thence across the prairies to the towering masses of the Rockies. Mr. Mansfield says that the most picturesque part of the road is that from Calgary to Vancouver, Calgary lying near the eastern foothills of the Rocky mountains.

The road rises into the foothills west of Calgary and ninety miles away, at Banff, penetrates the mountain fastnesses. From Banff the route turns into Vermilion pass and then goes down the valley of the Columbia to Cranbrook. The run from Cranbrook to Creston has already been made by automobile. From Creston the road goes to Nelson, thence to Grand Forks, thence to Vancouver. Work is under full headway on the Creston-Vancouver section.

The road in eastern and central Canada is finished with the exception of a few short sections, and automobiles are today using the route throughout almost its entire length. Mr. Mansfield says:

When this great route is completed it will not be necessary for Canadian motorists to incur the expense of foreign travel, for no line trip can be made under the flag of any land than that over this transcontinental highway. Even the Tyrol and Swiss Alps cannot surpass the Selkirk or the Rocky mountains for grandeur, beauty and variety of scenery. In a few hours the motorist can travel Switzerland from border to border, but it will take many days to see all the splendors of the great northwest.

An interesting feature of this route will be the number and variety of attractive side trips it offers. Many new roads connecting with the main highway and suitable for motor driving are already finished, and others are under construction, which open up new regions of beauty. One of these will be the road up Mount Revelstoke, four miles of which are already finished; the miles more of a 7 per cent graded new road will extend it to the summit, 6,150 feet above sea level, from which the panoramic view is excellent. For seventy-five miles on either side extend the snow capped peaks of the Gold, Illecillewaet and Selkirk ranges. Thousands of feet below in the pine clad valleys can be caught glimpses of the Columbia and Illecillewaet rivers. By easy pony trails from the Châlet can be reached two beautiful lakes—Eva and Millar—and from their rocky shores a panorama of the Great Gordon glacier is unfolded.

Other scenic attractions along which the great motor highway will pass are the Columbia and Windermere valleys, the Vermilion pass and Kootenay and Okanogan lakes.

The completion of this transcontinental motor trail will be of interest not only to American motorists as an attractive scenic route, but it will also give impetus to the automobile trade in Canada opening up new markets for American made cars and increase trade opportunities in that line.

INFECTIOUS DISEASES OF YOUNG CHICKS

[Prepared by poultry division, United States department of agriculture.]

White diarrhea, a disease common among very young chicks, is a condition which has as its most prominent symptoms more or less profuse diarrhea, the droppings consisting almost entirely of mucus from the intestinal tube and the white secretion of the kidneys.

The medical treatment of chicks affected with the disease is impracticable, as it is too expensive and has very little effect on the course of the disease. The birds may be given sour milk or buttermilk to drink, or, lacking this, fifteen grains of powdered castor oil may be added to the gallon of drinking water.

The symptoms of enteritis are most frequently observed in chicks from ten days to four weeks old.

Reliance must be placed upon prevention rather than cure in connection with this disease, because the average chicken two to three weeks old has not sufficient value to warrant the expenditure of much time or medicine in its treatment.

Sometimes it is found advisable to extract the worms or to inject some liquid into the windpipe which will kill them. Extractors are made in various ways. Generally a small quill feather is stripped of all of its web ex-

Despite the common idea that summer hatched chicks do not pay, the fact is, they are profitable if given proper treatment. Summer chicks should not be allowed to run on the same ground used for earlier hatches, nor should they be fed in the same yards with the early hatched chickens. Pinned in a clean yard by themselves and provided with shelter from sun and rain and plenty of good food and fresh water the youngsters will thrive and grow amazingly.

cept a small tuft at the end, and this is used either dry or moistened with kerosene or oil of turpentine.

Recently good results have been reported from medicating drinking water with fifteen grains of salicylic acid or three drams of salicylate of soda to the quart of water.

Sometimes fowls become badly infected with worms, which live in the crop, stomach and intestines and either cause serious disease or affect the nutrition so that the birds become weak, bloodless and unproductive.

One of the best remedies is oil of turpentine, which may be mixed with an equal quantity of olive oil and twenty to thirty drops of the mixture given at a dose. This is followed in two hours with two to three teaspoon-fuls of castor oil.

Thymol is especially active in the case of roundworms, and one grain of it may be made into a pill with a little bread and butter and given to each fowl. It should be followed by a purge, as in the case of other remedies.

The remedies which are particularly effective for tapeworms are powdered area nut, thirty to forty-five grains; powdered male fern, thirty to sixty grains; kamala, thirty to forty grains for each fowl. These are followed by epsom salts, castor oil or calomel (one-third grain). Area nut, male fern and kamala may produce bad effects in turkeys and geese, and must be given to these birds in comparatively small doses.

Poultry Ration Requirements.

Poultry feeding is fast becoming an important factor in the science of the feeding of dairy cattle or beef cattle. The needed ingredients in eggs are largely lime, nitrogen and phosphoric acid. This points the way to what feeds are best to give in a steady diet.

POULTRY PICKUPS.

Sunflowers along the edge of a poultry yard will provide shade in summer and also produce some excellent feed for winter.

When you have found for a certainty that a hen is unprofitable dispose of her at once.
Some hens are never good layers, but they eat as much as the best of the flock.

Keep the henhouses as cool as you possibly can.
Overcrowding the flock in hot weather will mean disaster.

Don't judge the hen by her appearance. Often the best looking hen in the flock is the poorest layer.

When a fowl begins to shed its feathers it is not always molting.
Feathers rot in July if the roost is overcrowded at night.

FEDERAL AID FOR ROADS.

Senate Committee Orders Favorable Report on Senator Bryan's Bill.

The senate committee on postoffices and post roads has ordered a favorable report on the good roads bill submitted by Senator Bryan as a substitute for the Shackleford bill which had passed the house. The bill is designed to provide federal aid to good roads and to permit the states to utilize the credit of the United States in raising road construction funds.

The bill would provide that the federal government issue fifty year 3 per cent bonds to the amount of $500,000, in lots of $100,000 each for five years. States could participate in the use of the funds by issuing 4 per cent bonds which, when deposited in the federal treasury, would be exchanged for cash. The 1 per cent difference in interest between the federal and state bonds would be held in a sinking fund with which to pay the states in retiring the bonds.

Under the terms of the bill there would be created a United States highway commission to have an advisory voice in the expenditure of the highway fund in the several states. The plan worked out in the bill was suggested by the secretary of the treasury.

To the Press of Charlevoix County.

Gentlemen,—In order to forestall any prejudice which may arise in your minds against the County Local Option Committee, I wish to make the following statements:

That, although I am a member of this committee, my candidacy for representative is not endorsed by the committee.
This committee, to my knowledge, has never endorsed any candidate for any office.

If any member of this committee is supporting me he is doing it as a private citizen, and not because we are fellow committeemen.

These statements can be verified by consulting any member of this committee.

Respectfully,

62ND BIRTHDAY

Many Friends Help Mrs. Maxine Genett Celebrate the Occasion.

Sixteen pioneer ladies of Charlevoix, Norwood and Atwood met at the home of Mrs. Maxine Genett of Norwood, Tuesday to help her celebrate her 62nd birthday.

Those who were present were Mesdames Wm. Seymour and J. H. Bugbee of Charlevoix, Mrs. Barlow of East Jordan, Mesdames Geo. Lord, Calvin Supernaw and Boa of Atwood, and Mesdames Amos Richardson, Alden Stafford, Charles Moorehouse, Frank Richardson, Della Cameron, Wm. Pearl, Penny Genett, Patterson, Merrill Richardson and Anthony Clark of Norwood. A majority of the ladies were pioneers of the county, while a few can be called pioneers of the younger generation.

A five o'clock dinner was served at the home of the hostess, Mrs. Reid Genett. Reminiscences of the early days were discussed and the guest of the evening received a number of fine tokens as remembrances of the occasion.

Mildred Eckinger has enrolled a class of ten pupils for piano within the past week. She will teach six grades in sheet music and ten grades by course. Touch and technique a specialty.—Adv. 42 tl.

HORSES FOR THE FARM.

Kansas Farmers Are Advised to Raise Horses and Sell the Surplus.

Malnutrition a big bunch of horses to carry on the work of the farm is quite an item of expense, says the Kansas Farmer. Many farmers do not realize how much it amounts to until they begin to make some effort to keep a record of the cost of maintaining horses through the year. It is almost incumbent upon the man requiring a great deal of horsepower in his farming operations to follow the practice, to some extent at least, of raising horses and selling the surplus on the market. In this way the horsepower of the farm becomes in a measure self supporting. There is no place in Kansas more favorable to the raising of good horses than the central and western portions. There are numerous instances all through this territory where farmers have, to some extent specialized in the growing of horses and mules and made good money in it. Really good horses are bringing good prices on the market, and the farmer who will pay serious attention to the producing of a few good animals each year will not only keep himself equipped with good horses, but will have some money coming in from time to time as a result of sales of surplus.

The great losses from the horse disease which prevailed through the state so extensively two years ago has caused many to hold back from engaging in the raising of horses for fear of another epidemic of this kind. It is true there are risks involved, but these risks are no greater than those of many other lines of production. They are not as great as the risks which the exclusive wheat grower must take.

ALFALFA IN ORCHARDS.

There are some good results from growing alfalfa in an orchard, but there are also objections to the practice that may prejudice its use under certain conditions.

Without some precaution alfalfa is difficult to eradicate when it may be desirable to do so; hence it is not advisable to sow alfalfa broadcast in an orchard unless it is expected to remain permanently seeded to alfalfa.

Alfalfa in an orchard where thorough spraying with arsenical poisons are necessary renders the hay cut from under trees unsafe to feed to live stock; hence alfalfa in such orchards must be considered entirely from the standpoint of a cover crop to shade the ground and build up soil fertility, and it is for this purpose that alfalfa has the great advantage over most any other crop for the arid western states.

The effect on the size, color and quality of the fruit from trees growing with alfalfa is of decided advantage in the experience of men who have seen it tried, and it seems as if the alfalfa has no bad effects of itself in any way.

It seems evident to make the best use of alfalfa in an orchard it should be sown in thick drill rows with interillage and only left for two or three years, then plowed up. If the tap roots can be cut off in the fall with a plow that has the mold board raised it is easily killed by freezing and trying out.—Farm Progress.

CREAMERY RECORDS.

These Are the Basis of Creamery Management.
(Prepared by United States Department of Agriculture.)

The efficiency of a creamery is measured by its financial returns. Marketing returns show that each operation has been conducted carefully and with the application of modern practices; they show that causes of leaks and losses have been discovered and eliminated, and they show that avenues for increased profits have been found and utilized. On the other hand, returns below the maximum show that the creamery operator has failed to take advantage of the factors under his control, with the result that a loss has been sustained. In other words, the operator has failed in the management of the creamery.

The fundamental basis of good creamery management is a simple, practical bookkeeping or accounting system. No creamery operator, regardless of his natural ability, can know the details of his business unless he keeps records of each department. The human mind is incapable of retaining completely a mass of details, and unless a thorough knowledge of each phase of a business is available to the operator, he is handicapped. With the facts and figures before him the creamery manager is constantly in a position to make operation most efficient. Under such conditions most managers are striving at all times to add added lines that shall be a source of income.

Many creameries must change their methods very radically in order to get on a profitable basis. They must, however, know their true condition before they will be justified in making a radical change, and hence they should install a good system of keeping records, as it is in this way only that true conditions can be learned. "Lack of time and help" is no excuse for failure to keep a good set of books so long as the success of the creamery depends so largely on the proper handling of the finances. When the creamery has discovered where losses are its methods may be changed to advantage.

Hemp and Noxious Weeds.

That Canada thistles and quack grass can be eradicated by growing hemp is the opinion of A. L. Stone, of the college of agriculture, University of Wisconsin.

Experiments have been tried on the prison farm at Wausau and on other farms in that vicinity, and the conclusion drawn from these tests is that Canada thistles can be completely destroyed by one crop of hemp and that a field badly infested with quack grass must be cropped with hemp for two successive years to thoroughly destroy the weeds.

Since hemp will grow only on very fertile soil, heavy coats of fertilizer are necessary to insure a good stand. It is also important that the land be plowed the preceding fall and kept free from weeds until it freezes up in order to give the hemp a better chance in the spring.

Radium and Radishes.

T. Thorne Baker, the English horticulturist, who has for two years been carrying on an investigation of the effect of radium upon the growth of plants, asserts that the best results are obtained by mixing about one seven-hundredth part of a grain of radium with one ton of earth. This minute quantity can be obtained by using the residues left behind after radium has been extracted from minerals.

Mr. Baker says the best results have been with carrots and radishes, which in some cases have grown nearly six times as heavy as those raised in ordinary soil.

ABOUT FERTILIZERS.

Fertilizers may be complete or incomplete, direct or indirect.

A complete fertilizer is one that contains each of the three elements of plant food, nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash.

An incomplete fertilizer is one that contains only one or two of the three elements, nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash.

A direct fertilizer is one that contains any or all of the three plant food elements, nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. A direct fertilizer is used for the plant food which it contains.

An indirect fertilizer is one that does not contain nitrogen, phosphoric acid or potash. An indirect fertilizer is not applied for the purpose of adding plant food to the soil, but in order to make some of the plant food already in the soil more available. The chief indirect fertilizers are land plaster, lime and common salt.

Land plaster, gypsum or calcium sulphate. These are different names for the same compound. Gypsum or land plaster is nothing more than the sulphate of lime rock which has been ground exceedingly fine.

Quicklime and calcium carbonate. When limestone is burned the resulting product is calcium oxide or quicklime, sometimes called stone lime. When exposed to the air it becomes air slacked and is then calcium carbonate or carbonate of lime.—California Cultivator.

BETTER CULTURAL METHODS.

Crop pests have often been declared beneficial to growers because they make better cultural methods necessary to preserve the crop. The market quarantine is a new benefit along that line and a much stronger incentive for good methods. So long as part of a crop can be raised and shipped in spite of the pest there will always be a certain proportion of growers satisfied to raise substandard stuff. But when the market standard is so rigid that substandard stuff cannot be sold at all obviously every grower must rise to the true standard or go out of business. Whether he decides to do that is a gain to the community he lives in.—Country Gentleman.

A DEARTH OF SHEEP.

Farmers Can Find a Profitable Market For Wool and Mutton.

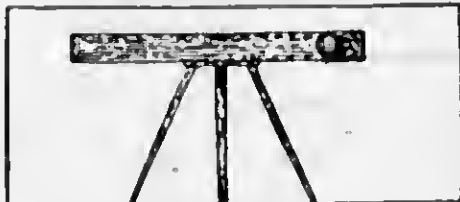

For the first time in recent world's history the demand for wool has overtaken the supply, says R. B. Thomson in the Farm and Fireside. He asserts there is no surplus of wool today, and the problem of getting supplies at the mills is an acute one.

The world wide shortage of meat has kept the flocks from increasing, even in South America, New Zealand and Australia, while in this country the encroachments of farming upon the ranges have caused a startling decrease in the number of sheep in the great sheep growing states. Bankers' estimates indicate a decrease of 40 per cent in Montana, 20 per cent in Wyoming, 10 per cent in Idaho, 15 per cent in Utah, 10 per cent in Oregon—a decrease of 25,000,000 pounds of wool in these five states.

The farmer who can keep sheep successfully need have no fear, we think, of very low prices for wool. Mutton is gaining in popular favor and seems to be sure of good prices. The transfer of the American wool and mutton business from the ranges to the farms is taking place slowly, and while it is going on the farm flock will be getting the benefit of what may be, after all, only a temporary scarcity in sheep and their products.

Inexpensive Farm Level.

A drainage level, such as is sold for finding levels for drain pipes and irrigating ditches, etc., is a very handy tool on any farm, as it can be used for many purposes. But the price of such a level is beyond the reach of the ordinary farmer, and in doing any of the above mentioned jobs he always guesses at the levels or is compelled to employ an engineer at a large salary to do the work. A temporary level for all ordinary ditching and draining, etc., can be made by any farmer with an ordinary carpenter's spirit level, as shown in the accompanying illustration. Simply make any kind of a tripod and place the level on the top of same, as shown, and you are ready for work. If one has a camera tripod this will answer the purpose nicely, but if the tripod must be made simply fasten three legs to any sound, dry board with small hinges and set up, as illustrated. The legs may be moved in or out as required to level the device and will stay in place until the level point is found. To test a carpenter's level place on any object and mark all around same, reverse the level, and if the bubble finds the same place in both positions the level is true; if not it should be adjusted until it shows the bubble in the center of the vial in either position.

Care of Young Pigs.

Young pigs will need shade, water and suitable food. If the sows must be kept in pens see that the pigs get out of the pens and have exercise. This will be necessary if the pigs are to make rapid growth and attain the proper development during the first months of their lives.

Sarcasm.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON AN UNFAITHFUL TREASURER'S FALL.

Matthew 26:14-25, 47; 27:13-10—Oct. 25. "Wee woe that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed."—Matthew 26:24.

JUDAS hailed from Southern Palestine, while the other eleven of Jesus' disciples were Galileans. It is inferred that because of superior business qualities Judas was made treasurer of the Apostolic company. Friends of Jesus noted that He and His disciples needed to give their entire time to the heralding of the Kingdom. It is not strange, therefore, that we read that some voluntarily donated money for their support.—Luke 8:3.

Such voluntary donations made it proper that there should be a treasurer for the company, and that he should be of superior business acumen. We find no reason for believing that Judas was a bad man when selected by Jesus to be an Apostle. We have every reason to believe that he developed a bad character even under the most favorable influences—in the continual company of Jesus and the other Apostles, and with the message of the Kingdom continually in his ears. There was, however, a beginning of his defection; and the Scriptures intimate that his temptation came along the lines of savor, selfishness, love of money. It is still true that "the love of money is a root of all evil."

A Fulfillment of Prophecy.

Afterward, apparently, the disciples learned that Judas was a thief (John 12:6). Doubtless even when appropriating moneys contributed to the support of the little company, Judas could have some plausible excuse; for sin is always deceptive. Brooding on the subject increased his desire for money, and led his active business mind to hatch out the plot for the betrayal of Jesus.

The record is that when Judas perceived that Jesus had been condemned, he took the money back to the chief priests, wishing to undo his deed. They laughed at him, declaring that it was no concern of theirs, but his own. If he had betrayed innocent blood, because it was blood money they could not put it into the Temple Treasury again. Instead, they purchased there with a piece of cheap land, as a burial place for strangers. Thus they fulfilled to the very letter a prophecy which they had probably forgotten.—Matthew 27:3, 10.

The account implies that Judas was surprised when Jesus was condemned. Apparently he surmised that Jesus, brought to the crucial test, would assert Himself as the Messiah, and would triumph over His enemies. Judas thus probably thought that he would hasten the establishment of the Kingdom, in which he hoped to share. Thus he would shine as a hero, as well as demonstrate his financial wisdom and his suitability for the post of Grand Treasurer of the Kingdom. In addition, apparently he was a little augury at Jesus' because the Master had approved of Mary's conduct in respect to the spikenard. It was under the impulse of that resentment that he first sought the priests and the scribes to negotiate for the betrayal.

The Betrayal of Jesus.

No Hope of a Resurrection. We are not suggesting excuses for Judas. No excuse can properly be offered for treachery to God and His Cause. We merely point out the fact that every transgressor must first consent in his own mind to his wrong course; the mind, the conscience, must be perverted before each step of sin. Hence Jesus' words are fully justified: "It had been good for that man had he not been born."

Such treachery, such willingness to hand over his friend, his Teacher, the One whom he had worshiped as the Son of God and through whom he had expected the Messianic Kingdom, was surely of the worst type. He had been constantly with the savior, and hence knew of the purity of His life, knew of His loyalty to God. Therefore these things constituted his responsibility and his guilt.

The fact that he committed suicide implied a fulfillment of Jesus' words—that Judas wished that he had not been born. Yet there is a hope for other suicides, because of their ignorance and because Christ died for all. But in the case of Judas all this is as unavailing as the fact that he had already enjoyed such privileges and had sinned against light and knowledge. The declaration that he went to his own place, his appropriate place, does not signify that he or anybody else is to be tortured eternally as a punishment for sin. Rather, his own place was hopeless oblivion, without prospect of a resurrection. He died like a natural brute beast, nor could argument be shown why such a character should ever have any future opportunity.

The fact that God had foreknown that one of the Twelve would betray Jesus, the fact that the purchase of the field with the blood-money had been prophesied, did not alter the responsibility of Judas for his own fall. It was not God's foreknowledge that injured him, but his own wrong course.

DAIRY and CREAMERY

QUALITY OF BUTTER.

Influence of Workmanship in Making High Grade Product.
[Prepared by dairy division, United States department of agriculture.]

It is a well known fact that the skill applied by the buttermaker during the various steps of the process of manufacture has an important bearing on the quality of the butter. If the work is carelessly or incompetently done the result is a poorer product than could have been obtained had proper methods been employed. The character of the butter, so far as concerns its grain and color, is almost entirely a matter for which the buttermaker is responsible.

The last few years have brought about many changes in the dairy cattle world. Not only has the illustration of the profitable and unprofitable dairy cow been driven home close to the hearts of the dairyman, but the consuming public is quicker to discern the difference between the low and the high grade of dairy products. Among the breeds recognized as possessing true dairy characteristics none has won more friends in recent years than the Guernsey. As a matter of fact the record for butter production is held by a Guernsey cow—May Ribna, owned by Captain Cassatt of Pennsylvania.

able, provided he has at his command proper manufacturing facilities. Formerly stress was placed on the production of butter having a firm, waxy grain of texture, and many buttermakers developed a high degree of skill in this work. On the markets of today, however, one finds comparatively little butter having a faultless grain. This should not be, and it will undoubtedly be to the best interest of the dairy industry to correct this condition as soon as possible.

Faulty grain of the butter is generally characterized by a dull, lusterless color and by a greasy, salty condition of the texture. The most common causes of this defect are—first, subjecting the cream or the butter to improper temperatures; second, overchurning the butter either in the buttermilk or in the wash water; third, overworking the butter. Occasionally butter having brittle grain is also found. This condition may be caused by churning at so low a temperature that the butter comes in too hard granules to admit of proper working. This seldom occurs, however, unless the cream is too thin and cold and the churning small.

Besides the defects named there are others generally associated with defective grain. For instance, an oily, disagreeable flavor often characterizes such butter, and if the raw material the cream or milk is tainted, such taint is usually intensified or brought out more prominently by overworking the butter; hence the aim should be to produce butter having a perfect grain. To this end the following should be observed: First, the cream should be subjected for not less than four hours to a temperature sufficiently low to harden the fat globules before it is churned; second, the churning should be completed in about forty-five minutes with firm clean cut granules of the size of wheat kernels; third, the temperature of the wash water should be about the same as the temperature of the buttermilk; fourth, only sufficient working should be given the butter to distribute the salt properly and to make the butter of uniform consistency; fifth, great changes in the temperature of the butter should be prevented throughout the entire process of manufacture.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

DON'T throw away the old pieces of bread that are left over from each meal, but instead put them all in a jar and then twice a week place the assortment in a slow oven to dry and brown a bit. After this place them in a crusher or meat chopper and pulverize. This can also be done with a rolling pin. Put in a jar for future use. A supply of dried bread crumbs should always be kept handy. They are required every day in the cooking. For most purposes dried bread crumbs are much better than freshly crumbled ones, and it saves endless time when the actual cooking is on hand if these are always ready.

Grated cheese is also necessary in cooking, and the odd pieces of cheese should be sorted after each meal, grateed down and stored in wide necked glass bottles.

The extravagant housewife buys a large quantity of butter for cooking purposes. The home cook who understands practical economy never permits this extravagance.

It should never be necessary to buy fat for frying purposes. If meat is properly trimmed and all the spare fat rendered down, together with dripping, and the fat taken from the top of stock, provided the latter has not been flavored with onions. To clarify fat put all the pieces, whether raw or cooked, in an iron saucepan with a little water, enough to come to about a quarter of the depth of the fat, boil it quickly without the lid till the water is evaporated and the fat reduced to oil, straining it frequently while the whole. Then strain it off into a clean basin.

After being used for frying, fat should be strained at once and can be used time after time, whatever is left. If it is not burned and brown, being reclarified with the other. Properly clarified fat comes in well for ordinary cakes and pastry also. Many housewives throw away the shriveled brown pieces left in the sieve after the fat was strained, but one home cook saves it. She chops and uses it instead of suet, and it makes excellent puddings.

CUISINE HINT.

How to Make Sirups and Get Them Right.

Time and atmosphere are the two considerations to study when sirups are being made. A clear, dry air helps very much. The foundation sirup must be boiled until it forms a soft ball when taken up with the fingers. Chill the fingers in ice water first; then the hot sirup will not burn. Place three-fourths of a cupful of sugar and three tablespoonfuls of water in a flat bottomed dish to boil evenly after stirring the sugar until dissolved.

When bubbling begins sprinkle a bit of cream of tartar on just as you do when making candy. This is the right amount of sirup to beat into the white of one egg. Beat the egg light and dry and after the sirup is added beat until it cools and will "set" when spread. The seasoning should be added while hot. If chocolate or cocoa, sprinkle on dry, and the hot sirup will melt it. Fruit juices may be added for seasoning, and the grated rind of an orange or lemon flavors and colors nicely.

Another test for sirups is this: Boil one cupful of sugar and three tablespoonfuls of water. Stir until dissolved and set on to heat slowly. Watch the boiling as it begins on one side of the dish until it spreads over the surface gradually and is bubbling. At that instant remove from the stove and pour on to the beaten egg. When you are making hulled icing and you fear that it will dry before you get it spread on the cake add a little butter to the icing. The butter will not only prevent the icing from turning to candy, but it adds to the richness. This is one method of using chocolate.

A NURSERY HINT.

How to Prevent the Baby Chewing Its Cap Strings.

It is practically impossible to keep a baby's cap strings clean. He will chew on them until they are ragged and dirty long before the cap itself is even soiled. The solution of this problem is simple. It may not be as pretty as the ribbon or muslin bows when they are fresh, but it is a great deal prettier than when they are soiled. Take a one-third inch wide elastic and sew it to one side of the cap. Then measure off to the other side to get the right length and fasten with a hook on the elastic and an eye inside the little cap. Be sure it is plenty long enough so that there will not be the slightest choking pressure on the little one's throat. There is no danger of this elastic coming undone, as with cap strings, and it is much more sanitary, cleaner and daintier looking.

How to Make Cigar Boxes Useful.

Save all the old cigar boxes you may have around the house for packing any small breakable article to be sent by parcel post. They are light in weight, yet sufficiently strong to be ample protection if the goods are carefully packed in soft paper or cotton.

PREVENT FOREST FIRES.

Only Oil Burning Locomotives Allowed in New York State Preserve.
Locomotives burning oil instead of coal as fuel have been required on the railways operating in the New York state forest reserve since 1909 during the summer season from April 15 to Nov. 1 on trains run between 8 a. m. and 8 p. m. On the New York Central lines it is stated that during the season of 1913 compliance with this order increased the operating expenses of the company by $90,000.

The railway company recently appealed to the public utilities commission for permission to operate a new type of coal burning locomotive equipped with special appliances for preventing the emission of sparks and the dropping of coal from the ash pan. In an opinion the commission denied the application, holding that while the improved appliances on the locomotive were deserving of high commendation and would probably meet requirements under ordinary conditions, the uncertainty that the appliances would be kept in repair so that neglect might cause the emission of sparks and coals made it advisable to continue use of oil fuel.—Engineering News.

Electric Uses in Mines.

In metal mining proper, i. e., the actual extraction of ores from the ground, electricity is used both as a form of power in the electric motor and in a number of miscellaneous ways, says the Engineering Magazine. Most of the machines around a mine are susceptible of electric drive. The most important are the hoist, the pump, the air compressor and the underground locomotive. For ventilating fans, so far as they are used in metal mining, for rope haulages, for triples, for diamond drills, for aerial trams and for the various shop tools the electric motor is suitable. Of the miscellaneous uses, electric lighting, electric signaling, the telephone and electric blasting claim attention.

Remarkings Steel Squares.
Desiring to make the marks on a steel square black, says a correspondent of Popular Mechanics, I proceeded as follows: Some white shellac varnish was rubbed into the marks with a piece of clean cloth and the surplus on the surfaces was wiped off; then, after drying for a few minutes, lamp-black was rubbed into the depressions with a stiff brush. When thoroughly dry the surface was polished. This gave clear black lines on the scale.

Simplicity of Mechanics.
There is nothing mysterious in mechanics. Every machine, no matter how much the operation of its intricate parts may border on the mysterious, is really made up of nothing but a few elemental motions known to each one of us. To begin at the first motion and follow each train through intelligently to its completion will convince us of the simplicity of it all.

Pouring Babbitt Metal.
A little kerosene poured into a box before running in the babbitt will prevent the explosion that sometimes occurs.

MANUFACTURE OF COKE.

Gas From the Ovens Operates Power Plants of New Mexico's Mines.

The quantity of coke made in New Mexico in 1913 was 407,045 short tons, valued at $1,548,536, the maximum record both in quantity and value. All the coke made in New Mexico is from coal mined from the Raton field in Colfax county.

Slack coal is used in the manufacture of coke, and as over 25 per cent of the total output of the mines yielding coking coal goes into slack an ample supply of fuel for the coke ovens is available.

All the ovens in the state are of the beehive type. At Dawson, however, 440 out of a total of 570 ovens, although of beehive type in construction, are provided with underflues through which the gases are conveyed to a large flue back of the ovens and thence to the power house. The heat obtained from the oven gases renders the use of other fuel in the power plant unnecessary. The power plant, in addition to furnishing power for the operation of the mines, for ventilation, electric haulage, the coal crusher, washery, etc., furnishes also steam heat to the offices, commissary, hotel, hospital and theater and electric light for the city of Dowson.

TIRE PROTECTION.

Old Casing Fitted With Fastening Attachments.

By an arrangement of hags fitted with rings which may be bolted into an old tire casing English motorists solve wear and tear on their new tires.

The device, which has only recently been brought out, is designed to prevent the cover of the good tires from coming in contact with the road surface. Kept in place of the new tire by a chain of particular design, old covers protect the new tires to such an extent that it is practically impossible for a puncture to occur. There is no need, so wear from friction between the outer cover and the tire, and it is almost impossible to discover from the appearance that a discarded cover is being used on the wheel.

FOR THE KIDDIES.

How to Make Soap Bubbles to Amuse the Children.

Making soap bubbles is great sport for the children when they are confined indoors. The first thing to be considered is the preparation of the solution. Plain yellow soap is the most reliable. It should be rubbed patiently into a bowl of tepid water until a heavy lather is formed. Every particle of lather must then be removed from the surface with a spoon.

The bubbles will be larger and last longer if a little glycerin is added to the soapy water. They may then be blown with an ordinary clay pipe and will grow from five to six inches in diameter without bursting. Moisten the forefinger with the soapy solution and try to push it through the bubble and try to push it through the bubble and try to push it through the bubble.

With a correctly prepared solution success in bubble blowing depends mainly upon the observance of two simple rules: First, the solution when once made must never be shaken up or stirred; second, everything upon which a bubble is to be blown must be liberally anointed with the soapy mixture. To blow a string of bubbles, first blow one from the pipe, throw it into

NEW COURSE OF STUDY

Eleventh Edition of the State Course of Study Published.

The 1914 edition of the State Course of Study has been sent to the school commissioners to be distributed by them to all the schools of the state. Compiler's section 22 of the general school law of 1911 provides that the Superintendent of Public Instruction shall prepare and have printed the course of study for the district schools of the state except city districts, which shall be prepared in all the district schools of the state. In this work Michigan leads, as Michigan is the first state to have a uniform course of study mandatory upon the district schools of the state. Michigan was prepared for this legislation through the excellent courses of study that have been sent out by the various state superintendents during the past years and through the adoption in a large majority of the schools of the state. The special value of the above statute is that all of the schools are now using this course of study.

The edition now distributed differs from the 1912 edition, which was the first, prepared under the authority of the statutes, in that the work in penmanship, physiology, geography, music and bookkeeping has been revised. Also in recognition of the value of play in education and of the great necessity for its direction, there is included in this course of study suggestions along this line. The changes made are all in harmony with modern educational thought and are along the line of the natural evolution in education. The work is fully outlined by grades and subjects so that pupils and parents may know definitely just what work is required for any grade. To insure efficient training in the elementary subjects necessary as a foundation for any work in life it is required that pupils take the full course. All through the course emphasis and insistence are placed upon thoroughness and drill upon fundamentals.

MRS. H. L. FRANCISCO DEAD

Popular Marion Township Resident Answered Call of the Grim Reaper.

Mrs. H. L. Francisco of Marion Township died at her home Wednesday, October 21, aged forty years. The immediate cause of death was blood poisoning, an illness of only two weeks duration.

The funeral service was held at the home last Thursday afternoon with Rev. Walker officiating and the remains were taken to West Liberty, Ohio, her girlhood home, Friday morning, where a burial service was held and interment was made.

Mrs. Francisco was married to H. L. Francisco December 24, 1908, and resided in Ithaca, Michigan, until two years ago, when she came to Charlevoix with her husband and located in Marion township.

Besides the husband, two children, Grace and Levl, survive. She also leaves to mourn their loss, her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Johnathan Thatcher, and an aunt, Miss Jaee Long of West Liberty, Ohio, and four brothers, Dr. J. E. Thatcher of Belle Fountaine, Ohio; Dr. Augustus Thatcher of Ashtabula, Ohio; William Thatcher of Alberta, Canada, and John Thatcher of Lima, Ohio, and one married sister residing near West Liberty. There are also two sons by a former marriage, Roger and George Sutphin, who survive.

Mrs. Francisco was a very devoted mother and wife and characterized herself by her ardent desires to make the best of life. She was a member and an ambitious worker of the Methodist church and will be greatly missed in that parish. She was also a member of the O. E. S. A host of friends and acquaintances made during her short residence in the county have extended universal sympathy to the bereaved family.

Bonds Disposed Of.

Charlevoix's $25,000 Bridge refunding bonds were disposed of last week to the Detroit Trust Company at par. The sale of the bonds were held up for some time during the recent flurry, but as soon as matters again settled down, they were disposed of. That the credit of the city of Charlevoix was considered excellent is illustrated by the disposal of these bonds, for in many cities they were unable to sell bonds enough to keep up local improvements.

RALLIES PLANNED FOR EVERY CITY

Anti-Saloon League to Carry On State-Wide Campaign.

Every Section of State to be Visited and Ministers to Preach on Subject.

During the week of November 16 to 22, inclusive, Michigan will be the scene of the third special or state-wide campaign held in connection with the carefully mapped out program of the Anti-Saloon League of America, aided by the various state leagues, to bring about national constitutional prohibition.

Every section of the state is to be visited and if possible one or more rallies will be held in every city and town in the commonwealth. This means several hundred meetings within seven days and it will require fifty or more speakers to address these meetings. The Anti-Saloon League promises to sweep the state like a whirlwind. On the Sunday preceding the formal opening of the special campaign practically every pastor in the state will preach on prohibition, these sermons to be followed by the circulation of petitions calling on the senators and representatives in congress to support the house joint prohibition resolution now pending before that body.

It is expected the signatures to these petitions will go into the hundreds of thousands. In addition each church organization and each of its allied societies, as such, will send a separate petition.

The object of the state-wide campaigns being held is to interest the people of the United States and entertain them as well as to instruct them as to the prohibition cause.

CAMPAIGN SONG

Words By W. E. Hampton
Air: "Marching Through Georgia"

Chase Osborn is the man for us; he's honest, true and brave;
He vetoed many useless bills, the people's cash to save.
It didn't please the gangsters; it made them howl and rave;
But we are voting for Osborn.

Chorus—

Hurrah, hurrah! Chase Osborn is a man;
Hurrah, hurrah! He's built on a good plan.
He's fair, he's square, he's fearless
In the campaign now he's on;
The people are cheering for Osborn.

His record is an open one, his life is spotless, too;
He has no use for saloons, he's just like me and you;
And when they mix in politics he gives them Gowdy, too;
That's why we are for Osborn.

Chorus—

And now, kind friends, we warn you, be careful how you vote;
Ferre at home may be all right, but the Dem. have got his goat.
He's ruled by politicians, he wears the bosses' coat;
So let's all vote for Chase Osborn.

Chorus—

Osborn is a credit to this splendid state of ours;
He is a brainy thinker with wondrous speaking powers;
He labors for the people through long and weary hours.
That's why we are for Osborn.

Chorus—

Chase Osborn is a winner; he's going to win this fall;
Standpatters and Progressives are cheering for him all;
He didn't want the office, but he answered to the call,
And now we are cheering for Osborn.

Chorus—

BEARS BRUNT OF LOCAL EXPENSES

Home Merchant Entitled to Patronage of Surrounding Territory.

Keep the Dollars at Home and They Will Grow New Dollars.

This is the season of the year when the mail order catalogue is sent broadcast over the country seeking whom it may devour. These documents are written in a catchy manner and illustrated with cuts of the goods which the flowery descriptions are supposed to fit. The chances are ten to one that somebody is hooked by grasping at this alluring bait every time one of these silent salesmen lands in a poorly regulated American home. Shopping by mail is played up in such a way that it seems easy, but in the end it turns out that the customer is easy instead of the system. After receiving and studying one of these silent messengers of outside forces that have for their object personal gain and the disorganizing of small town business, it would be well for the prospective purchaser of any of the articles described to go to some local firm and see what the same article can be bought for at home, where the buyer will be certain of getting value received for the purchase money. As a rule every article described in a mail order catalogue can be duplicated by home merchants at a saving of writing and express or freight charges. The customer then has the satisfaction of knowing when he buys at home that he is not only leaving his money in the community, where it will come back to him in the course of business events, and also knows that by trading at home he is doing his part to build up home business and thereby benefit the town to which he owes a debt of loyalty, because he gets his living from it and its industries. The catalogue house pays none of the local taxes and contributes absolutely nothing toward keeping the wheels of progress in motion. The mail order house draws everything from the small town and puts nothing back. It is an alien force whose policy is destructive and should not appeal to loyal citizens. The home merchant bears the brunt of local expenses and by so doing is entitled to the patronage of those who reside in the town and vicinity. By keeping the dollars at home they will grow new dollars that will come handy in helping the town over the hard and rough spots in its career.

MUST NOT IN- JURE PROPERTY

Warning Given by Chief of Police to Hallowe'en Merry-makers.

Boys and Girls Must Not Destroy Property—Will Not be Tolerated.

"Every boy and girl in Charlevoix can have plenty of fun Hallowe'en, but they must not destroy property."

Chief of Police Alcock has declared himself in favor of giving merry-makers such liberties as will bring real enjoyment to them, but such acts as tearing down signs, soaping windows, smashing property, tipping over sheds and other buildings, and other things that have in times past been done, will not be tolerated.

"Some youngsters, and possibly a few people of more advanced years, have taken it upon themselves on past Hallowe'ens to do many dollars damage to the property of persons whom they might not like," said the chief. "These people should understand that liberty is not license and that all such actions are tabooed. In other words, they may have all the fun they want but mustn't get gay."

WITHERS WRIGHT

Miss Amy Withers of This City Married at Racine, Wisconsin.

Miss Amy Withers, daughter of J. E. Withers of Charlevoix, and Fred J. Wright of Racine, Wisconsin, were quietly united in marriage Wednesday evening, last, in the Presbyterian church parsonage at Racine, Rev. C. C. Nickerson officiating. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Wright entertained a few intimate friends at a dinner party.

The bride and groom departed immediately after the dinner for a bridal trip to the northern part of the state. The bride is one of Racine's popular young ladies and the groom a prominent engineer. They will be at home on Wisconsin street after October 21.

GETS FINE SUPPORT

Supervisors of Ten Counties Make Appropriations for Development Bureau.

Supervisors of ten of the western Michigan counties made appropriation for the 1915 development campaign. These counties are Leelanau, Emmet, Charlevoix, Antrim, Grand Traverse, Benzie, Missaukee, Osceola, Lake and Kent. The other counties in the territory will be seen by representatives of the bureau before the close of the week and will make the usual appropriations, that the work may be carried on aggressively. The bureau is now in its sixth year and the results of development are becoming apparent. Many of the new orchards set out as a result of the work of the bureau are coming into bearing and the results are such as to warrant the promises made. Furthermore, the bureau's activities during the past three years in the way of attempting to secure better markets for the products are bringing results. A comprehensive campaign is being outlined and the number of people who will become familiar with the western Michigan country will be materially increased.

Annual School Officers' Meeting.

The annual meeting of the school officers of Charlevoix county will be held in the court house at Charlevoix Monday, November 2nd, 1914, beginning at 10 a. m.

The director or his representative selected from the board is entitled to a compensation of $2.00 and his actual traveling expenses.

Many boards have adopted the plan of paying the expense of the other members of the board who will attend the meeting.

Deputy Superintendent Munson will have charge of this meeting and it will be a valuable meeting for the school officers of the county and it is hoped that there will be a large attendance.

Come prepared to ask questions and to express your views.

Respectfully submitted,

URGES UNITED PARTY VOTE

Senator Chas. E. Townsend Greeted by Good Crowd Wednesday Evening.

Is One of the Most Convincing Speakers the Entire State Affords.

A large and enthusiastic audience greeted Senator Chas. Townsend and Frank D. Scott at the Charlevoix Theatre Wednesday evening.

Mr. Townsend has been here before and is considered one of the best orators that has ever visited this section. The senator is one of those magnetic speakers who is well posted on all present day national affairs as well as affairs of this, his own state, and is everything that could be desired in the way of a public speaker. His remarks were listened to with great interest by those present, and the many points he raised as to the different management between the Republican and Democratic parties in the management of national affairs were convincing and to the point.

Frank D. Scott, present state senator and candidate for congress from the 11th district, spoke at length on what he considered as the duties as a congressman, and stated that he stood for a square deal to all and special privileges to none; for the return of business activity and prosperity under Republican policies.

The party were met at Boyne Falls by a delegation from both that city and Boyne City. Short talks were made there before going to Boyne City, where addresses were made by both. From there they went to East Jordan, Ironton, and to this city, where the final talk of the day were made.

Purchases Bakery.

William H. Provost has purchased the Smith bakery and took possession October 20. Mr. Provost will continue the business at the old stand and extends a cordial invitation to old customers as well as new to make his store their trading place. Considerable improvements will be made and every thing possible done toward conducting a first-class bakery.

WORKING FOR GOOD OF COUNTY

VanPelt Boosting New Road Proposal For Good of All.

Wants Roads Built That Will Last and Put County on Map.

It must be perfectly plain to everyone that I, personally, have nothing to gain in advocating the building of a road around Pine Lake that will last one hundred years, the upkeep of, which will be so little for the first ten or twenty years that it will make but a trifling difference in our road tax during that time and it must also be apparent to all that a road of this kind will soon pay for itself in many ways.

I have asked the press of Charlevoix county.

"A county with a climate that grows fruit with a flavor," to print a talk on good roads given by Governor Edward F. Dunne of the State of Illinois, also a talk by the representative of the Associated Roads Organization of Cook county (Chicago included), Illinois. This will show the voters of Charlevoix county what the condition of the roads in the great state of Illinois and what is being done to better the deplorable condition now existing.

I take no credit for doing—or for writing—anything pertaining to good roads, but do know that such a road as I urge our county to build will put Charlevoix county on the map as no other county in any state in the union can boast of.

The talks referred to by Gov. Dunne and the Associated Roads Organization of Chicago and Cook County are lengthy and none of our papers will nor can afford to print them all in one issue, but I trust, for the good of the county, that they will run it off in installments and that the subscribers of every paper publishing same will save each paper in which one of these articles appears, so when completed you will have before you the consensus of the results on road building of some of the best and wisest men in our state, which will enable you to form a better opinion of the benefits to be derived from such a road than anything I can write. It is simply an educational propaganda on the advantages of building a road that will last one hundred years, as against one that will only last two or three years. The State of New York has already spent fifty million dollars on our kind of roads and are now spending another fifty million to rebuild the gravel and stone roads constructed with the first fifty million.

Read Governor Dunne's article and keep all of it as it appears in your papers.

Talk it over with your neighbor and vote as you think best. Help pull Charlevoix county out of the mud.

George H. VanPelt.

Field Sports.

When you keep a boy interested in football, baseball, tennis and the like you lessen the chances that he will get interested in things not so good for him.

The Youth's Companion, since its enlargement, gives generous space to this matter of athletic training and gets the best coaches in the country to write for it.

How to practice to become a first-rate pitcher, how to train for a race, how to learn the newest strokes in swimming—these and a hundred other topics of the greatest interest to boys—to girls, too, for that matter—are touched upon in the important department of The Companion.

And this is only a small part of the service which The Companion renders in any home which it enters. It has points of contact with a hundred interests.

If you do not know The Companion as it is to-day let us send you one or two current issues free, that you may thoroughly test the paper's quality. We will send also the Forecast for 1915.

Every new subscriber who sends $2 for the fifty-two weekly issues of 1915 will receive free all the issues of the paper for the remaining weeks of 1914; also The Companion Home Calendar for 1915—The Youth's Companion, 144 Berkeley street, Boston, Massachusetts.

MICHIGAN WOMAN'S STOMACH ILLS ENDED BY A WONDERFUL REMEDY

Mrs. Beamer of Flint is Delivered from Headaches by Just a Few Doses.

Mrs. Guy A. Beamer of 1907 North street, Flint, Michigan, was for a long time a victim of stomach and digestive troubles. One of the serious effects was in bad headaches, which attacked her almost daily.

She took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Then she wrote:

"I thank you very much for what your medicine has done for me. I never saw anything work such wonders as just the three bottles have. There was never a day in my life that I did not have my head tied up with a cloth and I have not had a headache since. I had been doctored by specialists, too, and received very little benefit."

Just such stories are told by thousands who have used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. It is known all over the United States. It clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings quick relief to sufferers with stomach ailments, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations; many are sure it has saved their lives.

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. One dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking, with surprising results. The most thorough system cleanser ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold by leading druggists everywhere.

COUNTY NORMAL.

(Lillian Akine)

Commissioner Milford of East Jordan also made us a call Tuesday.

Gladys Waterman and Beattie Allen are housekeepers for the week.

E. W. Abbott of Boyne City and D. S. Payton, county treasurer, visited our room Tuesday.

Marie Lamiman is editor-in-chief this week and Ruby Hooker assistant editor of the normal notes.

Gladys Waterman was chosen to act as "queen" at the county harvest home festival held at Boyne City Saturday.

Misses Grace Papineau and Agnes Carey visited in our room Friday. Miss Papineau was also a former student of our normal.

Harold Akine of Ball Lake and Ernest Peaslee, teacher in the Advance school, visited in the normal room Monday.

Mr. Peaslee gave us some valuable information from his own experience in regard to teaching school.

Miss Desale Groenink of East Jordan was a visitor in the normal room Wednesday. Miss Groenink was formerly a student of the normal here.

The class had an enjoyable trip to the home of Ethel Sanford Tuesday afternoon. We admired her flowers very much and each one had the privilege of bringing home a generous bouquet.

The harvest festival at Boyne City was attended by the normal class Saturday. When they reached Boyne City they were met by the Marine Band and taken on board a float to the festival hall. E. W. Abbott, president of the Harvest Festival Association, introduced the "queen" and presented her with a floral scepter. The exhibit was a very good one. Mr. Taft of the agricultural college at Lansing was one of the judges.

SYNOPSIS

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, International spy from General Love, whom Loubeque hates, in Manila. Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille nurses him in an attempt to recover the papers.

Lucille gets the papers, but the ship is wrecked. She is cast ashore on a Pacific island and is taken by a native chief to his hut to nurse his sick child.

The native child is restored to health, and the grateful natives idolize Lucille. Loubeque, also cast ashore, tries various plans to recover the papers, but in vain.

Loubeque, baffled, forges a message from a neighboring chief to lure Lucille away from her friends. She falls into a pitfall, losing the documents.

Loubeque's native aid steals the papers from his master, and Lucille takes them from the native after he is killed by a lion. She finds and follows an underground passage in the jungle.

Lucille falls into the hands of a tribe of ape men, whose leader drops a necklace of priceless rubies, which she takes. She and Loubeque are rescued from the island by a yacht commanded by Captain Wetherell.

The girl and Loubeque are set adrift in an open boat by Wetherell after she repulses the captain's advances, and he takes the papers.

Saved by fishermen, Lucille and Loubeque are in China. As she passes a house Loubeque's diary is thrown to her mysteriously. She tries to board a vessel bound for America. Loubeque recovers the papers from Wetherell.

Lucille stows away, is caught and dresses as a cabin boy with the aid of the captain of the steamer in order to search Loubeque's stateroom for the papers. He catches her at work.

Loubeque takes the papers from Lucille. Landing at San Francisco she is kidnapped by the spy and held a prisoner in Loubeque's house by Thompson.

CHAPTER XV.

Correspondence Under Difficulties.

TWO days and over a sign more of Loubeque. Lucille had feared and dreaded that first meeting.

The room assigned her was to all outward seeming a daintily furnished boudoir; but, trying the large window down, she found they could be let down from the top and were there covered by a thin netting of a metal that resisted every attempt at prying apart. Looking more carefully, she saw this same filament of wire was interwoven with the glass so they could not be completely smashed. The only means of escape lay by the door, and to get out that way involved a flight of steps which passed many rooms.

But she must escape. The thought of what Loubeque might be doing unimpeded drove her brain tyrannically against a worn-out body. She had the man's diary, wherein was evidence against him of such crimes as would have appalled the most hardened courts, would have set nations at one another's throats, entailed countless deaths. The thing was so deadly that, zealous though she was in her object of saving her sweetheart, Lucille knew she could never bring herself to the point of making public such a document. She had the rubies from the throat of the hideous idol in the subterranean cave. Times without number she regarded the glowing stones, shuddered at the blood red rays that struck her from each facet, imagining the heart of each to have borrowed some of its luster from the rivers of blood that had been shed through the lure of its mocking light.

Apparently she was free to come and go about the place as she pleased, but the very mockery of such a freedom made her real situation all the more. Absorbed in the hopeless task of finding some means of escape she took to having her meals served in her room, eating scarcely anything, so engrossed was she with her thoughts.

On the fourth day, as she sat beside the window, dejectedly looking out upon the well nigh deserted street, she was suddenly aware of a shadow falling upon the glass. She sprang to her feet, turned to face Loubeque. The spy was not smiling now. Instead there was a tender expression on his face, a look of sympathy. In his hands he held a newspaper and instantly she divined it held something that would hurt her. She nodded slowly, catching her breath with an effort, fighting back her nameless terror.

"Lucille!" The spy's eyes fell before the fear in the steady ones that met his own. "Lucille, you are too young yet to know that in the completion of any great work always there are those who must suffer." He stopped, evidently finding it hard to continue.

"I would, not harm you, Lucille. I would not cause you one moment's grief or misery, physical or mental, for anything in the world. But I would allow not even the very love I bear you because of your likeness to your mother to stand in the way of destroying you utterly should you attempt to get in my path. And so I am very happy today—very happy for myself, while I am at the same time very unhappy because of your distress. I know you cannot understand my feeling. I only wish you to know that you have stolen the fruits, the sweets of my victory."

"Victory?" She whispered the word aloud.

Silently he put the newspaper in her outstretched hand. She took it numbly, staring at the black, leaded type heading the column, staring at the familiar, the beloved name of her sweetheart there. When she looked up Hugo Loubeque was gone, had disappeared. But that did not matter to her now. The nature of his disappearance did not even impress her. Nothing mattered. The spy's victory was approaching completion.

Lucille looked about her wildly. She bent her tiny fists against the window, then stopped at the utter futility of it. She looked down, and her eyes stared wide into those of a pedestrian upon the sidewalk. It was the captain of the ship who had been her friend. She waved her hand, knowing from his expression that he recognized her, that he had been hunting her. He made a motion as of writing, and she nodded swiftly, then darted toward the little dressing table.

And there she sat, dumb with misery. In the delight of seeing a friend's face at the psychological moment, when her despair, her misery, her desperation, was at its height, she had not thought a simple thing like a pen, ink, paper, might be necessary. In despair Lucille looked about her. Paper she had. She tore the blank strip off the top of the newspaper page, tore it so that the headline regarding Lieutenant Gibson appeared beneath it. She stared helplessly in the mirror, her teeth fastened viciously in her lower lip, so viciously that when she withdrew them a tiny drop of red blood appeared upon the delicate skin. If only she had a pencil or pen, something to write with—

The blood drop fell upon the paper, catching it. Lucille gasped delightedly. Her hand seized a pin from the writing table and dabbed at the blot. It had dried up. Nerving herself she lightly jabbed the pin into the ball of her thumb, feverishly writing upon the blank paper. How painful it was! How swiftly the blood dried! But she must—she must—

"Prisoner of Loubeque—Here—Help—Read head!"

She swayed slightly. She could endure the torture no longer. It was sufficient. He could piece together what he read, what she had told him aboard the ship. But how to reach him with the fragmentary strip of paper? Tearing the neckpiece from about her throat she detached a jewel swiftly and wrapped the strip of paper about it. In one leap she had reached the window. The captain was still there.

For a moment Lucille hesitated. She must break the window pane. Swiftly she took a slipper from her foot, drew back and brought the tiny heel crashing against the glass. At the sound of smashing glass she heard a rustling without her door. The captain looked up at her, and simultaneously she filled the room with a shout as she watched him eagerly as he stooped to pick it up and then thrust it hurriedly in his pocket, passing on. She saw Thompson, the butler, slip hurriedly out of the door and take after him. Then a slight creaking, as of rusty hinges, and she stared about her in mute horror. She was moving down and walls were advancing forward. She was moving down and the room was moving with her.

Came a little groan, a tremor running through the walls of the room. Looking up she could see solid steel walls passing into place where the room she was in had been. Merely a cage—an elevator had been the boudoir where she was a captive. The machinery stopped working abruptly. She peered over the edge of the room, for she was merely standing on a flat surface so far as one side was concerned. To her ears came the lusty ringing of a bell. A huddled, black mass showed almost beneath her. Crouching upon the floor she leaned over and gingerly groped at it with her fingers, drawing them sharply back as they encountered human flesh.

For just a second she faltered before investigating her discovery. Loubeque must have come from her room in this fashion. It might be that in some way Loubeque had fallen and injured the machinery. To stoop down, take the papers from his pocket and hide them between the crack of the floor of the room and the bottom of the elevator was the work of an instant.

As the room glided gently into place without so much as a tremor she leaped down and lifted the cowering man's head to her lap. She had come barely in time, for the spy was struggling feebly to get to his feet. He smiled ruefully as he lighted a match and scanned the features of his companion. For a second he appeared dazed, then swift consternation crossed his face as his hand shot toward the place where he had placed the stolen papers.

"Come," he said quietly, his tones silky, yet dry and cold and hard. "Come, young lady. Of course you understand the papers will be found, and this is merely delaying the inevitable."

He did not wait for her to speak, merely touched her arm and assisted her to the platform. He stirred slightly. Came the whirr of machinery, almost immediately shut out. Once more the room was in motion, going upward this time. She closed her eyes instinctively before the mystery of it all. When she opened them once more she was in the place she had left. Everything was as it had been save for a broken window pane and the presence of Loubeque.

He regarded her narrowly, still smoking silently. He opened his lips as though to speak, then closed them sharply and stepped to the door, listening a moment, then ringing a bell, which was almost immediately answered by the butler and the woman who had first captured the girl.

Hurriedly Thompson explained what had happened—the pebble wrapped strip of white paper which the man outside had picked up, the manner in which he had mysteriously disappeared, ending the butler's pursuit, the admission of policemen to the house and the throwing of the spring that lowered the girl's room to the basement.

"And he got out of the way, eh?" Loubeque frowned thoughtfully, then laughed a dry, barking laugh as he turned to the girl. "And with all this luck working for you, Miss Lucille, you see how impossible it is to escape. Now I shall leave you alone to reflect upon the advisability of restoring the packet to me. Until then you will not be disturbed even by a servant. You may recall, my child, that thirst is a very unpleasant torture."

He closed the door behind him very softly. Not a sound came from without. Hunger, thirst, solitude—all three in this prison, this prison so much unlike a prison that it was rendered only the more hideous thereby. And even though outsiders knew she was being detained here they could not find her, could not even secure adequate evidence that she was here did they make an examination. She lunged herself upon the bed, burying her face in her hands and giving way to sobs.

She straightened, startled by a faint thicket against the window pane. Swiftly she approached the window. Upon the street no one was in sight. She looked up and espied the face of the captain peering cautiously from over the brick wall above her.

Feverishly she ripped at the netting which had been within the glass before she broke it. Carefully she drew the glass inside and laid it upon the floor. The netting gave slightly. She tore her hands opening the space until she could get her shoulders through. Slowly, round and round, she worked the opening. It was finally wide enough. She looked up. The captain nodded briefly, then disappeared.

In a moment he reappeared, slowly dangling a heavy rope from which he had made a looped chair. Lucille edged her way slowly through the opening. She stood upon the heavy sill outside, hanging to the netting with one hand while she reached for the rope with the other. The second time her fingers closed about it. Swiftly she tucked it about her skirts, then drew taut. Her feet swung clear of the ledge. Then she felt herself being slowly lifted, lifted in little spasmodic jerks.

Her finger-tips brushed the roof. Another pull and she had a firm hold and was drawing herself over. Powerful hands closed about her wrists, when from below came a shout that told she had been discovered.

With an oath the captain yanked her to the roof, jerked her there so violently she toppled and fell against him, straightened and caught his arm to support herself.

From beneath them came sounds of pursuit, hurrying footsteps upon stairs, loud voices. Lucille seemed to have all the initiative now. She grasped the man's arm and hurried him toward the closest chimney just as a sky-light door flung open where they had stood.

He drew a revolver and held it steadily pointing toward the place. A chip of plaster cracked at their feet. Lucille looked down at a flattened lead bullet. Yet there had been no shot.

Light Your House and Barns—Cook Your Meals
With Home-Made Acetylene

And Make Your Acetylene With a Pilot Lighting Plant

Pilot plants make Acetylene automatically a little at a time as you use it in your gas cooking stove and in your lights distributed throughout your house, your barns and out-buildings. You simply fill the generator with the gas-producing stone "Union Carbide" and water about once a month.

Pilot plants are approved by The National Board of Fire Insurance Underwriters.

All told, over 250,000 country homes are using Acetylene made the Pilot way.

A complete Pilot plant, consisting of generator, pipes—hand-some light fixtures and gas cook stove, can be installed in any country home in a couple of days' time.

Such a plant is a permanent improvement and will furnish you with the cheapest, safest and most practical light and fuel now available for country home requirements.

In no other state in the union are the people more directly interested in the result of the coming election than is true of Michigan and its people.

Every important industry in this state has been injured by Democratic legislation and Democratic management.

It has been estimated that Michigan people—many of them now burdened to the full extent of their ability to bear—will be compelled to share to an extent of several hundred thousand dollars in the stamp-paying feature referred to by its Democratic authors as a "war tax."

And the only war to which it is related is that which has been made upon the legitimate industries of the United States through Democratic legislation.

Every property owner in Michigan, every working man who is supporting his family in this state, every person related directly or indirectly to any Michigan business interest, and every voter possessed of citizenship in Michigan, should keep it in mind that this state is more directly interested in the outcome of the election of November third than are the people of any other state in the union.

Every Republican vote will be counted as a protest against the Democratic deficiency tax.

Every Republican vote will be noted as a protest against the most excessive appropriation totals in all the history of our state and nation.

The only interpretation that would Vote Nov. 3, 1914, for

B. J. Quick FOR Sheriff OF CHARLEVOIX COUNTY

and you will elect a man that will give the people an Economical Administration be put upon a Democratic victory in Michigan the coming election would be that the stamp tax deficiency scheme was approved of and that Michigan people accepted without protest all the hurtful attacks that have been made upon our state's important industries.

But the interpretation that would be put upon a Republican victory in Michigan would be that of a demand that national legislation should immediately face about and turn in the direction of home industry, home prosperity and a protective tariff surplus in the national treasury.

Keep these facts in mind when you cast your vote on election day.

REPUBLICAN voters should not forget that this year the names of their candidates appear in the second column on the ticket instead of the first column, as has been the case heretofore.

If they lose their enthusiasm for voting after receiving the right to vote, women will be consistently consistent.

CLAIMS of warring nations read like the predictions of rival campaign managers the night before election.

AN optimist is a Democrat who expects Vermont to go as Maine went.

GOVERNMENT LANDS

Valuable Tracts in Oklahoma Will be Disposed of at Auction.

Postmaster Finucan has received notification from Cato Sells, commissioner of Indian affairs, that an auction sale of Indian tribal lands and the surface of Indian segregated coal lands in Eastern Oklahoma will be conducted by the government authorities. The segregated lands will be sold by representatives of the secretary of the interior at different railroad points in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations in Eastern Oklahoma daily from November 16th to December 2nd. About 375,000 acres will be disposed of in tracts varying from 40 to 640 acres at minimum prices from $1 to $25 per acre. No more than 160 acres of agricultural lands or 640 acres of grazing lands will be sold to any one person.

The timber lands will be offered at auction at railroad points in the Choctaw nation daily from November 3rd to November 12th, 970,000 acres being disposed of in this manner. No more than 160 acres will be sold to any one person.

Proposed New Road.

J. Frank Stevens, the Missaukee county representative, who for a year has been urging Mackinaw business men and capitalists to put money in a railroad from Leota to Stratford in the northern part of Missaukee county, thus serving the eastern half of Missaukee and the western half of Roscommon counties, is trying to interest eastern capitalists in a line from Lansing to Charlevoix. He suggests a company be organized and purchase the P. M. branches which extend from Mount Pleasant to Coleman and Leota and from Stratford to Charlevoix. Then the company could connect the branches from Lansing to Mt. Pleasant and from Leota to Stratford, making a direct line from Lansing to Charlevoix. The proposed road would mean a great deal to this city, as Charlevoix would then be the terminal of this end of the route, giving better service and a shorter route to the southern part of the state.

VENOMOUS WEAPONS.

Blowguns of the Mangeromas and Their Poisoned Arrows.

The mysterious poison with which some of the South American tribes smear the points of their arrows is a thick sirup made by boiling together parts of the Strychnos toxifera vine and other plants and a number of the deadly venomous black ants of the Amazon region.

Instead of a bow the Mangeromas use a blowgun, a very ingenious weapon. It is made from a tall, hollow reed that grows near the river banks, and at one end it has a mouthpiece made from the hollowed half of the fruit of the Aracara palm. When the hunter sees a monkey or bird in the top of a tree, often 100 feet above him, he puts a poisoned arrow in the tube and raises the mouthpiece to his lips. With his left hand he finds the necessary elevation. His lungs with air and blow into the tube with no apparent exertion. The arrow flies out swiftly and silently. Almost as soon as the animal is struck it drops to the ground paralyzed.

The flesh of the game is not injured by the poison. Like the venom of snakes, it is dangerous when introduced into the vascular system, but harmless when taken into the stomach. The action of the drug on birds culminates in from three to four minutes; a monkey died in five minutes and a three-toed sloth expired in seven minutes. A human being cannot survive more than fifteen minutes. The slightest scratch means inevitable death. Even the Indians know no antidote.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

DIAGNOSING DISEASE.

A Plea For Annual Medical Examinations For Every One.

We have heard too much about the rights of the individual; let us know more about his duties. Too much stress has been laid on the sacredness of private property and too little on the duty of all to contribute to the welfare of the whole. Preventive medicine has demonstrated in a practical way the force of the ill-fated statements that no man liveth to himself alone and that every man is his brother's keeper.

If preventive medicine is to bestow on man its richest service the time must come when every citizen will submit himself to a thorough medical examination once a year or oftener. The benefits which would result from such a service are so evident to medical men that detail is not desirable. When recognized in their early stages most of the diseases which now prevail are amenable to treatment.

The early recognition of tuberculosis, cancer and heart disease, with the elimination of the more acute infectious diseases, would add something like fifteen years to the average life, besides saving much in invalidism and suffering. The ultimate goal of science is the domination of the forces of nature and their utilization in promoting the welfare of mankind. Science must discover the facts and medicine must make the application for either cure or prevention.—Victor C. Vaughan, M. D., in Journal of American Medical Association

An Odd Problem.

Can you place ten lumps of sugar in three teaspoons so that there is an odd number of lumps in each cup? A statistician to whom this problem was once propounded declared it was impossible to accomplish such a feat, but the following explanation shows that it is not only possible, but very easy to accomplish. Put one lump in one cup, two lumps in another cup and seven lumps in the third cup, and then put the cup with one lump in the cup with the two lumps. By placing the cup that holds one lump inside the one that holds two lumps it can be correctly stated that every cup contains an odd number of lumps, for if a cup contains another cup it also contains the contents of that second cup.

Consoling.

Noticing that his lady cashier was weeping copiously and sucking her finger, the proprietor asked her what was the matter.

Sobbingly she told him she had pinched her finger in the cash register.

"Never mind, little girl," he said. "A great many more cashiers got pinched before there were any cash registers."—Indianapolis Star.

The Worm Turned.

"Is any one waiting on you?" finally asked the haughty saleslady, condescending at last to notice the shopping person.

"I'm afraid not," replied the latter. "My husband was—I left him outside—but I'm afraid he's become disgraced and gone home."—Toledo Blade.

Woman, Lovely Woman.

Every time a new young man calls the girl who wouldn't know a waffle griddle from a nutmeg grater gets terribly domestic in the trend of her conversation.—Florida Times-Union.

To Make Them Smart.

"Mr. Pedagog was an old time teacher. He believes in the rod to brighten up dull boys."

"Well, isn't that the natural way to make them smart?"

Spray the Cows.

While it requires a little extra time to spray your cows with fly remedies, it certainly pays in the long run. Some people who own cows will tell you that one application will do for all summer, but you must not pay attention to that. Good dairymen believe in spraying milk cows all through the time, and it is necessary to do the spraying every day.

To You

When a man becomes a Candidate for any office everything false in the world is said about him. This is happening today in an effort to deprive me of your support. My opponents are sending thousands and thousands of circulars and advertising matter throughout this entire district. They have their headquarters, managers, assistant managers, field men and advertising men. I have no idea how much money is being spent to defeat me, but the barrel seems to be open. Are they opposed to uniform protective and labor laws?

Are they opposed to the government helping the poor man to have a good road, a good highway?

Are they opposed to the great masses being prosperous instead of a few becoming rich while a great army of people are unemployed, and cannot secure employment?

My primary campaign in which you nominated me was an appeal to you. This campaign for my election has been the same. I cannot afford to spend a lot of money because I haven't it and I would not if I had, because if I am elected can and shall represent you and you alone. I will be tied to no interests, except your interests. I will not have to get back a lot of money, to your injury. My opponents have called my campaign a poor man's campaign. Their jeer does not daunt me and I shall finish as I started; aligned with no interests; tied to no combinations. My only pledge being a solemn promise to carry out the pledges I made to you in my primary campaign and on my cards; a pledge to policies which mean a return of business activity; work for the unemployed; a square deal to all and special privilege to none. This is my pledge to you.

Very sincerely,
FRANK D. SCOTT.

BIBLE STUDY ON MOCK TRIALS OF JESUS.
Matthew 26:57-68--Nov. 1.
"As a lamb that is led to the slaughter, and as a sheep before its shearers is dumb, so He opened not His mouth."--Isaiah 53:7.

JESUS was arrested, neither by Pilate's orders nor by Herod's, but by their soldiers. His arrest was made at the instance of the high priest and his associates, who had concluded that Jesus' life and ministry were inimical to what they considered to be the best interests of Judah. The murder of Jesus was plotted in advance. But the murderers sought some excuse for their conduct, as all murderers do; and, being politi-cians, they sought also an outward semblance of justice, having regard for the opinions of others of tenderer consciences than themselves.

Under the charge of the priests were men who served as policemen in the Temple and its precincts. These were the servants of the high priest; and armed with maces, swords and lan-terns, they followed Jesus, who knew that on this particular night Jesus pur-posed to rendezvous with His disciples in the Garden of Gethsemane.

They brought Jesus directly to the house of Annas, a superannuated high priest, whose son-in-law Calaphas offi-ciated in his stead. Annas attempted an examination of Jesus, but met with little success, and turned Him over to Calaphas, whose house was in the same courtyard. There, at probably three o'clock in the morning, the San-hedrin had gath-ered.

The plot for Jesus' death was deeply laid. The hours between the time when Judas left the upper room and the time of this trial were spent in gathering the Sanhedrin from their various homes throughout the city. Conditions were considered desper-ate enough to justify the murder of Him who spoke as never man spoke, because His teaching weakened the power of the religious leaders and of the traditions of the elders.

The Sanhedrin was composed of sev-enty of the most influential Jews--an ecclesiastical court, whose voice prop-erly had great influence with the Ro-man Governor. Pilate, in whose hands alone lay the power of life or death.

Calaphas not only filled the office of high priest, but in this particular case acted as prosecuting attorney. While gathering the Sanhedrin, he had not forgotten to collect witnesses, who are said to have been bribed to give their testimony. When the witnesses were called, their testimonies were self-con-tradictory; and the Jewish Law re-quired that at least two witnesses must agree before any matter could be con-sidered proven. Finally two agreed that they had heard Jesus say that He could destroy the Temple and rebuild it in three days. They had probably misunderstood Jesus. However, their testimonies were too slight to make a basis for conviction.

As a last resort, Calaphas attempted to get Jesus Himself to say something which he could construe to be blas-phemy. To the various questions Jesus answered nothing; but finally Calaphas exclaimed, "I adjure Thee by the living God, tell me truly, Art Thou Messiah?" For Jesus to have kept quiet and not answer this ques-tion would have been to deny this truth and to fail to give proper witness to the Sanhedrin. He therefore avow-ed that Calaphas had expressed the truth in what he had implied.

Calaphas leaped to his feet, anxious to grasp the opportunity of calling this statement blasphemy; but Jesus continued, "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and com-ing in the clouds of Heaven." Af-fecting great hor-ror, Calaphas dra-matically tore his priestly garment, as implying that he had heard something awful in deed. Turning to the Sanhedrin he inquired, "What further need of wit-nesses have we? Ye yourselves have heard His blasphemy." They answered, "He is worthy of death."

Apparently only two refrained from this vote--Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea, both of whom had learned to have great respect for Jesus. But what influence could they have? At the very most, they could claim that the proceedings of the Sanhedrin were illegal--that the Law forbade that they should sit to condemn any-body to death in the nighttime.

Jesus was remanded to an adjoining room, while the Sanhedrin waited to take official action after daybreak. Meantime, in that waiting hall, Jesus, condemned by the high priest as a blasphemous and misleader, was sub-jected to various indignities by the attaches of the palace, who ignorantly supposed that whatever was done by the high priest must be right.

Realizing that nothing was happen-ing to Him contrary to the Father's will, Jesus permitted matters to take their course, without attempting to hinder the results. Who can doubt that His brilliant mind could quickly have brought such an argument that the Sanhedrin would not have dared to condemn Him.

Keep in touch with what is going on; Read the Courier; that's the best way.

DEATH ENDS SUFFERING

Russell Crapsey Had Been a Resident of Charlevoix But a Short Time.

Russell Crapsey, aged 64 years, passed away last Thursday evening at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ed. Brock. He had been ill for some time and the end had been expected.

Mr. and Mrs. Crapsey moved from Boyne City to Charlevoix about six weeks ago, where he had been employ-ed in the chemical plant for the past ten years. He had been suffering from some time from chemical poisoning, and came here in the hopes of obtaining aid from Charlevoix physicians.

Mr. Crapsey was born in Hillsdale county, March 22, 1850. He was mar-ried to Miss Anna Sharp in 1875. To this union four children were given. The remaining ones are Lyman Crapsey of Boyne City, Rena McCune of Boyne City, and Mrs. Ed. Brock of this city.

Funeral services were held from the home of his daughter at 2:30 o'clock p. m. Saturday, Rev. Quinton Walker officiating. Burial at Brookside ceme-tery. The pall bearers were all his former friends from Boyne City.

spray of sand into her face, and she darted aside—darted into a yawning blackness.

When she opened her eyes, she was surprised to find that there had been no fall worth mentioning, that she had merely been driven toward a trap door and caught as she toppled down. Loubouque was watching her, a curiously twisted smile playing about the corners of his mouth.

"You have too many friends, Lucille," he said.

"Yes," he murmured, after a moment's silence. "You are altogether too too alpey, too nerve racking a prisoner. I think, while the search for the packet is going on it would save wear and tear on our constitutions to move you to my ranch—my ranch in Mexico. A beautiful spot," he smiled. "I trust you will enjoy it as much as I have."

Lucille looked at him steadily. In the eyes of both glowed an indomitable purpose, a hard resolve, a mutual admiration. Loubouque smiled once more, this time grimly.

"Honors have been too even till now. I fancy the ranch will settle the rubber satisfactorily—at any rate, satisfactorily to me."

As Thompson, the butter-thief, swiftly descended to the ground floor and out into the court and knelt over the body of the man who had fallen from the roof top, his hands dithered over the man like tiny, white birds. Through the pockets he went, rifling them, completely and replacing those things which would be of no value to him. He stopped as he unwrapped the note Lucille had written on the scrap of paper and bound about the ruby.

Incredulity, avarice and puzzled delight fought for mastery upon his face. In his eyes. Scrolling the ruby in his pocket, he carefully lifted his burden and carried it to the basement of the house. Then he took one last, loving look at his find and started in search of his counting brain to gain the rest of the necklace, a plan whereby Loubouque was to be no gainer.

CHAPTER XVII.

A Thief is Rudely Foiled.

QUIETLY Lucille allowed herself to be conducted back to the room from which she had just made her escape. Her heart was so heavy over the death of the captain she did not care what happened.

She had tried her best, but still failure dogged her footsteps. Her sweetheart had resigned from the army under such a cloud as must have broken his spirit completely. His heart she knew was already broken by her seeming disbelief in him. Her father was entangled in the same net with his aid, and she held the key to the situation a key with no lock to fit. She alone knew where the papers that would clear up the entire mystery were located, and she was a prisoner.

"Mr. Loubouque's compliments, Miss Lucille," murmured the butler as he noiselessly approached with a tiny glass of liquor, "and he thought a tiny slip might prove beneficial to the nerves."

"Thank you, Thompson," she murmured sweetly. "Tell your present employer I shall gladly do so. But," she added, her eyes flashing maliciously, "I forgot Mr. Loubouque has been your employer right along."

"Quite so, Miss Lucille. Thank you." Before his perfect aplomb Lucille stood undecided. Her nerves were shattered.

tered, and the drink, she knew, would do her good. But there had been that look in the man's eyes. She could not be mistaken in it. She touched her tongue to the delicious, fiery stuff and waited. A sensation of comfort slowly approached her weary spirit—a feeling of lassitude. She fought the sensation away.

Pouring out the doctored liquor carefully, she lay against the pillows in a posture of dreamless sleep. It was half an hour before her patience was rewarded. Then Thompson slipped stealthily into the room. Lucille flexed herself—a steel spring wound to its last notch.

Thompson approached swiftly, silently. He was beside her, leaning over her, his hand groping at her throat; a little exclamation of triumph as his finger pads touched the necklace. It was in his hands, and then the steel spring coiled with tremendous and denness.

Taken by surprise before the vicious fury at the girl's attack the butler staggered back. Before he could recover she was upon him, driving him toward the door. He lifted his hands to fend his face, then stopped abruptly as he staggered into his master, just entering the room.

Hugo Loubouque waited, watching the furious girl and the ruffled butler curiously. A smile curved his lips as he turned toward her.

"You object to the draft, I presume. I assure you it has no ill effects and will make the journey one of pleasure instead of weariness." Then he whirled upon the butler, his face hard as granite, his teeth clapping off each word like steel particles.

"What are you doing here?"

"I came to see if the draft had taken effect," stammered the butler.

"By what authority?"

"Asking your pardon, sir, but I suggested it and was afraid it might have a bad effect. I knew to take an interest in Miss Lucille in Manila, sir, and did not wish—"

Loubouque frowned heavily, but cut him short with an impatient wave of his hand. Lucille felt a sudden impulse to tell him the truth, but conquered it swiftly. She could fight Thompson much easier than this man.

She must keep her own counsel. The spy turned to her again.

"You did not take the draft?"

"No."

"I assure you on my word as a gentleman that it will cause you no inconvenience. Further, I hoped not to be obliged to tell you that if you do not take it willingly you will be compelled to get it down."

She bent her head docilely. Resistance was out of the question, and, after all, she must save her strength to fight the big thugs. After a moment's hesitation, a shudder at the enticing colors shed from the stuff, she drained the glass.

Languor, comfort, peace. She gave herself up to the drug with a prayer, a prayer she felt so certain would be heeded, that in her slumber a smile parted her lips, played about her countenance. And when she awoke she was at Loubouque's Mexican ranch.

Low, rambling houses of Spanish architecture dotted the great area which the curiously fantastic, wholly artistic fence inclosed. The grounds were laid out in orderly fashion, bloom like the garden of Eden with a riotous profusion of flowers and plants.

This was a new Loubouque she met there. Always had she associated him with the manner of her knowing him. Times he had been tender, other times he had been cruel, always was he crafty, cunning, courageous, a one ideal man. But now he seemed all poet, painter. She could hear the softened tones of his voice as, with some of his companions, he wandered about the grounds, tenderly explaining to them the history, the beauty of the flowers, the rare species he had imported for the place.

It was after one of these rambles that she noticed signs of some impending change about the mansion. One morning she suddenly walked toward her, entering the house to shortly enter her room.

"I am leaving today," he began abruptly, all the nature lover gone from his cold, stern manner. "Again I ask you to tell me where you put the papers."

"Then they haven't been found?" She stopped abruptly, realizing that her delight had revealed quite as much as his demand.

"I am sorry, Lucille, that you cannot see the folly of this. It is your last chance to tell me. It is your last chance to count me a friend. I am waiting."

She did not answer. Their eyes met and held, both filled with an unaltered purpose. Then Loubouque, without a word, left the room.

Nur did she see him again. That he had gone she knew from the laxness about the household among his servants. It gave her food for hope. She must escape—she must. She must escape before the iron grip of dreamy languor about the place became unbreakable.

But always when she wandered about she would encounter one of Loubouque's aids, always masked, always casually surprised at coming upon her, always urbane and polite, yet insistent upon turning her in an opposite direction. It got upon her nerves to such an extent that she finally took to the house and remained there. Every room was grated, and, though she knew they were not here for the purpose, they served it admirably.

Thompson seemed upon his master's departure to have lost all those thoughts of the ruby necklace his fingers had touched seared itself upon his brain.

She recalled how he had served in her father's house so long with never a suspicion from any one that he was other than the perfect butler with a thought outside of his work. And then she recalled the incident of the necklace, always would she shudder at the recollection, then deliberately drive it from her mind.

It was the fourth day since the departure of the master of the place that, standing beside her iron barred window, she saw the figure of a man toppling a rise in the distance and drawing swiftly nearer. There was something strangely familiar about him, something she seemed to recall. In slanted bolero, tight trousers and gold braided sombrero of straw, his long black hair waving gracefully to his shoulders, the man made an impressive figure as he fastened steadily, undeviating eyes upon her window until she was positive he was looking at her for a purpose. Low voices buzzed in conversation, then the man appeared before her, offering his arm.

"Senior Loubouque sent me that I might escort you about the grounds, might place myself at your disposal," he murmured.

Lucille drew away from him at mention of his master, but something in the meaning eyes behind the mask reassured her and she moved out into the patio. Here they passed Thompson, whose eyes darted a message of suspicion at them.

"He thinks all is not right," said the man quietly when they were out of sight. "Well," he added, with a low sigh, "he is right in his suspicion. I could not hope to fool that man. Only a little less wise is he than Hugo himself."

"Not right! Then you have come to help me?"

"I have come," he answered quietly, "because I could not help coming. I have come because since first I looked upon you—you will forgive me—there in the city home of Hugo, when I looked upon your face I have seen no other I have come because I could not stay away. I have come against the will of the man to whom I owe everything, the man I love, because you called me, because—"

She touched his arm lightly with her fingers in mute appeal. Her woman's instinct told her that such a love as this might be turned to account.

Slowly they wandered through the beautiful gardens, speaking of what they saw, yet never juggling upon the subject nearest both their hearts. Suddenly the man seemed unable to stand the strain longer, and she touched his arm sympathetically, but he drew away with a little cry of pain.

Slowly They Wandered Through the Gardens.

"Come with me to the crystal hall," he cried, "and see the vision that has haunted my eyes so long a time. Come with me to the crystal and see the face that has made me forget my vows; forget the one I love and fear; forget everything save the desire for life that I may lay down to bring a smile to it. Come with me, lady of my heart."

Before the tempestuousness of his voice Lucille followed his lead. Gone from her was every thought of immediate escape. She saw that the man could not be handled easily; that she could not escape from him any more than she could from the other minions of the spy without the use of craft, and yet she felt a curious sympathy for him, pain that she must harm him.

Before the great crystal hall that was set upon the flagging beside the patio fountain, beside which stood the monstrous, hoary, gray palm tree, he halted, staring through the silts of his mask into its clear depths. She trembled as she looked upon the flaming eyes so close to the reflection of her own face. Suddenly he tore the mask from him and tossed it to one side, closing his arm fiercely about her waist and drawing her soft cheek against his swarthy one. Together they stared into the hall, his eyes luminous with a wild love, hers misted with mingled sympathy and fear. Gently she disentangled his fingers, surprised at the numbness of them, the ease with which they responded to her will.

"You must go back," he murmured hoarsely. "I was mad to think of such a plan."

"I see a face," she murmured softly, her voice very low and far away. "I see a face and a scene that is different from the one you see. I see Manila—home—loved ones—loved eyes grieving for a girl they think is lost to them forever. I see a man, the handsomest, bravest, truest man in the world—the man I love. He is disgraced. He is heartbroken. He is giving up the sword he loved, the sword he swore to never lift save in defense of his country's honor and the honor of a woman. He is giving up all that life holds dear to him. Just as he has long since been bereft of all he cared to have from life—because I am imprisoned here.

"And I do not care for anything except his happiness. He is my whole world. I would sacrifice everything for him and for his honor." She turned swiftly, her hands reaching toward her neck and unfastening the ruby necklace. "Here, my friend, take this. It is all I have to give except my gratitude. Take it and help me to the man I love."

He took the necklace, turning it idly about in his hands, then hungrily lifted his eyes to her face, as though inanimate beauty was a thing of no account in comparison. He took her arm again and thoughtfully led her around devious paths to a deep, sunken well, before which he paused, a curious smile upon his lips.

"It is the wishing well," he murmured. "The wishing well before which all who have looked into the crystal ball and seen that their heart most desires must kneel and make request. It is the legend, but, ah!—He turned away to hide the swift contention of jealousy and pain that suffused his face."

She knelt beside the well, almost fearful of the magic powers he ascribed to it.

"Oh, wishing well, let me but hold in my hands the honor of my sweetheart that I may give it back to him! Let me but serve his happiness and I shall ask for nothing more. Do with me as you desire, but grant my only wish."

He touched her lightly upon the arm, and she rose obediently, her eyes glowing like jewels. Lightly he placed the ruby necklace about her neck.

"One look in your eyes," he said softly, his mellow voice breaking under the torment of what he knew to be a hopeless love. "Is more beautiful, more rare, more precious to me than any jewel. Come!"

Slowly, silently, yet in perfect understanding, they moved luck to the house.

Stupendous Palace of Horticulture, Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915

THE Palace of Horticulture of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition is the most striking architectural triumph ever created for any Exposition. Whether the sweep of the Exposition's 135 acres is viewed from the distant hills or from a nearer view, this commanding edifice attracts early attention and admiration. The great dome is the largest hemispherical glass dome in the world. It is 185 feet high and has a diameter of 152 feet. It is crowned by a mammoth basket. Surrounding this dome are the spires that give the Saracenic influence, and these are of a marble whiteness and surrounded by beautiful sculptured figures of young women. In a general way the palace follows the ideas incorporated in the mosque of Sultan Ahmed I. The decorations and rich ornamentation have the French renaissance feeling. The numerous smaller domes that surround the building have latticed work, where vines and flowers will bloom to give added beauty to this building type of plants and flowers. The extreme length of the palace is 600 feet and the width 300 feet.

REMEDY FOR WHEAT PEST.

East Aphid Causes an Annual Loss of Thousands of Bushels.

The little insect that causes an annual loss in this country of thousands of bushels of wheat and known as the "east aphid" can be controlled when once it has gained headway. By proper precautions however, serious outbreaks can be prevented. This insect often escapes notice, but it is probably the most widely distributed of the important plant lice which attack wheat and oats, and its depredations are only excelled by the so called "green bug."

As the east aphid does not ordinarily appear suddenly in great swarms, as does the "green bug," it has never been considered a pest of great importance. It is easily overlooked by the casual observer, especially in the fall, when it occurs at the base of the plants and on the roots. However, it is usually always present on the wheat, and observations lead investigators to consider that these parasites weaken the plants and decrease the yield to an important extent, even though they may not be conspicuous and the decrease in yield not enough to be recognizable, as in the case of the "green bug."

The adult wingless insect is about the size of a pin head and is yellowish green to olive green in color. The winged insect has a black head, the abdomen being green and the antennae black. The eggs are laid in crevices of the bark, or between the leaf and twig of the apple tree and when first deposited are pale greenish in color. They soon change, however, to a shining black and retain this color until they hatch in the spring.

The east aphid occurs on grasses and grasses throughout the summer. The eggs are laid but once a year, in the fall. In the spring the eggs hatch, and throughout the summer there are sixteen or more generations produced, all females. The last generation in the fall contains both males and females. As the weather becomes cooler some of the females seek the lower parts or roots of wheat and other plants of the grass family and here pass the winter, or the winged insects coming from the grain may seek such trees as the apple, the egg laying females of this generation in turn depositing eggs on the twigs and branches.

The little wheat pest thrives best in rank growing grain, as in spots where immature piles or straw stacks have stood. These places are usually the center of infestation, and the lice may be found there even during the winter. Therefore the volunteer growth of wheat that occurs in the vicinity of straw stacks or immature piles should be plowed under or otherwise destroyed late in the fall in order to destroy the plant lice breeding thereon. In some cases it may be desirable to destroy this vegetation even earlier—that is, before the winter wheat is planted or at least before it makes any growth above ground.

The pasturing of cattle in wheat and oat fields in Oklahoma and Texas during the late fall or early winter has proved a desirable method of destroying the breeding places of the pest. As in the case of many other grain pests, crop rotation is of much importance in the control of this aphid. Wheat fields should be located as far from the previous year's grain fields as possible, and especially should they be planted some distance from standing straw stacks. It is also advisable to plant grain as far as possible from apple and other trees which harbor the insect during the fall, winter and spring months.

Direct applications are hardly practicable in grain fields, but where only small areas are badly infested spraying with blackleaf-40 at the rate of one part of this insecticide to 900 parts of water, plus one pound of soap to each 100 gallons of spray liquid, will doubtless prove efficacious, provided the application is thorough.

The above remedial and preventive measures for this destructive parasite are all the more important because there is little hope of controlling it after it has once gained much headway and because, being so inconspicuous, it is liable to become present in great numbers before it is noticed.

EARLY VISITING CARDS.

Those Used in Italy Were Elaborate Works of Art.

Some authorities hold that the origin of the visiting card lay in the circumstance that when Pericles first laid siege to the heart of Aspasia he sent her a bouquet to which, fearful lest she might not guess from whom the compliment proceeded, he caused to be attached a strip of wood wherein his name was cut.

According to B. R. R. R., who, among others, has been at much pains to compile the history of the card, it is difficult to say when it was first used to Greene or in China. However that may be, it seems to be an ascertained fact that the visiting card did not really obtain to any extent in Europe until the time of Louis XIV. It crossed the Pyrenees with Philip of Anjou when he was installed in the palace at Madrid, and Louis himself was the cause of its being introduced into the Netherlands.

Then it was adopted in Italy, where it was subjected to much elaboration. First, the cards showed a modest border of flowers or leaves; then appeared landscapes, bits of architecture, allegories, etc. Finally came scenes of rural life, alternating with views of monuments and towns. The name was printed on the picture of a wall, a tree or a fountain.

A view of the Adriatic figured on the card of Count Alexandre Papoli, while the Franco family favored a large stone guarded by two dogs, with the sculptor's name of Verona in the background.—Baltimore News.

ITS PRODUCT TOO GOOD.

A Wonderful Oil Well That Was Found in the Balkans.

In Mr. Caton Woodville's "Random Recollections" is the story of a rich oil well that was discovered in the Balkans.

On one of his journeys he was shown a deep hole, sunk most probably by the ancient inhabitants of the country for mining purposes, but which he was assured was a petroleum well. Afterward Mr. Woodville heard the full story of this well.

A petroleum "find" was reported from the district, and an expert from Baku, in the Caucasus, the great petroleum district, was sent to the Balkans by a syndicate to inquire into this valuable discovery. He was taken by eager natives to this hole, and a bucket was dropped down at the end of a long rope and drawn up again, brimful of oil.

The expert examined the contents of the bucket, tested it carefully, and then, turning to the assembled natives, he exclaimed: "This is the most wonderful oil well in the world. The petroleum is already refined."

The explanation was, of course, that some enterprising person, not knowing that petroleum comes from the oil wells in a crude state, had carefully placed some ordinary commercial petroleum in the well in the hope that the expert would think there really was an oil well there and offer a big price for the property.

Mrs. Barrow was worried. That fact was evident to her husband, although she endeavored to maintain a cheerful manner. Before the evening meal was over, however, he discovered the cause of her anxiety.

"Will," said she, "I am very much afraid that my bank is in a bad way." "How foolish, Mabel! Don't let that cause you a moment's worry. Why, it's one of the strongest financial institutions in the state. Whatever got that idea into your head?" "Well, it's very strange," replied Mrs. Barrow, still unconvinced. HORSE POINTERS.

Indigestion is the cause of more than half the diseases of the horse and largely caused by improper food and working horses on full stomachs.

A bright, intelligent man, a good manager and a close observer will save more than his wages in the amount of work he will accomplish and in maintaining the condition of his team.

The mule should never be kept in a stall, but in a large, roomy pen. An open lot with a shed for shelter is better.

Horse breeding requires more capital, is more profitable, if successful, and involves larger losses, if not, than any other kind of stock breeding.

One of the greatest mistakes made by mare owners is the frantic attempt to produce draft stock from light mares at first cross with lig stallions.

STARTING WITH HOGS.

Important Points to Consider When Selecting a Sow.

The purchase of bred sows is perhaps the easiest way to start in the swine business, and owing to the rapid rate of increase the desired number of breeding animals can soon be established, writes F. C. Minkler in the Rural New Yorker. In choosing such a sow for breeding purposes the following points are of importance:

She should be pure bred, well grown and developed by a reliable breeder and registered in a record association in good standing.

She should trace to a large, even litter, farrowed by a kindly disposed, heavy milking dam that showed good size, vigor, quality and fleshing characteristics. The pedigree should show in short tabulation family performance and popular breeding.

She should evidence good weight for age, possess a clean, shapely head; large, bright eyes; heavy, well set jaws; light, neat jaw; trim ears, with a short, smooth neck. She should possess, if in good condition, a long, straight, broad back; smooth, compact shoulders; deep, well arched sides, with even width throughout. The hams should be plump and shapely. The under line should be trim and dotted with many evenly placed rudimentary ribs. The legs should be straight and strong, with clean, dense bone, and the pasterns well supported. From every viewpoint she should evidence style, finish and symmetry.

Quality, as exhibited by the fine, silky coat of hair, refined head and shoulder, clean, like bone and trim belly, determines dressing percentage. Avoid selecting highly conditioned show animals for breeding purposes, as very often they prove unable to reproduce in satisfactory numbers with any degree of regularity.

The use of serum and virus has revolutionized the treatment for prevention against cholera, and if convenient to obtain immune foundation stock initial losses and disappointments will be lessened.

THE RESTLESS COW.

Mistake to Attempt to Control Them at Milking Time.

We consider it a mistake to try to keep a restless cow quiet, says the editor of Hoard's Dairyman. We have had experience with such animals and found it a better practice to let them be restless rather than to try any method of quieting them. Unless a person can adjust himself to a row of this kind it is more or less annoying, but if he will consider that it is practically impossible for the cow to behave in any other way then he will make the best of the situation, and the annoyance will not be so great. To attempt to keep an animal of this kind quiet is practically fruitless, and the results are always disappointing.

As a rule, when there is a conflict between the attendant and the cow there is a shrinkage in milk flow and very often a lower percentage of fat in the milk. Even when there is no apparent conflict cows will not do as well by some attendants as they will by others. In official work it has been found that some milkers will obtain a greater milk flow and a higher percentage of fat in the milk from certain cows than will other milkers. It is not always possible to tell by the action of a cow whether the milker is a good one or not or whether the animal will do her best with him. Close observation and the application of the scales and the Babcock tester will often determine, as stated, that one milker will get better results than another.

Star Dust.

A constant rain of meteor, star and comet dust is pouring upon this world of ours. But you should not jump to the conclusion that the earth is perceptibly "growing" on account of the influx of dust from without. It does grow a very little in that way, but it has been calculated that it would take a thousand million years to accumulate a layer one inch thick.—New York Journal

Grange Column

Ironton Grange.

The regular meeting of Ironton Grange, No. 707, was held at their hall on the above date, with Brother Peter H. Knudson, master pro tem, in the chair. Minutes of last meeting read. Under the head of new business we proceeded with the advisory election of state grange officers. The following officers were advised:

Master—John C. Ketchum.
Lecturer—Dora Stockman.
Secretary—Jennie Buell.
Members of executive committee—Horton, Hutchins, Lawson, Taylor.
Lecture hour consisted of:
Story—Emil Nason.
Reading—Ole J. Lyngklip.
Story—Nip Carlson.
Song—Peter Mitchell.
Story—Worthy Master.
Song—Robert Sherman.
Solo—Datus Dean.
Grange closed to meet again November 3rd.

Wilson Grange.

Wilson Grange, No. 719, met in regular session Saturday evening, October 24th. There were 20 members present. Several bills were presented. The secretary read a communication from the Pomona Grange in regard to the meeting at Marion Center November 5th. The annual grange hunt occurs November 7th with the supper in the evening. E. L. Nowland and Arthur O'Dell were chosen captains.

It was decided to discontinue the public dances for six months. The program consisted of music, a few readings, songs and a discussion, "Whether the Crow was of More Good or Harm to the Farmer." It was decided that it was more good.

The next meeting will be held in three weeks.

Marion Center Grange.

Thirty-nine members and one visitor of Marion Center Grange, No. 956, held a regular meeting in their hall Friday evening, with the Worthy Master in the chair. After the general order of business the lecturer furnished a good program and treated everyone to apples, receiving a rising vote of thanks in return.

Pomona Grange will meet with Marion Center Grange on November fifth, when it is hoped that each grange will have a good representation.

The ladies' auxiliary will meet with Mrs. Herman Himebauch on Thursday, October 29th. All members should be present if possible. Visitors welcome.

Peninsular Grange.

Regular meeting October 24. Meeting called to order by Worthy Master Heller. Nineteen members present. Two applications received for membership. After the business session, lecture hour was observed by stories, quotations and short talks. Not enough ladies present to make the subject assigned to them interesting. Was postponed until the next regular meeting. Brother Frank Wangerman was present, looking after insurance. The grange appointed a committee to draft resolutions and ordered the chapter draped thirty days in commemoration of our deceased brother Chas. P. Chaddock. The next meeting will be held November 7th. Visitors welcome.

County Republican Ticket Elected to a Majority Other Election News.

Latest advices state that Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris will again win out in the state by a majority of between 20,000 and 25,000 votes. The fight in the election just over centered on the head of the ticket, and in many places was a most spirited one. Charlevoix county gave Osborn a plurality of 162. Reports from Antrim county state that Osborn carried that county by near 300, and Emmet county by 60. The entire Republican ticket was also elected in Antrim county. The contest in this county on the office of sheriff did not materialize to the extent that was anticipated in some quarters. SERIOUSLY ILL

Ransom Cram, Ex-Soldier and Pioneer Resident of This City, Sick at Flint.

A letter received by Mrs. Amos Webster from Mrs. W. E. Campbell of Flint, Michigan, states that Ransom Cram has been quite ill for some time and that his condition is considered serious. It will be remembered that Mr. Cram moved from this city to Flint some two years ago, where his son-in-law, W. E. Campbell, had secured employment. He was here last spring on a short visit, but upon returning his health gradually failed until the present breakdown occurred.

Historical Society.

A regular meeting of the Charlevoix Historical Society will occur on Friday evening, November 6th, with Miss Bennett, Michigan avenue. The paper of the evening will be by Rev. C. E. Taggart, "The Immigrant in His Native Habitat." Mr. Frank Metcalf will furnish some records on the graphophone.

HURT IN RUNAWAY

Dr. Levi Lewis Thrown from Rig and Badly Shaken Up Monday.

Dr. Levi Lewis, Charlevoix's pioneer physician, was badly shaken up in a runaway accident Monday noon. He was driving down the hill across the river on Bridge street when the horse started to run. Near the horse house the buggy was overturned, throwing Dr. Lewis from the buggy onto the curb. The horse continued its running down Bridge street until near Danto's store, where it collided with a wagon, breaking a wheel, overturning the buggy, and throwing the horse.

Dr. Lewis was picked up and taken to the office of Dr. Armstrong, where it was found that his right leg and hand were badly bruised, but not serious.

Hoyt, age 48, of Grand Rapids; Bert Winters, age 20, and Lois Kady, age 18, both of Evangeline township.

PEANUTS AND SWEET POTATOES

Fine Samples are Produced by South Arm Township Farmer.

Stephen Lowe Says Residents Here Want to Keep County "In the Front Row."

Monday's mail brought to this office a box of the finest peanuts we have seen for some time. The sample was grown by Stephen Lowe, who lives in South Arm township, and consisted of a single plant literally loaded with nuts, large in size and fully developed.

Mr. Lowe states in his letter, which is published below, that the growth of peanuts Charlevoix county produces is far ahead of that which is produced in Ohio, and also refers to some sweet potatoes which he planted this year, the yield of which was good.

From the tone of Mr. Lowe's letter he is well satisfied with Charlevoix county and desires to see it, as he states, "in the front row." He evidently believes in boosting the community in which he lives and will undoubtedly next season raise a larger crop of both the peanuts and sweet potatoes.

Below is given his letter in detail:

East Jordan, Oct. 31.

Editor Charlevoix Courier,—

Dear Sir:—Some time ago I noticed an article in several different papers announcing that some party around Alpena had successfully grown peanuts in Northern Michigan and, as we want our county in the front row, I am sending you a package of peanuts which are still on the vines, which you may place on exhibition.

I also successfully grew sweet potatoes of the fine Jersey variety this year, but am unable to send a sample on account of having only a few sets, which I planted just to try them out, and these I have used up except a few small ones. But will add that the yield per plant was greater than they obtain in Ohio, where I came from a year ago and settled here in South Arm township.

Yours truly,

Stephen Lowe,

R. F. D. 1, East Jordan.

The sample plant has been placed in the window of Myrtle Young & Son's insurance office, where it can be seen and examined by those who are interested.

MILLS START OPERATIONS

Lumber Companies at Boyne City Resumed Active Work Monday.

Residents of Boyne City are looking for better times from now on and, from reports published in their home paper, Mill No. 1, which has stood idle for the past six weeks, resumed operations last Monday, as did also the Boyne City Lumber Company's mill. The shingle mill, which is nearing completion, will start as soon as the machinery arrives.

It is also stated that the Elm Cooperative plant will start operations next week.

Governor Edward F. Dunn on the Good Road Question

"The question of good roads touches vitally the agricultural, educational, social, religious and economic welfare of Illinois and involves the conservation of natural resources.

"In the improvement of good roads Illinois has until recently been indeed backward. Reports of the federal department of agriculture up to 1913 show that about 10 per cent. of the 95,000 miles of Illinois road are improved in a permanent manner, as against 35 per cent. in Indiana, 20 per cent. in Kentucky, 25 per cent. in Ohio and 50 per cent. in Massachusetts.

How a Bad Road Knocks Things

"The loss to farmers because of the inaccessible primary markets and the abnormal expense of transportation due to bad roads must be considered as a contributing cause of the high cost of living. In some Illinois counties highways are impassable to ordinary loads for a full third part of the year. Bad roads not only hinder crop production and marketing, but they keep the rural consumer away from the store of the merchant for weeks at a time. They keep pupils from the schools and voters from political gatherings and from participation in elections. They impair the efficiency of churches and social, fraternal and other organizations, which depend largely upon public gathering for the efficiency of their work.

Many Evils Due to Bad Roads

"Moreover, bad roads contribute to the unattractiveness, the isolation and the monotony of country life that are responsible for the desertion of rural pursuits, especially among the young. Experts in mental ailments agree that women in remote sections are the chief sufferers from the restriction of communication and social intercourse which bad roads impose.

"Highway conditions in Illinois are due to the fact that progress in methods of transportation and travel has not met with corresponding changes in our system of road building and maintenance.

Think of It! Illinois!

"Illinois is the third state in the union in population, wealth and political and commercial importance. It is the premier agricultural state of the United States. Its soil, on the average, is three times as valuable in selling price as the average soil of the United States, and yet in that important feature which gives value to the farm, to wit, the roadways which lead to its gates, Illinois is scandalously and deplorably in the background as compared with most of the other progressive states of the union.

Twenty-three

"In the matter of ratio of improved roadways to unimproved roadways Illinois holds to-day the hoodoo number of 23. In other words, twenty-two of the states of the United States have a greater ratio of improved roadways than has the great state of Illinois.

"I was surprised to find upon investigation that Illinois has a smaller percentage of improved roads than has the United States in general. In other words, the average percentage of improved roads to unimproved roads in the whole of the United States on December 31, 1911, was 10.1 per cent., while the average in the great state of Illinois was only 9.47 per cent. on the same date. This situation of affairs has been and is a reproach to the intelligence and a blemish on the reputation of this state.

State Aid Scheme Instituted

"Knowing these conditions, I recommended to the last general assembly consideration of legislation which would promote the efficiency and economy of the administration of the road system of the state. Pursuant to that recommendation the last general assembly placed upon the statute books a law which affords a scheme of state aid and provides for co-operation between the state and counties in such a way as to encourage and develop road building in Illinois. This law created the present highway department.

Complete Good Roads System Planned

"This system has been thoroughly reorganized. It has laid out the roads that will constitute the proposed state aid road system of the entire state and maps have been made of about 16,000 miles of improved roads. These state aid roads connect all the principal trading points of the state with one another, extending throughout the length and breadth of all of the counties of the state, and when completed as the main thoroughfares of the state will be one of the most comprehensive systems of roads in any like community in the world. When this system of roads is once constructed there will not be a home in the state of Illinois farther than four and one half miles from a state aid road.

ONE CENT ADDED TO EVERY TOLL

Users of Telephones to Pay Their Share of War Tax.

Charge Made Compulsory by Government in Force
December 1st.

Charlevoix people as well as all others who send messages either by telephone or telegraph will be compelled to contribute to the war tax which will be in force after December 1, 1914, and must then contribute their share toward the additional revenues of the government. This tax is fixed on messages as they are paid, the sum of one cent being added to the ordinary tolls. While this sum is very small and will not cut much figure in a small city, it will nevertheless help make up thousands of dollars daily, which will be paid in by the entire country.

Under the new war tax bill a message that ordinarily would cost a dime, no matter whether the toll is paid to the telephone or telegraph companies, will after December 1 cost 11 cents. The one cent tax is added no matter how small or how large the toll.

Vigorous protest was made against this method of collecting the tax at a recent meeting of the independent telephone representatives of Michigan at Grand Rapids. The matter was taken up with the authorities at Washington, but without effect. While the companies were willing to submit to the payment of a war tax, they believed that it should be assessed against the companies direct and not against their patrons, the latter method undoubtedly meaning a cutting down of the number of messages of all kinds.

The work of making out reports relative to telephone and telegraph tolls paid will mean a great amount of work in every district, as returns must be made every thirty days to the collectors of internal revenue.

FARMERS HOLDING THEIR POTATOES

In Belief That Prices Will Advance Within A Short Time.

Talk of Organizing Association to Enable Them to Demand Better Prices.

Farmers around Boyne City who have large supplies of potatoes on hand are holding them for better prices than they are now offered, says the Boyne City Citizen. During the early part of last week they were as low as 22 cents, but have raised some since then. Many are of the opinion they will go higher and have stored their stock.

Grangers are agitating a movement to organize an association with the purpose in view of securing better prices for their produce. This is the one feasible plan for the farmer and the quicker the tiller of the soil in this section determines to demand and receive the best possible price the quicker this section will increase in value. Disunited the farmer is forced to accept what the buyers offer or lose out entirely. United they can put into their own pockets the profits of the shippers. The shipper comes around annually, makes a neat sum off of our farmers and disappears. He is not the one who adds value to a community and is destined to be relegated to the past along with many other causes of high living.

Farmers in the vicinity of Charlevoix could do no better than to adopt the same plan. For years it has been a common saying that place was the poorest market in the county. Many instances have been known where better prices were being paid for apples, potatoes, etc., at Ellsworth, Central Lake, and even Phelps and Horton Bay.

There is no reason why this state of affairs should exist. Charlevoix, with its exceptionally good shipping facilities, should be the best market place in the county, but present conditions will undoubtedly continue until the farmers organize and form an association and for their own protection sell direct and cut out the middleman. In the cities to-day apples are selling for from 50 cents to $2.00 per bushel, while the farmer—who is the producer and the one to whom a fair price should be given—is receiving an average of 40 cents per bushel for the finest stock he raises, and for seconds the price offered is less than he can afford to market them.

Fire Wipes Out Business Places in East Jordan
With Heavy Loss.

Fire discovered shortly before midnight last Sunday at East Jordan wiped out three business places with considerable loss.

The buildings were located on State street and the fire was first discovered in the restaurant owned by Fred Bissonette. From there it spread until the three frame buildings were a mass of flames.

The burned buildings were occupied by Miss Genevieve Senecal, with a stock of millinery and ladies' furnishings; M. Tyner, barber shop; Fred Bissonette, restaurant and pool room; Ed. Alexander, soft drinks; and Lee Murphy, cigar factory. Two of the burned buildings were owned by L. C. Madison.

MARKET YOUR APPLES DIRECT

Federal Agent at Grand Rapids Will Try Out New Plan.

Catering to Fancy Market Has Deprived Laboring Class of Supply.

A new phase of the apple marketing situation has been brought to light by J. H. Skinner, representative of the federal department of agriculture stationed at Grand Rapids. He has discovered that while the fruit growers are getting only $1 or a little more a barrel for their average apples, it is difficult for the people in the cities to get apples at a sufficiently low price so they can afford to use them for every day food. The machinery between the producer and the consumer has been so elaborated that considerable has to be added to the producer's price in order to pay for this middle service.

It seems that many people in the city would use apples if they could get the orchard run quality at 50 cents a bushel and it is in the hopes of working out this problem that Mr. Skinner is now giving attention to the marketing of the apple. He has announced that his office may be used as a clearing house and the working people who would be glad to get the medium grade of apples at a fair price can leave their names and addresses with him and he also announces that fruit growers who will deliver orchard run apples (that is something better than cider stock) at 50 cents a bushel may also leave their names and addresses. He will then undertake to shuffle the two sets of names and see if he can bring them together so as to give the producer a little better price than is offered him by the apple buyer and yet give the poor people in the city apples at a price that they can afford to pay.

It seems that in the anxiety to reach the fancy market and to cater to those consumers who are willing to pay $2 a bushel for high grade fruit, the needs of the working people have been overlooked and little effort has been made to work out a plan whereby they can get apples at the price that is within their reach. Mr. Skinner's efforts in this direction will be watched closely and if they are successful the other representatives of the federal government in Michigan will undoubtedly follow along similar lines.

Hallow'en Party.

Mrs. Geo. Kelterhouse of 114 Palmer street entertained a number of neighbors and friends with a Hallow'en party Saturday evening. The house was prettily decorated for the occasion. PROMISES TO BE ONE OF THE BEST Synopsis of Charlevoix Lecture and Entertainment Course.

Opening Number, Geo. L. McNutt, on December 7 Seat Sale Now On.

The course this winter promises to be one of the best ever held in Charlevoix. The committee has spared no effort in selecting the best talent that the Redpath people had to offer. It is the policy of the committee to give the people the kind of program that will meet the approval of the greatest number. The program this year should please the most exacting.

On December 7 Geo. L. McNutt will open the course. A big brain, a big heart, a big message. Such is the characterization of the Dinner Bell Man. Few men have touched life at so many points. Of high rank in the university, a scholarly, successful preacher, his social and economic studies have been original, practical and scientific. He will give you something to think about, with a wealth of fact, story and humor.

January 15, Lincoln McConnell will occupy the platform. His object is to uplift men. His lecture will dispel the blues. He is witty, humorous, but behind all his fun runs the main aim of his lectures—to uplift and make better. He has made over 8,000 public lectures in the last twelve years and is conceded to be one of the most original, forceful and unique speakers before the public.

Music Makers, February 12. A male quartet made up of men broad in thought, alert in mind, strong in physique, capable and artistic. This promises to be one of the big attractions of the season.

Rogers & Grilley, entertainers of high order. Have been associated in musical festivals with Nordica, Melba, Schumann-Heink and other world-famous artists. Van Veatchon Rogers is a master with the harp and you are called back to earth by the impersonations of Grilley. Rogers & Grilley furnish a clean, wholesome and inspiring program.

The Military Girls, March 4th, should make a hit. We have not been told as to their nationality, but they will be equal to the Germans, and that will be going some. They present a new, unique and novel program. Look for them on the program that will be handed you in a few days and then decide if you care to see them or not.

The season tickets for these five high-class attractions is on—$1.50 for adults and $1 for students. We cannot afford to have you miss it and you can't afford to miss it. Tickets on sale at the Central Drug Store and by members of the lecture course committee—Kane, Bridge, Hampton, Fitch, Craig and A. M. Wilkinson.

Reserve seats, ten cents extra per number.

Please read the program that will be handed to you in a few days and then don't forget to buy a ticket for the season.

TOURED THE COUNTY

Republican Speeches Made at Various Places
Saturday by Gerrit Diekema.

The Hon. Gerrit Diekema, one of the best political orators in the state, and David Crowley of Cheboygan toured the county last Saturday with the candidates for county offices and several of the prominent Republicans of the county.

The start was made from Boyne Falls, where a short talk was made by both speakers. From there the party made the run to Boyne City, where both speakers addressed a large audience in the city park during the noon hour.

An open air meeting was held in the afternoon at East Jordan to one of the largest crowds that had assembled during the campaign. The tour was concluded by an evening rally at Charlevoix.

JACKSON MAN EATS A SQUARE MEAL AFTER WAITING 15 YEARS

A. W. Hobbs Ends Stomach Suffering Quickly With Mayr's Wonderful Remedy.

A. W. Hobbs of 1801 East Main St., Jackson, Michigan, after about fifteen years of suffering from derangements of the stomach and digestive tract took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. He got the surprise of his life and swift relief.

Mr. Hobbs has told his own story in a letter, part of which is given here: "After taking three doses of your stomach remedy I am in perfect condition. I have not felt so well for fifteen years."

"I can eat anything now and it does not distress me. I hope those afflicted as I was will proceed to get your remedy at once."

The first dose of Mayr's Wonderful

Stomach Remedy convinces sufferers of its merit. Many have found only one dose sufficient. Mr. Hobbs' experience is typical. Thousands have taken this remedy with remarkable benefit. It is known everywhere.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy cleans the digestive tract of mucus and eructations and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it is saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. One dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleanser ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold by leading druggists everywhere.

HOW TO ALWAYS HAVE BUTTONS ON WAISTS.

Every woman knows how discouraging it is to pick up a mill or net waist just home from the laundry and find that either in the washing or ironing the buttons have pulled out pieces of the material, leaving torn sections on either side of each button.

It has been suggested that instead of letting this occur the waist be made with buttonholes on either side and that the buttons themselves be fastened on a tape the same color as the waist. Then both edges can be buttoned one on top of the other to the tape. The same string of buttons will serve for a number of white waists.

For stiff lined waists this arrangement will also be found very convenient. It is much simpler to iron the front without buttons than with, and the buttons can be adjusted on their tape later.

How He Lost It.

Same time, comments the Manchester Guardian, in telling this story, one suspects the coming generation of artfulness. The boy approached his parent and said, "Father, do you know the tale came up and carried off my comic paper?"

"Don't worry, my son," said the genial parent. "It can't be helped."

"No, father, it couldn't be helped. You see it was in my coat pocket."

It was at this point that an angry and inconsistent father proved that it could and ought to have been helped.

How to Utilize Scraps of Silk and Ribbon.

Do not throw away your old ribbons and silk scraps. They make beautiful mats, and, if you have enough of them, a lovely slumber robe may be made for your divan or cover for one of its cushions.

Wash and iron soiled ribbons, as faded places will not show, and cut all the silk and satin pieces you have into strips the width of a lead pencil.

The strips may be any length, and the more colors are jumbled the better will be the result. Sew the ends of the strips together as though they were being sewed for a rug and roll the lengths into a ball. With a coarse crochet needle crochet in plain chain stitch round or square mats for tables and stands, cushion covers or divan throws.

If the colors have been well mixed the effect will be a rich blurred color scheme, made soft and pleasing by the roughness of the raw edges of the silk. It is possible to use only two or three colors and to crochet these in a pattern or in alternate rows of different colors, but this arrangement is not as attractive and does not give as lasting pleasure as the blurred Persian effect produced by crocheting well mixed lengths of silk together.

BIBLE STUDY ON SOWING AND REAPING. Galatians 6:1-10.—Nov. 8.

"Whoever sows a man sows, that shall he also reap." Verse 7.

TODAY'S Study was intended, by those mapping out these lessons, to be a temperance lesson. But the Apostle's words have no reference whatever to intemperance of one kind more than another.

He is addressing, neither the world in general nor some poor hebraists, but the consecrated people of God, as he declares in the opening verses of this Epistle.

These consecrated Christians the Apostle calls brethren, and instructs them how to deal with any of their fellows who might be overtaken in a fault, entangled with some form of sin, by reason of weakness of the flesh or by unfavorable environment.

The most spiritual of the Church should exercise themselves to bring about a restoration of the erring one to a condition of righteousness and fellowship with God. This they should do meekly, remembering that they also are imperfect, and may inadvertently fall into sin, contrary to their intentions.

In this manner they were to "bear one another's burdens," assisting one another in battling against the weaknesses of the flesh and the besetments of sin. Thus would they be fulfilling the law of Christ. This general law is one of service and self-sacrifice in the interests of others.

Those who, finding a brother overtaken in a fault, merely throw back their heads, denouncing the brother in a haughty, holler-than-thou manner, have not yet attained a proper appreciation of what constitutes the law of Christ—the law of love which is to govern all the members of the Body.

Too Much Self-Esteem.

The Apostle points out that one great danger which besets all true Christians is hindrance—thinking too highly of self and therefore not highly enough of the brethren, especially of those who stumble in some particular in which this individual has not yet stumbled. Whoever thinks of himself, as somebody in God's sight should begin to realize that he is a nobody unworthy of Divine notice, except through God's favor in Christ. Such a person hinders his own progress in the good way.

Instead of seeking to judge or reprove his neighbor or his brother in Christ, each should seek to prove out his own work. He should ascertain to what extent he has put away anger, wrath, malice, hatred, envy, strife, and put on meekness, gentleness, patience, long suffering, brotherly kindness, love.

To whatever extent he discerns that he is progressing along these Scripturally defined lines, to that extent he has ground for rejoicing, without in any sense or degree seeking to compare himself with others and thus to estimate himself wholly by the imperfections which he sees in others. Thus each should seek to find his own weaknesses and to bear his own burdens.

Along the lines of this teaching, there is no room for clericalism. Rather, as the Apostle points out, those who are taught should communicate with those who teach, telling them of any blessings received or of any clearer views of God's Word which have come to them. He may also have merit that they should recognize that teacher either with thanks or with cooperation or in some other way help him to forward his work of teaching.

There is a principle at stake here God operates along the lines of Justice, and cannot be deceived. We might deceive even ourselves temporarily with specious arguments, but none can deceive Him. It is a principle of Divine arrangement that sowing shall bring reaping, and that it shall be of the same character as the thing sowed.

The Christian's Life-Work.

The reaping of spiritual blessings and of heart development will depend upon faithfulness in sowing to these ends. Whoever lives a spiritual life, seeking to serve God in act, word and thought, will reap the largest development of the qualities which make up character likeness to our Lord. But those who seek to please their own fleshly minds or those of friends or relatives, will make proportionately less progress along spiritual lines.

To whatever extent we mortify the fleshly inclinations and seek to live in harmony with the Lord's Spirit, in that proportion we shall grow strong spiritually. If in our conduct we manifest to Him our love for truth and righteousness, He will account us worthy of everlasting life, knowing that when such receive the perfect bodies of the resurrection, they will live in absolute harmony with God.

In verses 8 and 10 the Apostle concludes his argument. All the consecrated should continue faithful, and not grow weary of striving against sin. God is seeking to fix character in His people; and in due time they shall reap their reward. Meanwhile let us do good to all as we lead to His children, the household of Faith.

Keep in touch with what is going on; Read the Courier; that's the best way.

proposition for you in quality and price. The American Bell Furnace is given preference over all furnaces for durability and economy. They are practically indestructible because castings are made from best gray iron that can be obtained. Jackets extra heavy preventing heat from penetrating and heating your cellar. The furnace is built on lines that obtain all heat units possible from fuel and radiating all heat instead of going out chimney and also consumes all gases. The new type ball bearing grates operate so easily a child can operate them and sift the ashes from coal instead of dumping and wasting coal as other types do. You can't buy a better furnace no matter if you pay double our price, and a strong guarantee is given by the manufacturers. LUCILLE LOVE

THE GIRL OF MYSTERY
BY THE
"MASTER PEN"

Copyright 1914. All moving picture rights reserved by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which is now exhibiting this production in leading theaters. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted.

SYNOPSIS

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, international spy, from General Love, whom Loubeque hates, in Manila. Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille nurses him in an attempt to recover the papers.

Lucille gets the papers, but the ship is wrecked. She is cast ashore on a Pacific island and is taken by a native chief to his hut to nurse his sick child.

The native child is restored to health, and the grateful natives idolize Lucille. Loubeque, also cast ashore, tries various plans to recover the papers, but in vain.

Loubeque, baffled, forges a message from a neighboring chief to lure Lucille away from her friends. She falls into a pitfall, losing the documents.

Loubeque's native aid steals the papers from his master, and Lucille takes them from the native after he is killed by a lion. She finds and follows an underground passage in the jungle.

Lucille falls into the hands of a tribe of ape men, whose leader drops a necklace of priceless rubies, which she takes. She and Loubeque are rescued from the island by a yacht-commanded by Captain Wetherell.

The girl and Loubeque are set adrift in an open boat by Wetherell after she repulses the captain's advances, and he takes the papers.

Saved by fishermen, Lucille and Loubeque are in China. As she passes a house Loubeque's diary is thrown to her mysteriously. She tries to board a vessel bound for America. Loubeque recovers the papers from Wetherell.

Lucille stows away, is caught and dresses as a cabin boy with the aid of the captain of the steamer in order to search Loubeque's stateroom for the papers. He catches her at work.

Loubeque takes the papers from Lucille. Landing at San Francisco she is kidnapped by the spy and held a prisoner in Loubeque's house by Thompson.

She throws a message from her window to the captain of the boat, who passes the house, and a fight follows, which Loubeque wins. He is hurt, and she takes and hides the papers. Thompson tries to steal the rubies.

At Loubeque's ranch in Mexico, to which Loubeque takes Lucille, the girl is befriended by a mysterious Mexican, who helps her to escape after she strikes down Thompson.

CHAPTER XVII. A Girl With One Idea.

It was the following day that, leaning against the window grating of iron, she was astonished to find it bending before her. She looked more closely and was astonished to find that one bar had been cut cleanly through. She examined the remainder of the bars. They appeared absolutely untouched, but when she pulled harshly at them every one gave way. Ready made was her means of escape.

That night, fully dressed, she stood beside the window looking out over the moon splashed patio. A furtive figure detached itself from the shadows and crept toward her. Strangely enough it did not frighten her to recognize the butler.

She crouched in the opposite side of the room listening to the faint clank of snapping iron bars as the man detached the ends from their sockets. His head and shoulders appeared in the opening.

Breathlessly she watched his approach. There was nothing undecided about his movements. He was swift; he was certain; he was sure. Not a motion, not a step was wasted. He was almost over the bed when Lucille sprang from her hiding place behind the door.

Instantly he turned, his head darting from side to side like that of a giant reptile. He did not speak. Slowly his hands opened and closed, while a grin crossed his face, widened his mouth—a hideously inhuman grin. She tried to cry out, but her lips were frozen shut.

He had almost reached her side with a gasp Lucille grasped a native vase that stood near and brought it down on his head with crushing force. As he sank to the floor with a moan there was a sound outside, and her mysterious friend, the lover who had promised his assistance, leaped lightly into the room. Rending his thoughts, yet hearing nothing, she moved toward the window and lifted her tiny foot as though to mount a horse. His hands cupped about it. She wanted to the pavement and in a second had scrambled through.

By her side stood the man. For a moment he waited, then urged her forward. She was free, free, free! Of course there were pickets to be passed, but she had made one phenomenal escape tonight, why not another?

Out of sight of the building she paused and looked about her. How calm and peaceful and friendly appeared the night! The moon was full, the stars winked merrily at her, urging her on her way. The touch of a timid finger upon her arm brought her from her reveries.

"The horses wait, my lady."

Brought It Down on His Head With Crushing Force.

Came a swift flashing of lights from the house they had left behind, a flurry of feet, the sound of voices, loud, shrill, insistent. The Mexican seized her arm fiercely and half dragged her from off the court to a clump of bushes, where two horses stood saddled and bridled. In a second she was in the saddle, the man beside her.

The clatter of hoofs rang out upon the silence. Looking back, she caught glimpses of dark figures silhouetted against the tropical vegetation in the patio. A spurt of fire leaped out at them like a living thing. The Mexican muttered a guttural oath and urged his horse to more speed. Lucille bent over her horse's head, bent low, for the whine of bullets was in the air about them.

Suddenly the Mexican grunted loudly. His hands shot high in the air; then the horse fairly ran from under him. Upon the ground he swayed a second, then leaped against the shadow of a giant fingered cactus plant. Lucille sprang from her saddle and sought his side.

Red, warm blood gushed from the wound in his chest. His eyes were glazing when she stooped and brushed her lips across his forehead.

"Go!" he muttered. "Go!" Then his voice took on the resonant tone of a scint day or less before. "It is the ripple of the wishing well, my lady. Go! Ride to the moon—your heart—desires."

He stiffened suddenly and a spurt of tears came from his eyes. Louder grew the shouts, the voices. The air was alive with long, darting flames. Loubeque's hive was swarming.

She leaped into the saddle once more and dug her heels into the horse's sides. Through the night she rode with the ripple of the wishing well in her ears.

Behind her, Lucille could hear the pursuit. Not a second could she spare for thought of regret.

"Times" above the ringing of her horse's hoofs, she would hear the shouts of those behind her. Now and then a message of lead would whistle its dreadful tale into her ears, but all these were growing fainter, less distinct with every leap of the animal she bestrode.

Hours, it seemed, she rode, with never the slightest slackening of the mad pace to which she originally set her mount. He was lathered with foam, but she had no pity on him. Her brain was fiercely chaotic, wild with the bloody memories of the night.

From now on she had every advantage. She was free and she knew where the stolen papers and documents were secreted in the mysterious house of inexplicable disappearing rooms and stairs. She had the diary of Hugo Loubeque in her possession, and she had the ruly seeking which was equivalent to vast wealth. She had the outward seeming of guilelessness, was girlish and delightfully effeminate, but she knew the power of the claws she had, and her eyes rested fondly on the revolver which she found in a holster attached to the Mexican's saddle, even as she urged her horse to greater speed.

Across the trackless plain she rode with only the moon and stars looking down upon her, a wild, eerie figure of a bare-headed girl. Behind the pursuit had died away and before there was nothing save a slender ribbon of water that the moon buried its face in contentedly.

The ranchman uttered a bewildered ejaculation as he saw she was of his own blood.

water that the moon buried its face in contentedly.

She heard voices, low pitched, yet carrying far in the silence of the night. Instantly she drew rein and thrust herself to the ground, listening intently. Creeping cautiously to a slight rise, she looked down upon an adobe shack, before which a little squad of bare-footed Mexicans loomed idly, their brown hands lazily supporting old fashioned Springfield rifles, such as she recalled the soldiers of Uncle Sam to have carried in the old days.

From where she watched she suddenly noticed a stir among the men. From the interior of the shack stepped a gallantly dressed little Mexican, evidently an officer from the awkward salutes accorded him by the tatterdemalions gathered before the house. For some reason she could not analyze, Lucille listened eagerly, her breath coming in quick, eager gasps as she overheard their daring plot to cross the river and stampede the coral of an American ranchman. A little cry of delight came from her lips as she heard their allusions to the United States cavalry they must sift through before hoping for success.

Her eyes were glittering with excitement when she stole cautiously to the adobe shack, peering inside slowly and carefully before entering. She knew all their plans, and her blood was boiling; but she also knew from what they had said that they, too, would be on the lookout for any upset to the well laid plot.

From a chest in the corner, which she hurriedly overhauled, she drew a snifter suit to the one the little leader had worn. It would just about fit her, and she must take no chances of trying to cross the Rio Grande attired as she was.

Swiftly she changed, for every moment now was precious to others as well as to herself. Daughter of General Sumpter Love, she was after with rage at the way the Mexicans had spoken of the border patrol of her country, the presumption of the plan, she had heard outlined. The gaudy costume fitted her beautifully, and the broad straw sombrero, with its weight of silver cord and tassels, made it easy for her feminine features to be unrecognizable even as it concealed her long hair.

She was well pleased with herself when again she mounted her horse. The beast had been ready to drop in his tracks any moment, and she had killed two birds with one stone while changing her costume. Cautiously toward the glittering ribbon of river she rode, her eyes always alert for any sign of the Mexican foraging party.

The horse hesitated at the bank of the stream, but Lucille boldly urged him forward.

"Hurrh! We're across!" she said to herself, as, dripping and disheveled, she stood upon the "right side of the line." Up and down the bank she looked for signs of the border patrol, but none was in sight. But in the distance she could make out a tiny speck.

The chances were it was one of the Mexicans. But something must be done if the ranchman was to be saved from the plot she had overheard. Fiercely she urged her mount toward the speck in the distance until her heart sank as she recognized the man for one of the plotters.

Hours it seemed to her she pursued the alanking figure until it joined with two others. Gradually, after a few miles journeying, a great blaze shot high in the air, a blaze punctuated by shots and wild cries.

The three men cruelly dashed their snurs into the sides of their horses. Came a thunder of sound as a great bunch of cattle from the remuda of the American were driven toward her by the fiendish Mexicans. Lucille saw the danger she was in of being trampled underfoot by that wild herd, driven to frenzy by the flames and popping revolvers from behind them. She urged her own horse to the right, escaping just as the entire whizzed by her in a wild riot of sound. Here and there the Mexicans had assembled themselves, always alert, marvelous horsemen all, keeping the frightened herds together while they drove them in a direct line for the river.

Lucille felt a sharp slash through the sleeve of her jacket. She reined in her horse instantly, for she knew the Mexicans had passed. As she turned she almost collided with a long unmounted, grizzled man driving a mule after mule after the marauders. She did not speak, did not even rein in, but urged her own horse, beside his, drawing her own revolver.

The ranchman uttered a bewildered ejaculation as he saw she was of his own blood.

"I was trying to get there in time to warn you," she gasped. "There's a chance of driving them into the pool if you know where it is."

The Costume Fitted Her Beautifully.

Without another word, as though completely understanding had been established, he waved to the right; came a sudden abrupt wheeling of the stampede; came a ride shot, more like a cloth being ripped it was than anything else. Lucille heard the sharp voice of the sentry; saw the hesitancy of the Mexicans even as they nudged close together, fending that solitary figure in olive khaki, bestriding his mount as though carved from granite.

They looked hesitatingly behind them. The ranchman's revolver sounded, and their leader threw his hands in the air and dropped over upon his horse's neck. The soldier's voice rang out to them, and the frightened handits threw down their short carbines in token of surrender. The sentry waited until Lucille and the ranchman came up, then listened to their story, at the end demanding their presence before his commanding officer.

THAT the coming winter will be a poor one for the hundreds of lumberjacks who rely on their winter's work to keep them alive during the other months of the year is the opinion expressed by those who are conversant with the present market conditions, declares the Newberry News. Mills are closing down all over the state. Operators and jobbers will greatly curtail their output this season and many camps will not be operated at all. Not for many years has the lumber market been in such a stagnant condition, there being but little demand for wood products of any kind. Lumber yards are practically filled at the present time and the ordinary winter's cut would glut the market. Operators are therefore curtailing their operations and the number of men employed this winter will be reduced to a minimum.—Marquette Mining Journal.

No, the Underwood tariff law has not reduced the cost of living, but it has reduced the distance between the consumer and the poorhouse very appreciably. We understand now what was meant by the phrase "Ultimate Consumer." "Ultimate," it appears, is the prefix assumed by Mr. Consumer after he reaches the poorhouse, where they call everybody by his first name.

SOME CROP OF SPUDS

Over 600 Bushels Raised on Four Acres—Heavy Beet Growth.

C. B. Sheldon claims to have the best acreage of potatoes in this section, or, at least, the man who can beat him will have to "go some." From four acres planted last spring on land out on May street he has harvested over 600 bushels of fine potatoes as has ever been marketed in this section.

At the same time he contracted four acres of sugar beet from the Holland Sugar Company. These were planted on ground near the potato patch and yielded better than twelve tons to the acre.

IRONTON FERRY CLOSED

Must Comply With Regular Marine Laws Before Operations Can Be Resumed.

The Ironton ferry has been closed and will not be allowed to operate under power until the marine laws are complied with. This is the verdict handed out by the collector of customs last Thursday, and since that time no power has been used in operating the ferry.

Along the latter part of September the ferry was declared subject to registry by Collector of Customs Phillips of Grand Haven. The case was reported to Detroit, and the collector of customs at this port received orders to perform the official act and the ferry was duly licensed as the "Eveline of Ironton," with Supervisor MacDonald as managing owner. Since that time the ferry has been operated under charge of Sam Alexander, who has his papers as licensed engineer and pilot.

Thursday orders were given that the ferry should cease operations under power until lights, lifeboats and life preservers had been installed to comply with the marine laws governing boats of this character.

The ferry has been operated since then under the old cable system. Lifeboats, life preservers, etc., have been ordered and as soon as they arrive the ferry will resume its regular run as heretofore, at the same time complying with the marine laws.

BLUES DEFEAT REDS

Knights of Pythias' Hunt and Game Supper a Great Success.

The much-talked-of hunt between the "Blues" and "Reds," opposing sides chosen from members of Pine Lake Lodge, No. 122, K. of P., took place last Wednesday and resulted in the "Reds" being overwhelmingly defeated.

The game supper was pulled off the following evening, over 130 of the Knights, wives and sweethearts taking part.

The total score of the two sides was: "Blues"—3,063; "Reds"—1089. Fifty-two rabbits, 22 partridges, 4 guinea hens and about 20 red squirrels were killed by the two sides. The supper was one of the best ever served in the hall and will in the future be one of the annual events to be pulled off.

Mrs. Ada Shockley spent Sunday in Petoskey, with her brother, W. B. Saville, and family. The occasion was an exceedingly happy one, for a brother whom she had not seen for thirty years arrived from Texas the day before. BULL PLOWS OF PERU.

Primitive Methods and Implements Still Used in Farming.

The tilling of the soil is done in the crudest way not only in Peru, but throughout the whole of South America. Outside of the wheat fields of the Argentine, the methods would not do credit to the Egyptians in the days of the pharaohs. In fact, the bull plow as it is used in Peru today dates back to the kings of the first dynasty of Egypt. The plow, the Peruvian spade and the grub hoe, which latter is simply a crooked stick with an iron shoe, are the three implements of agriculture in Peru today. No implement is found to crush the hard lumps of ground in the plowed fields. This is done by the women and children with a short club like a ball bat. Corn is planted by using a sharp stick to make a hole in the ground. Then the kernel is dropped in the hole and covered by a push of the bare foot on the softened earth. It is not a necessity in these valleys. The natives have made admirable irrigating ditches that convey an abundance of water to every portion of the cultivated fields. The water moistens the roots of the corn from day to day, or turned into the ditches that follow the cane fields it becomes a potent factor in the luxuriant growth of the sugar cane. The best sugar cane in the world is grown in Peru, but 90 per cent of it is used, I am told, to make rum.—National Magazine.

LUCERNE'S QUAIN'T BRIDGE.

In Its Center Is an Old Time Prison and Torture Chamber.

Lucerne, in Switzerland, possesses what is probably the most curious bridge in the world as well as one of the greatest historic interest. This bridge, known as the Kapellbrücke, or "Chapel bridge," crosses the River Reuss at its junction with Lake Lucerne. It was constructed so long ago as 1333 and for nearly 600 years has formed the chief avenue of traffic across the broad but sluggish stream. In other days the bridge extended its zigzag shape to nearly twice its present length and reached as far as the hofkirche, or cathedral, whence its name.

In the center of this covered wooden bridge stands the famous octagonal "wasserturm," or water tower, where in olden times the municipal treasure was stored. For ages it was also used as a prison, and among its dungeons is a torture chamber. But the most unique feature of all consists of the series of curious pictures in the roof of the bridge. There are sixty-nine of these painted on triangular wooden panels fitted into the pitched roof of the bridge. One after another they tell the salient facts of Swiss history, or portray events in the life of the saluts of the town, St. Leodegar and St. Maurice.—Washington Star.

Footprints in Stone.

From time to time amateur geologists unhampered by "book learning" make, as they suppose, wonderful discoveries in the primeval rocks. They find what they call not as footprints of men and animals on flat rock surfaces and slabs of stone. The real origin of such footprints is now known to be the former presence of concretions which have in time been worn out. In every part of the earth such "footprints" have been found. The most remarkable of these is a print two feet long on the top of a lofty hill called Adam's Peak. In the island of Ceylon, which is believed by the natives to be the stump of the foot of Buddha as he left the earth and sprang into heaven, and it is accordingly an object of worship.—London Globe.

Novelties in Old Fleet Street.

Fleet street was formerly the wonder place of London, where all that was novel, bizarre and marvellous was exhibited by enterprising showmen. Ben Jonson alludes to "a new notion of the city of Nineveh, with Jonah and the whale, at Fleet bridge," and at the "Engle and Child" was exhibited a collection of freaks and monstrosities that set the whole town agape. In 1710, too, were advertised as on exhibition at Fleet bridge "two strange, wonderful and remarkable monstrous creatures, an old sea dromedary, seven feet high and ten feet long, lately arrived from Tartary, with her young one, being the greatest wonder, rarity and novelty ever seen in the three kingdoms"—London Express.

Worse Off Than He Thought.

Shadbolt—Well, I'm $50 worse off than I was yesterday morning. Dingus—How's that? Shadbolt—I was held up by footpads on my way home last night and robbed. Dingus—I'm sorry for you, old man. But they didn't get the $5 I borrowed of you before you started home, anyhow. Shadbolt—That's so. I forgot that. I'm $55 worse off than I was yesterday morning.—Chicago Tribune.

A Matter of Feet.

"If one did not know better," remarked an observant man, "he would be inclined to believe an inventor is skin to a centipede. Not long ago I was telling a friend that a certain airman had dropped forty-five feet. 'Yes?' he asked. 'How many times has he left?'"—New York Tribune.

Women Physicians.

Women physicians are not a modern innovation. There were plenty of them among the ancient Greeks, some of them being famous.

LEAVE FOR PETOSKEY

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Smith Give Farewell Party.

Mrs. E. J. Smith was delightfully surprised last Tuesday afternoon at the home of her mother, Mrs. Oldham of Clinton street, where she was invited to help pass away a lonesome afternoon and found the parlor full of smiling friends. The afternoon and evening were one that Mr. and Mrs. Smith will always remember. A bountiful supper was served at six o'clock, the table being tastefully decorated with pink and white carnations. A few of Mr. Smith's gentleman friends dropped in to supper and spent the evening.

Mr. Smith has accepted a position in Petoskey, where they expect to move in a few days. Mr. Smith has been salesman for the S. M. See & Son for several years, and has many friends who will regret to have the popular young couple leave our city and wish them success in their new home, where we know they will soon surround themselves with a host of friends.

Why the Youth's Companion Should be in Every Family.

"If I could take only one paper," said the late Mr. Justice Brewer of the Supreme Court, "it would be The Youth's Companion—a little of everything in a nutshell, and unbiased." The Companion is a family paper in the completest sense. It provides reading that, without failing to interest the young, still interests the mature. It unites young and old through their common enjoyment of delightful fiction, agreeable miscellany and the clear exposition of public questions.

So carefully is it edited, so varied are its contents, that it would easily supply a family with entertaining fiction, up-to-date information and wholesome fun, if no other periodical entered the house.

If you are not familiar with The Companion as it is to-day, let us send you sample copies and the forecast for 1915. New subscribers who send $2 for the fifty-two issues of 1915 will receive free all the remaining issues of 1914, also a copy of The Companion Home Calendar for 1915. ANNUAL CONVENTION

W. C. T. U. Met at Petoskey October 28 and 29—Fine Attendance.

The 30th annual convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the eleventh district of Michigan—held in the Methodist church at Petoskey October 28 and 29—was filled with good things. A good attendance and good interest from start to finish. Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, ex-state president and national parliamentarian of the organization, was in attendance, giving several parliamentary drills. The church was decorated with flags, banners, pennants and flowers.

Mrs. P. J. Howard, who has been the district president of the W. C. T. U. for many years, was elected to that office for another year. Mrs. Alex of Charlevoix was elected corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. Hoyt of Gaylord, recording secretary, and Mrs. E. Wilcox of Mancelona, treasurer.

The Charlevoix union was represented by twelve of its members—five voting delegates and seven visiting delegates.

The following counties were represented: Antrim, Benzie, Charlevoix, Emmet, Grand Traverse, Otsego and Cheboygan.

Women's Wooltex Coats

That we are Now Showing at from $15.00 to $25.00

This statement seems almost unbelievable in coats at such a small price.

But it is absolutely true because the designers of Wooltex garments get their first inspiration from the most beautiful coats and suits that are designed abroad.

All creations of their own designers rise to the same high standard of perfect style and artistic beauty. Every garment is cut along beautiful lines and a most bewitching variety of handsome models is now assembled for your selection.

The materials are the choicest produced for the making of women's coats. They include lustrous broadcloths, handsome zibelines, luxurious furette and all the warm and beautiful fabrics that tailors love to work with in producing fashionable coats for women.

The tailoring is of the very highest character, the trimmings are refined and the contrasts are most effective.

Every garment is guaranteed to give two season's of satisfactory wear, and the good looks are tailored into the garment and remain during the entire life of the coat.

If you have not seen the display, be sure to come at the earliest moment you can—before the variety becomes depleted, or your size is missing in the style that you like best.

NO. 603—The Windshield is a Wooltex creation of unusually pleasing lines, in a smart, double-breasted effect when worn closed in rough weather, but changeable to an easy rever style, when worn open on pleasant days. Trimmed in back with olive-shaped, self-covered buttons, harmonizing prettily with the new flaring, velvet collar.

Price $25.00

NO. 604—This is an extremely handsome coat with a long rolling lapel, which may be buttoned across the chest on stormy days. Note the long lines of this model, and the slight flare below the hips. CHAPTER XVIII.

The Work of a Thief.

THE girl listened silently to the ranchman's gratitude, then watched him as, following the captives he entered the house to which they had been brought. It took but a little while for the sentry to emerge. Then she caught her breath with cry of delight, as she recognized a young officer whom she had known in the Philippines. He beckoned her silently, seating himself at his desk and writing busily for a moment before nodding briskly that she should speak. A dancing imp of mischief was in her eyes as she uttered his name.

"Lieutenant Carmody, don't you remember me?"

The young officer's eyes opened as wide as his mouth.

"Lucille Love!" he gasped, half rising from his seat—"Lucille Love or her ghost?"

"A very tired and hungry ghost," she laughed delightedly. "Just try me and see."

As he summoned her orderly and gave him instructions to bring instantly some canned stuff Lucille hurriedly sketched out her adventures to him, eagerly persuading him when his face showed that he half believed she had taken leave of her senses. His expression was very grave when she finished.

"I suppose you know that Gibson was permitted to resign and nobody knows where he went?" he queried.

"Hugo Loubeque showed me the newspaper," she nodded. "And father—her tone was unaltered at being brought into such close contact with one who could realize what all these things meant."

"The general is under a heavy cloud of suspicion. He has requested an inquiry into his own conduct in the affair. The messages were most important—in fact, their sale could harm us greatly."

"And the people think that?"

"You have long since been given up for drowned. Harley told of taking you aboard the Empress. The wreck is common knowledge, of course. I must reassure them immediately."

"No," she shook her head decidedly. "I have gone this far, and I firmly believe some influence is at work on my behalf, helping me to do things better than any man could do them."

"But"—he protested.

"No," she shook her head firmly. "You have no idea how dangerous a game it is working against Hugo Loubeque. There is every chance that he may yet defeat me; that I may be killed or injured before I succeed. Father would demand any return, papers or no papers. Can't you see what it means to me? Can't you see that the man who has ruled and ruled nations, who has compelled thousands to do his will, has every chance of success against anything a man could do?"

The officer smiled a superior smile. Lucille merely took the diary of the spy from his hiding place and placed it in his hands, watching the swift changes of expression upon his face as he read. Finally he returned it to the owner.

"Please eat," he said quietly, motioning toward the end of the desk where the orderly was spreading a cold repast of canned meats and vegetables and steaming coffee, and forgive me if I can't talk now. I must think what is best to be done."

Lucille smiled as she devoted her attention to the repast. She finally dashed to find young Lieutenant Carmody staring fixedly at her, his brow clouded.

He Got Her Some Proper Clothing.

"It's too much for me," he muttered. "Of course it is," she laughed heartily. "But I firmly believe that I will win."

"But why?"

"Because," and all the truth had gone from her face, all the laughter from the eyes that were reverently lifted. "Because everything I have done has been done for the sake of love and because love has watched over me and helped me. That is the reason, Lieutenant Carmody. Hugo Loubeque can never be beaten or brought to justice because of fear or hate, for his own powers in that direction are greater than those of nations."

"Well?" The officer unwillingly agreed. "What do you propose doing? Isn't there some way in which I can help you?"

"Yes," she answered promptly. "You can let me have money. You can tell me how to dispose of one of these valuable rubies, or all of them, and you can help me catch the first train for San Francisco."

Carmody whistled aloud his amazed delight as he regarded the marvelous jewels in the necklace she laid upon the table. Then he loaned her the money he had and insisted upon her lying down and resting until he could skimpish up some proper clothing and find out about the trains.

It was dawn before she awakened, and, though she felt alarm lest he had allowed her to miss a train, his reassurance and the sight of the clothing he had found for her made things seem much brighter. Then, too, the thirty odd dollars in currency seemed far more than even the rubies about her neck. Several hours later she boarded the train, assisted by a worried looking young officer, her heart light and gay, for she felt within herself that the journey that had been so long and so hazardous was finally nearing an end; that the familiar, dear faces would surround her on every side.

With every clanking of the wheels upon the tracks the heart grew heavier up a sense of confidence for Hugo Loubeque had put forward his own strength against her, added to this, the strength of a portion of his organization. He had imprisoned her in two apparently impenetrable places, and still she was here, all unbeknownst to him, speeding toward his house, intent upon bending him once and for all.

And in the compartment in which she stared with unseeing eyes Thompson regarded her in the mirror, his own eyes glittering with malicious triumph and with aversion.

Thompson crouched back in his compartment, felting deep slumber while the colored porter made up his bed. Immediately the porter disappeared he became the incarnation of energy. His hands nervously fumbled with the lock of his grip, opening it finally, and his closing a secret trap in the bottom, from which he took an atomizer, a pair of nippers and a bottle of pale viscous fluid.

For an hour he waited, motionless, not even his fixed eyes blinking as he regarded the curtains of the berth Lucille occupied.

He was swift; he was certain; he was sure. Deftly parting the curtains, he looked down upon the sleeping girl. No atom of pity was in his heart. All the thief now, his eyes glittered as he allowed them to rest upon the glowing strand of stones about her neck.

Swiftly he leaned over, applying his pliers to the gas jet and unscrewing it so that the odor of the gas slowly began filling the stuffy section. Then he gently sprayed the ether across her face, never moving when she unconsciously stirred to fight off the anesthetic.

Her breathing became heavier while her lips took on a dusky tinge. The gas was becoming stronger, and he knew her condition would be ascribed to apoplexy when she recovered from the effects of the ether. Stopping with no appearance of care now, he fastened the rubies from her throat. A moment he waited, slipping them in his pocket, then he slipped back to his own compartment.

Carefully he replaced his grip, tucking the necklace in his breast pocket. Against the door he crouched, waiting.

No trace of anxiety he showed. He was confident of himself. Came a clanking down upon the ties as the air brakes worked. Thompson threw open his window, looking out to discover it was opposite a city station. With a pocket knife he cut out the screen that separated him from the track.

Continuously he looked up and down the track. The train was slowing down. He tossed his bag far out from him, then slipped partially through the window. The lights of the station were almost in his eyes when he jumped, kneeling on its feet and regulating his balance with an effort. Then he permitted himself the luxury of a smile.

The next train through would be time enough, and the booty in his breast pocket was worth many risks.

Lucille felt herself struggling with a desperate enemy, one whose fingers were of steel as they fastened themselves about her throat, grasped at her throat and held it despite her utmost efforts. Even in the effort to awaken, unsuccessful though it was, she seemed to recognize the calm, imperturbable, businesslike features of Thompson.

Then she felt a sensation of ease and comfort and peace such as had not been hers for a long time, and she allowed herself to drift away upon the gentle flowing river that hummed its song in her ears.

She awakened to find herself being shaken violently by the conductor and a porter, whose ebony face had changed to a sallow shade. Her head ached so fearfully that she pressed her feverish palms to her temples to keep it from bursting. Her throat and mouth felt as though she had been subsisting upon a diet of cotton soaked in oil.

She staggered to her feet and stood, dazed and bewildered, in the state of the car. The conductor turned her over to two women, who stood with her upon the platform, supporting her reeling figure while the fresh air drove away the fumes of chloroform and gas to which she had been subjected.

First she felt the rush of the train. The dashing of lights in the distance, the rush of the train past the lights, only to come upon a new cluster. And she was rushing, rushing, rushing, just like these lights to a cavernous blackness which she could not describe even to herself.

Suddenly the reason for her being upon the train came to her, and her hands sought her breast, then her throat. With a little cry she staggered back into the arms of the women.

"Fainted!" she gasped. "I have been robbed!"

The women looked at one another plying, then incredulously and finally believing as they caught the pallor and sanity on the girl's face. Summoning all her strength, she turned the knob of the door and sought the conductor. He looked incredulous at the girl's charge, but investigation showed that the light had been tampered with. Nothing, however, could be done here, for reaching San Francisco except a search of the car.

Lucille went with him from place to place, examining every face. But she knew who had done this thing. She fought against the fingers of the drugs they had been the fingers of Thompson. When she had slipped from peaceful slumber into the drugged stupor it was Thompson she had been heavily fighting.

But Thompson—where had he disappeared? What had become of the man?

"We know who the thief was, miss," reported the conductor a little later. "He had the compartment facing your section. The screen is cut out. He must have dropped out the window after working his game."

Lucille smiled faintly. "A medium sized man, rather dark, plainly dressed, with features that nobody would notice especially and a field scar across the side of his face," she murmured.

The man looked at her in surprise. "Thompson," she murmured. "Yes; it was Thompson. I was positive from the first."

As the conductor corroborated her description of the thief she lay back against the dusty cushions of her seat, idly watching the train chugging across the landscape. She had started badly, but she clenched her teeth firmly. Her purpose was firm as ever, her rage a bit higher.

Hugo Loubeque cursed profoundly to himself as he paced up and down the door of his San Francisco house. From below came the sounds of his servants searching into every nook and cranny of the mysterious house for the packet of papers and documents he knew Lucille had hidden here.

He frowned heavily as he went to the window and looked down upon the street, deserted now save for the old woman who trudged toward the place. She carried a basket of fruit over her arm and Loubeque smiled grimly as she disappeared from his sight, then reappeared after being turned away from the door by the servant.

As he idly studied the woman something about her caught and held his attention. She moved slowly, but there was an attraction about that slowness.

Loubeque's eyes were fastened, like those of a hawk now, upon the old woman. She had stopped beside the alarm box on the corner lamp post. Suddenly the bent form straightened, and he read the impulsive resolve of youth in every movement of the tiny, attired old woman. Her hand gripped upon the ground. He saw her pick up a stone and smash the fire alarm.

Came the sound of fire engines rolling down the street. Loubeque watched the woman. She dashed toward the captain as he darted up to his light buggy, pointing eagerly toward the house of the spy, her eyes glowing with excitement. Then Loubeque smiled as he pressed a bell and ordered the search to stop immediately.

Before the rush of firemen with their hose the door opened. Their heavy feet slumped upon the stairs, through the house. But Loubeque did not move. He watched Lucille as she coiled about the habitation she had worn over her girlish clothes. She looked swiftly about to make certain no one was in sight. Then she swiftly approached the extra truck upon which the effects and hats of the firemen were laid. Once more she looked about her, then flung herself into a long robe and rushed and jammed a helmet over her head.

Swiftly Loubeque passed over the stairs. Without an instant's hesitation Lucille had sped to the basement. He thrust to the room that had been assigned her when he held her captive here. Pressing a button, one wall of the room opened. He peered below, watching her as, below, she searched feverishly for the papers.

Loubeque quietly moved back to his own room. Slowly his fingers reached out. Came a slight click of machinery. Then the spy stepped below and received the assurance of the fire captain that everything was well. His smile was that of a man quite positive that everything was more than well.

(To be continued next week.)

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.— Benjamin Franklin.

THE washing of frocks and muslin blouses becomes a serious item in the laundress' bill during the hot weather months.

yet a very little trouble enables the novice to undertake the house washing, and when she becomes proficient in the art it is but one step more to undertake the house laundering of washing frocks.

The saving of the laundress' charges is not the only economy. When the owner washes a blouse she has a proprietary interest in it and treats it with lighter handling than it receives from a washing machine.

First with regard to the washing of the blouses. A warm lather should be prepared. Stirred thirty two ounces of castile soap or any pure mild laundry soap. Pour on the shredded soap a gallon of boiling water and stir it vigorously with a smooth stick. Add a tablespoonful of powdered borax and two gallons of cold water. This is sufficient for two or three blouses, but if the number of blouses is increased there must be a corresponding increase in the quantity of lather.

Shake the blouses out of doors and immerse them in the lather. Leave them soaking for half an hour, add another quart of boiling water and then squeeze and knead the blouses until all traces of dirt have disappeared. Rub a little soap on the parts that are very soiled, but do not rub the blouses themselves.

Squeeze the blouses from the washing water and empty the bath. Replace the blouses and stand the bath under a running tap until all traces of soapiness have disappeared. If treated in this way blue rising water is not required, but in case of a scarcity of water a little liquid blue should be added in the second rinsing water to overcome the yellow that which the soap gives.

Prepare a bowl of starch. Mix a tablespoonful of blue starch to a smooth paste with a little cold water. Pour a pint of boiling water gradually on the paste, stirring it all the time until a thick, clear jelly is formed. Stir in a teaspoonful of gum water made by covering a pennyworth of gum arabic with a plate of water and pouring off the clear part when the gum is dissolved and settled. Cover the bowl with a plate to prevent a skin forming on top of the starch, and when it is cool enough to be borne by the hands place the blouses in the starch. Knead them well so that the starch penetrates all parts. Wring them from the starch and clap them.

Clapping is the secret of success in clear starching. It is invariably done by French laundresses when they are getting up fine muslins and laces. The object is to prevent the starch being cooked by the hot iron in unsightly patches between the threads. Take the blouses one by one and lay each on a clean kitchen table. Clap the hands with a layer of muslin between and continue until every part looks clear and new.

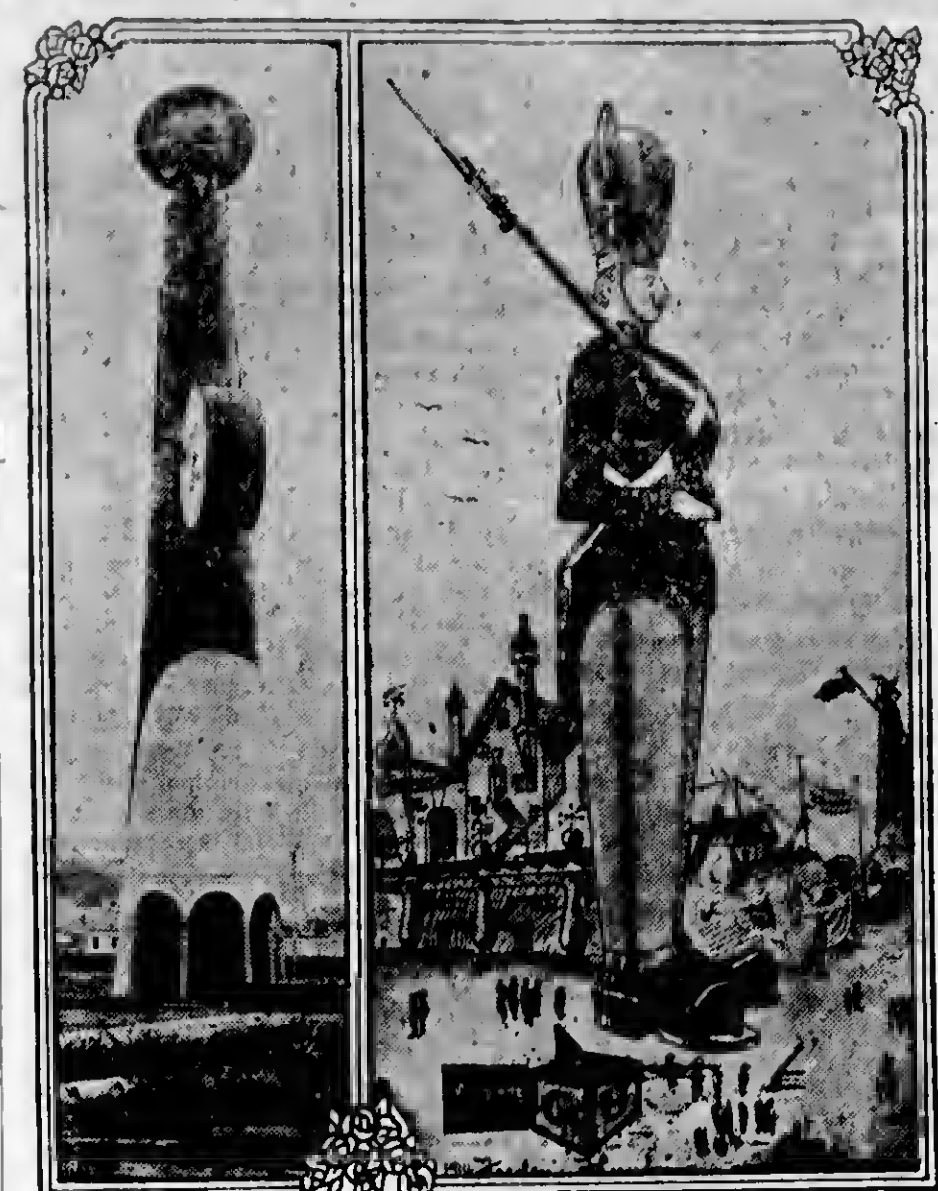

Hang the blouses out of doors to dry, but take care that colored muslins or those printed in color are not exposed to sunlight while they are wet. A faded blouse is a pathetic figure, but it can be avoided by setting the colors. This is done by soaking the blouse in a quart of water in which a teaspoonful of alum is dissolved before washing it as described for white muslin blouses. Further, the colors can be revived by rinsing the blouse in a quart of water containing a teaspoonful of vinegar, but most important of all is to dry the colored blouses in the shade.

When dry each blouse should be rolled in a towel which has been lightly wrung from cold water. In this they should rest for at least an hour so as to become evenly dampened, and indeed it is a good plan to pack the rolled blouses closely together, and leave them all night.

ANNUAL STOCK SHOW

Great Preparations Under Way for the Stock Exhibition.

Getting ready for the International Live Stock Exposition, held this year from November 28th to December 5th, is a task of vast proportions of which the public has little conception. Each year it has been the policy of the management to provide additional facilities for exhibitors and enlarge accommodation for visitors. This work involves a heavy outlay annually and its only possible reward is public recognition. Steadily increasing attendance and growing magnitude of the display of live stock demonstrates the sagacity of the management in this report.

This year the expanding disposition of the enterprise has necessitated material increase in the show ground area. The historic Dexter Park locality, noted half a century back as the greatest speed track in the world, is to be utilized. A strong force of men is engaged in the conversion process which will be completed a month hence. These improvements and enlargements mean added space for exhibitors and comfort for visitors.

Compared with facilities afforded at the first "International" the housing of that institution this year will be incomparably superior. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended on permanent quarters and although at no period of its career has the exposition lacked accommodation, 1914 provision in this respect will be considerably in anticipation of actual requirement.

Superb Venetian Court of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915

VARIETY of color and the use and blending of Botic, Ionic and Corinthian, with a little play given to the Byzantine architectural style, are shown in the two Vestibul courts of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco in 1915. These courts are the connecting links in the Exposition scheme of courts, but they are to have a type of beauty not found elsewhere on the grounds.

One of the Vestibul courts connects the Court of the Four Seasons with the Court of the Universe, and the other connects the Court of the Universe with the Court of Abundance. The first mentioned is shown above.

One of the highlights of the interior of the courts is the use of plants. In the Court of Abundance, shown in this photograph, were taken the shrubs and flowering plants have been placed on all sides of the central paths and the courts are in harmony with every pigment used in the remainder of the court.

MANAGEMENT OF BREEDING BULLS

Breeding bulls cannot produce good results without plenty of nourishing foods and intelligent treatment. The poorly conditioned woman bull cannot bear vigorous and healthy calves. To be at his best he must have plenty of suitable food given him at the proper intervals. There must be plenty of lumpy and succulent foods, such as clover, alfalfa or mixed hay and silage or roots, with the addition of just enough wholesome grain foods to keep him in a vigorous, gaining condition. He should be watered regularly at least twice a day.

A large and comfortable box stall gives the bull more freedom and is

We keep Holsteins because they help and keep us all the time and respond nobly to kind treatment—in other words, I believe them to be the most docile breed of cattle in existence, and nervousness is not conducive to large production, said a New York farmer. To be sure, the Holsteins are not high testers in butter fat, but quantity offsets quality twice over in many cases, thus having the advantage over the other breeds in either milk or butter production. The illustration shows an ideal head of a Holstein bull.

more safe and convenient for the attendant in feeding and handling the animal. Such a bull pen should be ventilated and well lighted and arranged so that it may be darkened in the summer time to keep out the flies. He should be kept clean and provided with sufficient bedding material to prevent injury when getting up and down, as large animals resting on their knees on concrete or plank are very apt to bruise them and cause enlarged joints.

Exercise is necessary to the health and general thrift of the breeding bull. The best way to exercise the bull is to have a small lot tightly fenced and allow him to run with one or two in calf cows. In this way he will be more contented than if kept confined alone. If kept confined in a foul pen, where he is constantly fretting, he will between a signed and unsigned integer

Always handle breeding bulls carefully and treat them kindly. If proper precautions are taken there is very little danger, yet it is always best to go on the safe side and handle them with a staff. The idea that a bull must be ill treated to know his place is a mistake. He is cunning and treacherous and if aroused will avail his chance to even up with you, and when he does get his temper aroused he is a very dangerous animal to be around. It is many times best to put up with a few of his eccentricities than to undertake to club them out of him, or you will have a merry time in bringing him to your own way of thinking.

As a rule, it is best not to use a bull for service until he is fourteen or fifteen months old, and then he should be used carefully. Handled properly, during the first two years he may be used many years.

The young and growing bull should move more feed, care and attention than an older animal. He needs more exercise to build up healthy and vigorous vital and reproductive organs. This demands a strong and vigorous body and nervous system. No animal can develop into that symmetrical form that he should unless he has plenty of the right kinds of food and good care. Neither will he be able to beget calves that will be a credit to his ancestry if he is kept in a rundown, emaciated condition.

If we get good results we must keep our breeding bulls in good, thrifty condition. To the accomplishment of this end we must feed them liberally and give them clean and well ventilated pens. Handle them quietly and not overtax their vitality by too much service. The well kept bull and his calves are objects of admiration to successful stock farmers and dairymen. Do not forget when feeding the breeding bull that you are feeding half of the herd—that is, from the standpoint of reproduction.

Separating Cow and Calf.

There will be less trouble both with the cow and the calf if they are separated as soon as possible after the calf is dropped. Give whole milk five or six days and then commence with skim-milk, giving only a small quantity at first and gradually increasing until all skim-milk is given. Always feed warm and never give more than is readily drunk clean.

The Valuable Brood Mare.

The brood mare will do almost as much work in twelve months as the gelding. She will pay for herself several times over in colts in a few years. A mare is not half so much bother to care for as a dairy cow. The colt is worth more than a litter of pigs. Keep brood mares on the farm; it means dollars.

First Feminist Party.

The earliest depopulation of women to parliament was organized close on 2,000 years ago. Under the triumvirate of Augustus, Antony and Lepidus it was proposed to tax the property of 1,400 wealthy Roman matrons in order to meet part of the expenses of the civil war then raging. They refused to submit to this but Antony and sent Horatius, one of their number, to plead against it before the Senate. When he failed to persuade them, she asked, "Why should we be punished to let for a woman's child, and not wish to outlive of for the support of a government which has no tax we have no money of ourselves?" The argument proved so effective that the tax on women was reduced to one-third of the amount originally proposed. — London Enter

Lake of Massachusetts.

Like other glacially confined areas, Massachusetts, though not specially distinguished as a lake region, is liberally supplied with inland bodies of water. A recent survey showed 1,115 lakes and ponds exceeding ten acres in extent, the total area covered being nearly 100,000 acres. The largest is Assawampsett pond of 2,421 acres in Lakeville, and there are having the longest name is Chabundungungungung of 1,188 acres in Webster. Only one is in Nantucket county, while Worcester county has 208. New Orleans Times May 29/96.

A GREAT WHEAT CROP.

The government's July report estimates the wheat crop at 330,000,000 bushels. Since the spring wheat has not yet matured these figures may be revised later, but it is very clear that the yield exceeds all previous records. Fortunately for American producers, the needs of the world are large. Europe must buy a great deal of wheat during the current crop year. How much is unknown and will be until next summer. France, for instance is not a large importer when its crop is normal, but this year its needs are estimated at 60,000,000 bushels. With such a surplus as we have and such a deficiency as exists abroad the price will depend to an unusual degree on the foreign market. The greatest danger now is a rush to ship wheat. While no good is likely to come from movement to hold for a dollar or any other fixed price, it is wise to be in no hurry to get all of the crop to the elevator. If each man with a surplus can keep part of it until it is required all producers are likely to fare best. — Nuttall Stockman and Farmer.

The Good Horseman.

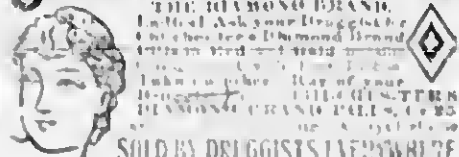

The good horseman can take time enough at night and at noon to wash the shoulders with cold water and to clean the twenty collars once a day. If the horses are stopped for a rest he can walk around and lift the collars and shift the harness enough to make the horse a little more comfortable.

He can see that the stalls are cleaned, that the grooming is done and that the water tank is clean and the water pure. He can let the horse roll when the work is over for the day, and he can keep his feed box from getting sour and filthy.

Garnet in Cows.

Any derangement of the digestive organs may induce bloat, and a cow may often take enough linseed cake to cause such derangement. There may be sometimes some other cause of shrinkage in milk.

The Man She Married

A Story Told at a Ladies' Luncheon Party.

By P. A. MITCHEL

A number of married ladies were at luncheon, and the hostess proposed that each give an account of how it came about that she married her husband. In order to set the ball a-rolling, she gave her own experience first. She had met the man she married at a dinner party. They were sitting side by side, and he upset a glass of red wine over a white silk dress she wore for the first time. At the moment of the accident she was recounting an incident, and simply applying her napkin to the saturated spot she went on with her recital as though nothing had happened. The man, who realized that he had ruined the dress and could not with propriety offer to replace it, was so much pleased with her consideration for his feelings that he finally asked her to marry him.

The next narration was that of a lady who met the man she married at a horse race. At the luncheon hour the hamper containing the refreshments was brought from the boot of the coach in which the party had gone to the races, and one of the gentlemen opening a bottle of champagne shut his eyes when the pop came, and the cork hit the narrator in the face. The man was so distressed at what he had done that to make up for it he married her.

"Come, Mrs. Dorrance," said the hostess after several such romances had been recounted, "give us your experience. I am quite sure the ladies will be pleased to hear it."

Mrs. Dorrance, being urged by the others, finally consented. "I was traveling abroad," she began, "on my way from Thun to Paris. These barbarous people over there refused to check my trunk farther than Berne. On arrival at Berne I tried to find the trunk and failed. A gentleman man noticing my distress asked if he could be of service to me, and when I told him what was the matter he went with me to the other end of the station, where we found a man slowly wheeling a truck. On the truck was my trunk. The gentleman who was with me spoke French fluently. I don't know what he said, but he succeeded in getting the trunk to the train a minute before it started.

HE SNATCHED MY LIFE PRESERVER.

"I, too, met my husband while traveling abroad," said one of the ladies, slipping her wine.

"Oh, I didn't marry that gentleman," Mrs. Dorrance proceeded. "He was going east and I west. I thanked him for the service he had done me and made a rush for the train that was just starting. All the doors were locked, and I very foolishly stepped on to the footboard. In a few moments the train was going so fast that I dare not jump off, and I couldn't get into the compartment. I was clinging to a brass rod intended for persons to help them into the coach. A gentleman in the compartment reached out and tried to drag me inside through the window.

"I was more fleshy then than I am now, and the effort was a failure. I shall never forget the disappointed look on his face when he gave up trying to lift me."

"How lovely!" remarked a lady. "Was he dark or light?"

"I was too frightened to notice."

"But you did afterward."

"I never saw him again."

"Oh! Go on."

"There are several compartments in these foreign coaches. A gentleman got out through a window at the front end of the car I was on and made his way toward me. I felt a strong arm about my waist—oh how relieved I felt!—and glancing upward looked into one of the finest, bravest faces I ever saw in a man."

"I have heard that Mr. Dorrance is very handsome," remarked one of the ladies, sotto voce, to another.

"The gentleman," continued the speaker, "held on to me, encouraging me with a deep, sonorous voice that did not indicate the slightest fear or excitement, and somehow, under his protecting care, I felt perfectly safe. We clung there together till the train had passed over about ten miles, when we reached a station. I got into the compartment to which I was clinging, and my preserver returned to his own. I did not see him again till the train reached Dijon, when he banded out a fat woman and five children, disappearing with them in the station. He was evidently married."

"How unfortunate!" exclaimed several ladies at once.

"Two romances nipped in the bud."

"I pursued my journey to Paris and thence to London, where I attempted to engage passage on the next steamer to sail for New York. Every room was taken, and I must be at home within ten days to attend the wedding of my dearest friend, for whom I was to be bridesmaid. So the day the steamer sailed I went aboard, trusting that some passenger might miss reaching the steamer on time or something like that, but when I went to the purser after we were off he told me there was not a vacant room, not even a vacant berth in the ship.

"A gentleman was standing at the purser's window waiting till I had got through with my questions and, hearing what I said and seeing my disappointment, raised his hat, not with the flourish of a paragon, but to the manner born, and with a sympathetic expression in his glorious eyes said:

"Will you do me the honor to accept my stateroom?"

"Of course I told him I wouldn't think of incommencing him and all that, but he insisted, and when the purser told him that one of the officers on the upper deck would, for consideration, give up his room to him I accepted the sacrifice."

"This is going to be delightful," was whispered from one lady to another.

"I was seasick and didn't leave my room till one night—there was a dense fog—I lay listening to the whistle repeat 'toot-toot' every few moments. I heard a crash and felt the ship lurch. I knew at once that there had been a collision and, springing up, put on what I could find, seized a life preserver and ran on deck. One of the first persons I met was the gentleman who had so kindly given up his room to me."

"Ah, he saved you! I have always heard you married a brave man."

"He did no such thing. He snatched my life preserver and ran away with it."

"Oh, dear! How disappointing!"

"I made my way to one of the boats. An officer was superintending its loading, keeping the men back and putting in the women and children. The man who had taken my life preserver, crazed with fear, tried to force his way into the boat, and the officer was obliged to threaten to shoot him to keep him away."

"The boat was filled before I could get into it, and I was obliged to seek safety in another direction. There were not boats enough for half those on board, and before I could get a place in one the last had been lowered and pulled away from the ship."

"Oh, that awful night! I looked about for something to float me—for the vessel was rapidly sinking—but could get only a steamer chair. It seemed to me not that the vessel was sinking, but that the water was rising to engulf me. Slowly it came up like a hungry monster stealing upon its prey; then suddenly the bow pitched, the stern rose, and I was engulfed in the cold black ocean."

"When I came up I was still clinging to the steamer chair. But I knew it would not serve me long, for I was rapidly becoming benumbed with the cold. I was losing consciousness when I felt a hand seize my arm and I was dragged on to an improvised raft. Then I felt a rope being placed around my body and knew that I was being lashed to my support. But there was no one on it with me. Presently I felt a pair of lips pressed against mine. I opened my eyes and saw a man's face. He had very red hair. That's all I gathered of his appearance—his hair was very red. Then I felt my raft slightly lightened. I knew that a man had pulled me on to the raft, and, since it would not bear two, he had got off into the water. I lost consciousness with the knowledge that he had given his life for mine."

"Poor fellow!" remarked the hostess. "The wireless telegraph had called for help, and I was picked up by a boat from a steamer that had come to our rescue. As I was carried on to the deck from the boat who should I see standing with his hands in his pockets looking at me but—"

"Your preserver?"

"The red-headed man. He saw me and blushed. Coming to me, he said, 'I beg your pardon for what I did.'"

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"The kiss. I didn't expect to ever see you again."

"I know you didn't. You expected to give your life for mine. Come here."

"He came to me shrinkingly as a child expecting a whipping. I threw my arms about his neck and cried with my lips against his."

"Ladies," said the hostess, the speaker having blushed, "we don't need to ask who is Mr. Dorrance. It's plain enough."

The story teller did not deny the fact, and the party broke up.

"That was a very affecting story of Mrs. Dorrance's," said a lady to another.

"Very. But what a pity it was that he had a red head!"

HAVE CONFIDENCE IN UNCLE SAM

Postal Savings Receipts Increasing by Leaps and Bounds.

War in Europe Is Proving Big Boon—Confined to No Special Localities.

The war in Europe is proving a big boon to postal savings in this country. From the very day hostilities opened across the seas postal savings receipts began to increase by leaps and bounds and withdrawals fell off, a result quite contrary to the predictions of many well-informed persons who, in their imagination, saw lines of feverish depositors at post office pay windows anxious to again return their savings to the bootleg and body-belt depositories whence they came before intrusted to Uncle Sam. But the forecasters failed to reckon on the absolute confidence of the American citizen, regardless of the flag that first met his eyes, in the ability and purpose of the government to carry out its obligations, not only among the nations of the earth, but with the humblest citizen of our land.

Two important results have followed: Thousands of people, largely of foreign birth, accustomed to send their savings abroad, are now patrons of our postal savings system and enormous sums of actual cash have been released for commercial uses among our own people at a time when the need for every available dollar is pressing.

The growth of postal savings in the United States has been steady and healthy and the system has filled an important gap between the tin-can depository and the factory paymaster. On July 1, when affairs were running smoothly here and abroad and the transmission of money across the Atlantic was safe and expeditious, there was approximately $43,000,000 of postal savings standing to the credit of about 388,000 depositors. Since then over $10,000,000 of deposits have been added and the number of depositors has increased enormously. This unprecedented gain is the more striking when it is considered that the net gain in the last three months is larger than the gain for the entire fiscal year 1914. Scores of offices have done more postal savings business since the war has been going on than was done by them during the previous existence of the service. The increases are confined to no special localities, but have been felt in every nook and corner of the country.

THE MOST ECONOMICAL STOVE ON EARTH

It is not the original cost of a stove, but it is what it costs to operate it that counts. THE FLORENCE is an investment—it pays for itself in a very short time. As a fire keeper it will be just as good 20 years from now. If the fire pot cracks inside of five years we will give you one free of charge.

The Only Floor Heater on the Market or That Has Ever Been Made

THE FLORENCE

Has twice the life of any other stove, because the FLORENCE burns out the fuel, in all other stoves the fuel burns out the stove. It is truly a marvel—the most wonderful stove ever invented.

THE GREATEST STOVE EVER MADE FOR BURNING SOFT COAL OR SLACK

THE HOT BLAST AIR-TIGHT FLORENCE

will burn anything combustible—hard or soft coal, coal siftings, coal dust, slack coal, coke, wood, sawdust and rubbish. The fire never goes out, day or night, and a steady, even temperature may be maintained. All features are patented and the J. B. Howard Combustion Patent which has made the Florence famous, was sustained THREE DIFFERENT TIMES by the U. S. Courts, and any stove manufacturer, dealer or purchaser using same without proper authority will be rendering himself liable for profits and damages. It is the Zenith of stove perfection—the most important stove invention of modern times.

TWELFTH ANNUAL S. S. CONVENTION

Held in This City Tuesday and Wednesday of Last Week.

Large and Enthusiastic Delegations from County Sunday Schools Were Present.

After the meeting opened with song and devotion the president, Mr. E. S. Stacks, read the call, which follows: The twelfth annual convention of the Charlevoix County Sunday School Association will be held in the Charlevoix Congregational church Tuesday and Wednesday, November 3rd and 4th, for the election of officers for the ensuing year and to elect delegates to the State Sunday School Convention to be held at Adrian November 11-12-13 and also to transact such other Sunday school business as may come before the meeting.

E. S. Stacks, President.
(Signed) Mrs. F. N. Metcalf, Secretary.

The president also named the following committees:

Resolutions and enrollment—Rev. A. D. Grigsby, Rev. C. H. Strait, Mrs. John Burns.

Finance—Rev. Porter Bennett, Rev. C. E. Taggart, Rev. J. M. Gleason.

Nominating Committee—William Sanderson, Mrs. P. D. Campbell, Mrs. Howard Porter.

At this time the president called Mrs. H. S. Harsha to the chair.

Mrs. Harsha, who had charge of the afternoon session, called on Rev. C. E. Taggart, who gave an address of welcome.

Several of the delegates being absent who were to have part in the program, Mr. Grigsby was prevailed on to give a talk on his large experience as a Sunday school worker and one which was thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

Mr. Taggart spoke for a short time, explaining the map of the county and the location of the Sunday schools therein.

"What the Sunday School Might Accomplish," by Judge Correll, was an inspiring address replete with facts and good suggestions.

Mr. Weaver of Petoskey, as missionary of the American Sunday School Union for twenty-three years, gave a very interesting account of his work in that capacity and the conditions in Sunday schools that he had met with.

The second session of the convention opened Tuesday evening, November 3, with Rev. J. M. Gleason of Boyne City presiding.

Mr. A. B. Bull, county secretary of the Y. M. C. A., addressed the meeting, his subject being "The Rural Y. M. C. A. as a Co-operative Agency." It was handled nicely and convinced his audience that he thoroughly understood and was in hearty sympathy with the Y. M. C. A. work.

Mr. Gleason spoke in behalf of sending boys to the state conference of high school students at Ann Arbor, telling of his own personal experience with boys in his own community.

Mr. R. W. Kane, in his usual clear, forceful style, spoke for a short time on "Some Things to be Thankful For" and also on "The Only Real, Preventive of War."

Wednesday morning, November 4th, the convention was called to order by Rev. A. D. Grigsby. Miss Anna Metcalf presented a splendid paper on "The Work of the W. C. T. U. Through Its Departments." An excellent address on the Sunday school educational system was given by Judge Mayne.

Questions and discussions on the above subject were in charge of Mr. Weaver.

Wednesday afternoon the meeting was called to order by Rev. C. E. Taggart. "The Bible in the Public School" was taken up in a very intelligent manner by Mr. H. A. Craig, superintendent of the public schools of Charlevoix.

The conference of delegates and the conference of the five county convention league were laid over owing to the absence of some of the delegates.

A collection was taken up which fully covered all the expenses of the convention.

The committee on enrollment reported fourteen Sunday schools represented at the convention, with an average attendance of seventy-five at each meeting.

The report of the nominating committee was as follows: Officers of the County S. S. Association—President, Joseph Extrom of Boyne Falls; secretary, Charles S. McCutcheon of Boyne City; treasurer, Mrs. Howard Porter of East Jordan; executive committee, Mrs. Jas. Dilworth, Mrs. W. J. Pearson, Mrs. W. P. Porter, Mrs. Earle Clark, Chas. Carey and E. S. Stacks; delegate to the state convention, Judge S. A. Correll. The following names for the various departments of work were voted on and adopted: Superintendent county rural work, Wm. Sanderson; county superintendent of evangelism, A. Bruce Ball; county superintendent of temperance, Miss Metcalf.

Moved and seconded that the chairman appoint a committee of one person from each town represented here to secure funds for the purpose of sending delegates to the state convention at Adrian, November 11-12-13. Carried.

Moved and supported that the invitation from Boyne Falls for the next convention be accepted with the heartiest thanks. Carried unanimously.

The resolution committee submitted the following:

"That we put on record our gratification with the management and the inspirational value of the various sessions of the convention and with the excellent attendance and the attention manifested; that we especially tender our thanks to the pastor of the Congregational church and his many willing helpers in making the delegates and other workers in Sunday schools through the county feel at home; to all who took part, whether in speech or song, to make the various sessions useful and enjoyable and to the kindly hospitality of all who opened their homes to those away from home—all of which is heartily submitted.

"A. D. Grigsby,
"Mrs. J. Burns."

As the time was limited, "The Sunday School as an Evangelizing Agency," by A. B. Clark, had to be omitted. Rev. C. E. Taggart pronounced the benediction, which closed one of the most successful conventions ever held in the county and one which will be long remembered by those attending for its spirit of good will and hearty co-operation.

Mrs. F. N. Metcalf, Sec'y.

BADLY HURT IN ALASKA

Well Known Charlevoix Citizen Meets With Accident in Far North.

George R. Emrey Falls From Elevated Track, Breaking His Leg at the Hip.

Word was received last week from Portland, Oregon, that George R. Emrey, formerly of this city, had been severely injured in Alaska, where he was working in the mines, and had been brought to Portland, Oregon, for medical treatment.

Later details of the accident received by relatives give more information. It seems that Mr. Emrey was either walking on a track or riding on an ore car at a mine near Nome, Alaska, where he was employed, and while crossing a bridge slipped and fell from the track or car, falling some distance to the ground, breaking his leg at the hip. The accident happened about six weeks ago.

He was taken to the nearest port and placed on a boat bound for Portland, Oregon, which place he reached some three weeks after the accident occurred. During this period of time he was unable to receive medical attendance and when he reached Portland was in a serious condition.

It will be recalled that for a number of years Mr. Emrey sailed on the lakes, and about a year ago gave up this line of occupation and went west. Later he went to Alaska, where he was employed up to the time of the accident. A card received Tuesday states that his condition is improving, although as yet not considered out of danger.

OPENS MEAT MARKET

Well Known Charlevoix Young Man to Conduct Business at Miller's Grocery.

Milton Block, one of Charlevoix's well known young men, has leased the meat market in the B. W. Miller grocery and will open for business on Wednesday, November 11.

For some time Mr. Block has been behind the counter at the Fowler market, where he has gained a wide acquaintance with the needs of the people of this vicinity in the meat line. He will carry everything in the line of meats and make a specialty of home-made sausages, etc. We predict Mr. Block will make a success of the venture.

Governor Edward F. Dunne on the Good Road Question

"The state highway commission was somewhat hampered in the beginning of their work by a suit testing the constitutionality of the law. It was fought through all the courts and the supreme court handed down its decision on the question at the June term this year, holding the law to be constitutional in every detail. "The commission at once began active work under the law. The first contracts were let out on the first day of July this year. Contracts have been let in forty-six counties of the state comprising 91 miles of road, 75 of which will be of concrete and 16 of brick. The highway department hope to have this number of miles of work completed this fall. This, together with perfecting the organization and the preparing of the maps and designating the roads that should be state aid roads, we believe to be a phenomenal success for the first year's work under the new road law.

Starting Hard Roads, Too

"Communities that were against this system at the beginning of the work have become enthusiastic in favor of road improvement under the system as designated in the law and we predict that this will be one of the most beneficial pieces of legislation that has ever been enacted in Illinois, because it will ultimately lead to the construction of such a system of roads as the people can use in their business and in their pleasure every day in the year.

"In addition to the state aid roads the department has under construction about thirty-five miles of hard roads. Seventeen miles of these roads are water-bound macadam and are being constructed with convict labor, four miles are in Frankfort township and thirteen miles in Washington township, Will county.

Drainage

"Under the direction of the state highway department all of the roads of the state will be improved under one system.

"Perhaps one of the most important points in the construction of any quality of road is that of drainage. This question applies to every quality of road—whether it be an earth road, a gravel road, a macadam road, a concrete or brick road. If any road is permitted to stand under winter, disintegration will soon set in, but any quality of road properly drained is much improved from the old system of letting the roads practically take care of themselves.

Many Earth Roads To Be Well Kept

"During the year there has been a graded and dragged upwards of seven thousand miles of earth roads under the direction of the state highway department through the county superintendents of highways. We have 96,000 miles of public highways in Illinois outside of the villages and cities of the state. Thus you will see we will always have many earth roads, and we must give much attention to the proper grading and dragging to place them in a passable condition in order to be feeders to the main thoroughfares which are designated as state aid roads.

"The department under no condition will overlook the lateral roads, the great majority of which for many years will be earth roads, but the construction of the main system of roads of either concrete or brick will lead to the better construction of all of the lateral roads.

Hundreds of New Bridges

"The state highway department, in addition to the work specified, has during the year prepared plans and specifications for at least 600 bridges for the various townships and counties in the state and it has superintended the construction of many of them. This part of the work has been of vast importance to the various counties, as it is conceded that a very great saving has been made to the various counties because of their inspection and supervision.

"The durability in the manner of constructing bridges and culverts has been marked because of the quality of construction, reinforced concrete being the present method of construction. When a culvert or bridge is built of this material under proper plans it is almost indestructible.

Every Man's Inalienable Concern

"The improvement of our highways is a matter that ought to arouse every citizen of the land, because when once we have thoroughly improved them it will be a pleasure to the people and of vast importance to them from a business standpoint. The people are becoming intensely interested in this question, not only from one end of the state to the other, but throughout the entire length and breadth of the nation, and I can think of no other question of more interest to the state and nation than the building of good roads and good waterways.

Eight Cents Per Acre for Twenty Years

"When this system of roads that is planned in Illinois is completed it will enormously enhance the value of every acre of land in the state. The cost of building and maintaining these roads in comparison with the enhanced value of the land resulting therefrom will be inconsiderable.

"The entire system of concrete and brick roads will cost the state, as the department estimates, $180,000,000, but the farmers' part of this cost will only be eight cents per acre each year for twenty years to construct the entire system, he paying under the new road law 40 per cent. of the cost of the system, the railroads, the villages and the cities paying the balance of the cost of construction.

Concrete Work in Cook County

"This being the case, it would seem that every citizen in the state ought to become enthusiastic, and declare that within twenty years we will have this system of roads for the benefit of the people. Since July 22 contracts have been awarded by the state highway commission for the construction of five sections of state aid road in Cook county. The paved portions of these roads are all eighteen feet wide and of the highest possible quality of concrete construction.

"I also recommended to the general assembly the enactment of appropriate legislation which would provide for the employment of the inmates of our penitentiaries on road work. In response to that suggestion the general assembly passed a law which I approved permitting the use of convicts on the roads of the state who had less than five-year sentences to serve.

"The first road camp—Camp Hope—was established at Grand de Tour, a village near Dixon, Illinois, September 3, 1913. Fifty-one honor men were sent there. A road was cut through a hill three-fourths of a mile long and one mile of grading was completed. This work was finished February 7, 1914.

"On April 27, 1914, Camp Dunne was established at Deer Park, near Ottawa. Forty-two honor men were sent there. A deep cut was made through rock and earth and about two and one-half miles of macadam road were completed. After this work was finished the camp was moved to Mokena, Illinois, where one mile and a fourth was completed in twenty-six working days. This was done at a total cost of $2300. The road-bed consisted of ten inches of gravel with a surface of two inches of chipped rock. Camp Dunne was then transferred to Frankfort, where forty-five honor men are employed and have completed to date two miles of roadway.

Prison Honor Men on the Job

"Another camp—Camp Allen—was established at Beecher on June 15, 1914, and is composed of sixty-two honor men. The work is being done under the supervision of the state highway department. To date fourteen miles of road have been completed and, with good weather, I hope to have the work finished there by the 15th of November. "Sixty men have been assigned to work on the Joliet honor farm, consisting of about 2000 acres. At present these men are employed rebuilding and grading all the roads around the farm and in all probability will remain there all winter.

"I am advised by the warden of the Southern Illinois penitentiary at Joliet that the prisoners in that institution have constructed a splendid road which runs in front of the prison property on the grounds of the state; also that they have constructed a fine road to the prison farm and have built many rock roads on the prison farm.

Farm Property More Valuable

"It is true that road building costs money. It is true that it must entail some taxes, but I do not believe if the road building of the state is conducted upon sane and reasonable lines under which honest work will be done for fair compensation that there is a farmer in Illinois whose property will not be enhanced in value several times the amount in taxation he may be compelled to pay under the new road law in the way of bringing about good roads in his neighborhood.

"It is indeed time to drag the State of Illinois out of the unenviable twenty-third position she now occupies among the states of the union in the matter of road building and further drag the people of the state out of the mud that so long retarded in particular the great agricultural state.

"Road Day," 1914

"It was a pleasure to me as governor to have designated Wednesday, April 15 last, as 'road day,' not as a holiday, but a hard-working day, upon which I urged public officials and the public in general to begin practical and effective work upon the improvement of the highways of the state. Public sentiment is in favor of the improvement of our roads. A great deal has been accomplished in this direction in the near few years.

GOOD PLACE TO LIVE

The Farmer is the Man Who Can Look to the Future With Confidence.

The man who is settled on a good farm is able to view with equalmity the unsettled condition of business. In a pinch he is, even at the worst, self sustaining. And now when there is great stress in general industry he finds that his products command good prices and he is able to put money in the bank at a time when most persons fortunate enough to possess balances have to draw on them to meet emergency conditions. The farmer can look to the future with confidence. Good farms in the vicinity of Charlevoix are in demand and they are rapidly increasing in value. It has been predicted that farm property will double in value within the next few years.

Is Doing Fine Work.

Some of the best work we have seen along the line of silver and gold plating is being done by O. W. Smith. In former years Mr. Smith says he made a specialty of this work, and that which he is turning out now is plain evidence that he has not forgotten the tricks of the trade. People wishing to have their knives, forks, spoons, etc., re-plated will do well to see him about it.

J. R. MEAD BADLY HURT

Falls From Ladder Upon Which He Was Working in Cram Home.

Fell Over Fourteen Feet, Striking on His Back—Injuries Considered Quite Serious.

J. R. Mead met with a serious accident Monday which will keep him confined to his room for some time. He was engaged in his regular occupation of painting and paperhanging at the home of Nally Cram when the accident occurred.

While working in an open stairway the ladder upon which he stood slipped, causing him to fall a distance of fourteen feet, striking on the railing of the stairs and rolling from there four or five steps down. He struck the railing on his back and now lies in his room above the Hines drug store in an almost helpless condition.

The accident will lay him up for some time and is considered quite serious on account of his advanced age.

FISHING IS GOOD

Great Lifts are Being Made by Fishermen From This Port.

Fishing in the waters of Lake Michigan this season is reported to be the best in years. Hardly a lift is made without obtaining a large number of fish.

Last Friday the Beaver brought over 20 tons, the City of Boyne, 8 tons, the Three Sisters 8 tons, and the Arbutus 4 tons from Beaver Island. Tugs fishing out of St. James are reported to be making big lifts.

The fishing industry is employing a large number of men in this vicinity, beside those employed by the government in spawn gathering. Nineteen boats are now fishing out of this port and about an equal number from Saint James.

Banishes Slot Machines.

Mayor Ditto of Petoskey has issued an order to the police department to see that all slot machines in the city are put out of business. This will include slot machines of various kinds, punch boards and other gambling devices. The order took effect Monday.

Ripley-Hoyt.

Wright Ripley of this city was united in marriage to Mrs. Marguerite E. Hoyt Wednesday evening, November 4th, at the home of M. McEachron in Grand Rapids. Mr. and Mrs. Ripley are now located at their home on Park avenue.

CIDER BARRELS ARE EXPLODING

On Railroads and Boat Lines While in Transit.

Western Michigan Apples Producing Cider of Higher Test Than Heretofore.

The quality of the Western Michigan apples being used for cider this fall is so good that the cider manufacturers are heaving troubles the like of which they have never had before. The season of 1914 was an exceptionally favorable one from the fruit growers' standpoint and the finest apples ever produced in the state are the result. While the fancy and number one apples have been packed in boxes and barrels for sale, a large share of the number two apples have gone to the cider mills. These apples have been so filled with juice and have produced cider of such high test that the barrels in which the cider has been placed are unable to stand the pressure and telegrams are coming in daily from different parts of the country to the effect that barrels of cider in transit are exploding, to the consternation of trainmen, wholesalers and retailers. These explosions have been taking place despite the fact that the barrels were up to the usual standard for withstanding pressure. The most plausible explanation of the situation is that the quality of the apples used has been so high that they have produced a grade of cider of a better test than any that has ever before been known on the market. This new grade of cider will compel the adoption of higher standards by the barrel makers.

The difference between the Western Michigan apple with the flavor and the Pacific Coast apple without flavor is found in the juice. The moisture and sunshine conditions of Western Michigan are such as to give the apples grown in this region an abundance of rich juice.

HIGH SCHOOL ORCHESTRA

Members of Public School Organized and Hard at Practice.

Under the leadership of Dewey Jones of Bay Shore a high school orchestra has been organized. Mr. Jones has been connected with the Bay Shore band as leader for two seasons and is competent as an orchestra leader and a musician of no small ability. The organization at present comprises eight pieces—Dewey Jones, cornet; Ward Genett, bass horn; Fred Gregory, trombone; King Saunders, John Walker and Stanley Widdfield, violins; Perry Mason, piano, and Glen Kirby, drums. The boys are holding weekly practices and already give promise of developing into an excellent musical organization.

UP TO PEOPLE

Whether Public Schools Can Have Basketball Team This Season.

Charlevoix high has some excellent material this year for a basketball team. However, it is altogether impossible to have a team without a few conveniences, such as a place to play, etc. There are a few promising-looking buildings that might be available with slight repairs. Let the citizens think this over and if you want some real athletics during the winter months boost this proposition.

More Bumper Crops.

Conrad Voelker, who lives north of Horton Bay, has just completed the work of digging 800 bushels of fine potatoes from two acres of new ground. Those who have seen the potatoes claim they are fine.

Frank Brock and Ed. Boas, whose farms are south of town, also claim to have fields of potatoes the acreage of which will run as high as that of Mr. Voelker. Next!

Auction Sale.

Jas. Peters will have an auction sale at his farm, one and one-half miles south of Ironton, on Thursday, November 19, commencing at one o'clock. W. E. Byers will cry the sale. Remember the date and attend.

MILLIONS TO SEE MARVELS OF WESTERN AMERICA IN 1915

VAST PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION LODGESTONE TO MULTITUDES TO "SEE AMERICA FIRST"—MAGNIFICENT EXHIBIT PALACES ON SHORES OF SAN FRANCISCO BAY.

THE above panorama of the grounds of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, taken six months before the opening day, is an answer to the question, "Will the war cause a postponement of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition?" It will not.

The photograph shows only a part of the entire Exposition area of 635 acres, but it shows that the Exposition was 80 per cent completed the day the European conflict started. The war will not even harm the Exposition.

Any loss in exhibits is made up in the requests for additional space from Japan, the orient, South America and nonwarring nations of Europe. There has been not a single withdrawal by any nation because of the war, and assurances have been received from two of the belligerent countries that Exposition participation will proceed. Loss in attendance from Europe will be offset by increased attendance from the United States, South America, Central America, the orient, Australia, New Zealand and the noncombatants in Europe who want to escape war's horror. In the accompanying photograph, taken from a hilltop 900 yards away, an impression of the size of the exhibit palaces of the "Walled City" is given. Of the eleven exhibit palaces ten are completed, and the Palace of Fine Arts, which is of steel and concrete and absolutely fireproof, will be ready before this story is published. No better criterion of the progress of the Exposition may be had than the record of the paid admissions. The average is now more than 50,000 persons a month at 25 cents. The total admission receipts from Sept. 9, 1913, to Aug. 30, 1914, was $101,000.

The largest single day when there has been no special event on the grounds was a recent Sunday, when 8,250 persons paid at the gates. The largest attendance for a special event on the grounds was 18,000 paid admissions at the Ball of All Nations on May 2. The Exposition will open on Feb. 20 and close Dec. 4, 1915.

An Attractive FURNACE

proposition for you in quality and price. The American Bell Furnace is given preference over all furnaces for durability and economy. They are practically indestructible because castings are made from best gray iron that can be obtained. Jackets extra heavy preventing heat from penetrating and heating your cellar. The furnace is built on lines that obtain all heat units possible from fuel and radiating all heat instead of going out chimney and also consumes all gases. The new type ball bearing grates operate so easily a child can operate them and sift the ashes from coal instead of dumping and waisting coal as other types do. You can't buy a better furnace no matter if you pay double our price, and a strong guarantee is given by the manufacturers. SYNOPSIS

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, international spy, from General Love, whom Loubeque hates, in Manila. Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille nurses him in an attempt to recover the papers.

Lucille gets the papers, but the ship is wrecked. She is cast ashore on a Pacific island and is taken by a native chief to his hut to nurse his sick child.

The native child is restored to health, and the grateful natives idolize Lucille. Loubeque also cast ashore, tries various plans to recover the papers, but in vain.

Loubeque, baffled, forges a message from a neighboring chief to lure Lucille away from her friends. She falls into a pitfall, losing the documents.

Loubeque's native aid steals the papers from his master, and Lucille takes them from the native who he is killed by a lion. She finds and follows an underground passage in the jungle.

Lucille falls into the hands of a tribe of ape men, whose leader drops a necklace of priceless rubies, which she takes. She and Loubeque are rescued from the island by a yacht commanded by Captain Wetherell.

The girl and Loubeque are set adrift in an open boat after she refuses the captain's advances, and he takes the papers.

Saved by fishermen, Lucille and Loubeque are in China. As she passes a house Loubeque's diary is thrown to her mysteriously. She tries to board a vessel bound for America. Loubeque recovers the papers from Wetherell.

Lucille stows away, is caught and dresses as a cabin boy with the aid of the captain of the steamer in order to search Loubeque's stateroom for the papers. He catches her at work.

Loubeque takes the papers from Lucille. Landing at San Francisco she is kidnapped by the spy and held a prisoner in Loubeque's house by Thompson.

She throws a message from her window to the captain of the boat, who passes the house, and a fight follows, which Loubeque wins. He is hurt, and she takes and hides the papers. Thompson tries to steal the rubies.

At Loubeque's ranch in Mexico, to which Loubeque takes Lucille, the girl is befriended by a mysterious Mexican, who helps her to escape after she strikes down Thompson.

Lucille flies across the border and meets Lieutenant Carmody, an army friend. He puts her on a train for San Francisco. On the train is Thompson, watching her.

CHAPTER XIX.

An Appeal.

LUCILLE started just as her hands encountered the packet of the grained papers and documents. A faint humming sound told her with the heavy tread of the iron above stairs. But she had won, was victorious after many defeats. Still, that sound—

She seemed to have heard it before. With a little cry of horror she looked up, her hands clasp the packet to her breast. The room that had been her boudoir was slowly closing down upon her, was moving down, down, down. Its dark floor threatening to crush her like a letterpress closes upon its contents. Then it stopped.

She looked toward the door through which she had entered, her delight at himself deluded. A glance at the room which had started to descend upon her drove the thought away as quickly as it brought a shudder through her slender frame. Slowly, reluctantly, she held out the packet to him, watching him furtively, as with the utmost courtesy he bowed and placed it in his breast pocket.

Slowly he conducted her up the stairs. In his private room he motioned her to a chair, seating himself at the desk.

"I am not going to threaten you again," he said quietly. "I wish you to know that this is the last time you can interfere with my plans. Child, can you not be made to see what folly it is—this fight against me?"

"Mr. Loubeque," she said softly, "have you never grieved that it is impossible for the finer feelings you are continually suppressing to be returned because your ambitions are cruel and base? I do not like to wage this constant war with you. I do not like to battle with the man who has been so kind to me in his own way that I could love him as another father. But you would ruin my father; you would wreck my sweetheart's life. You would keep me apart from perfect happiness after I have merely peeked through the door of that happiness only to have it slammed shut in my face. Can't you see that it is you who must go down to defeat? Can't you see that love such as supports a frail girl to battle with you as I have done will not be dowered by the most powerful mind? Can't you see that I cannot stop even if I do sometimes grow very tired and sick at heart and pray to this soul of mine to let me lie down for a little while and rest?—rest—rest!"

She broke off with a sob of the most acute distress. "There is no such word as rest for me. Always it is go on, go on, constantly go on, until it seems I must fall along the wayside. But I do not fall. I have won from you constantly. I have always won, and I shall always continue to win. And you know it, Mr. Loubeque, for I can see it on your face—now."

Like one inspired she was, as the halting tones of her plea changed to tones of passionate conviction, a certainty that expressed itself in words tumbling from the tongue with utter abandon, words that seemed to come from utter lips than her own. And as Loubeque looked back at the beautiful figure of the girl he was surprised to see that suddenly she seemed to have changed, that the shy of a child who had come on board the Empress from the hydroplane had suddenly become a woman of such capacity for love and hate as even he himself did not have.

Once back to him the girl he had loved and whom he still loved as fondly as in the old days of Philippine walk at the Point, from which he had been expelled. Swiftly she came to his side, planting her hand upon his shoulder, her voice low and tender again like the sighing of an April breeze through the greenest tully leaves.

"You think you are working for hate, and all the time you are working for the same reason that I am—you are working because of love. Can you not see what a perversion of love is this thing you constantly seek to do? Can you not?"

Lucille could feel the man's shoulders trembling, could mark the tremendous effort he made at self-control. She was almost ready to plead with him for a return of the papers, to give up his entire life work and count it failure, confident that he was well along the road to doing so, when a rap sounded on the door.

For some reason which she could not define a shudder ran through her at the sound. She seemed to recognize a sinister presence close by. She glanced at Loubeque, and her heart sank as she saw the wave of emotion she had bred within him had passed, that he was again the icy, impenetrable international spy.

"Come in," he called briskly. "Slowly, cautiously, yet with not the slightest uncertainty, the door pushed open. Before the visitor appeared on the threshold Lucille knew who it would be.

For a moment she was taken aback by Thompson's perfect aplomb. She knew he had been the one who robbed her of her necklace, that he had sprayed her with ether and taken it from about her throat while she slept. And yet not so much as by the gliver of an eyelash did he show any sign of surprise or fear.

"I was delayed, sir," the butler began apologetically, when "Loubeque lifted his head imperatively. "You were delayed," he coldly repeated, "separating every syllable and making it out as though it were a death judgment." "It is perhaps better that you were delayed, Thompson. I have just received a letter from a man with whom you are acquainted. In this letter, Thompson, he informs me he intends turning traitor to my interests, that he intends assisting Miss Love to make her escape."

"Quite so, sir," murmured the butler-thief.

"I am informed by him that he slept upon you while you cut through the bars of Miss Love's window."

"Thompson did not stir, but Lucille saw the scar go a sickly white.

"The man lied, sir."

"Men do not lie at such moments."

For just a moment Thompson was silent. The flush upon the room was so profound as to make the flicking of Loubeque's watch strike upon the ears like millet strokes. Slowly the butler's index finger moved to the scar upon his cheek.

"The man you speak of evidently did the work in the hope of releasing Miss Love. I gained this scar while trying to prevent the flight, sir."

"It's a lie!" Lucille burst forth passionately. "That man tried to rob me here in this very house. That was why I insisted upon it to serve me when I took the drug you put in the drink."

"Why did you not mention it at that time?" The spy's tones were dubious. "Because I did not wish you to know I had anything of such value about me."

"Value? You had no money when you left Manila."

"No, but I obtained possession of a wonderful ruby necklace in the cavern of the jungle just before I was rescued by the filibuster. Three nights ago when I boarded the train for here that man dragged me while I slept and stole the necklace from about my throat. Then he dropped out of the window of his compartment. That is why he was detained."

Loubeque fastened his cold eyes upon the butler. The man had nerves as steady as a rock. Lucille studied the judge and culprit earnestly. She could see that Thompson was heating down the spy's belief in her story. Swift as a flash, without a second's thought, she darted toward the thief. She had noticed his fingers involuntarily seek the right hand breast pocket of his coat when she made her charge. In one swift movement she had ripped open the coat. With the other hand she plunged toward the place she knew the necklace to be.

At first Thompson was taken off his guard. Then he sprang back with a hoarse cry of rage and alarm, forgetful of everything. The girl clung to her hold like a tigress. He grasped her wrist roughly and thrust her, reeling, across the room, his eyes glaring as, with clenched fists, he stared at her, while, dazed though she was by the violence of him, she held triumphantly in her hand the gorgeously dazzling ruby necklace.

Hugo Loubeque did not utter a sound; did not change expressions for one instant. Slowly, with all the laconic grace of some giant animal, he rose and stepped toward his thief.

The cold expression in his eyes had turned to one of grim ferocity, such an expression as made Lucille shudder, as she saw his fingers reach out and grip Thompson about the throat, pressing, pressing—

Not harshly, but with cold, definite, murderous purpose, the spy slowly forced the struggling figure into limpness, then cast him from him without apparently making the slightest effort, rubbing his palms slowly together as though the touch had delirious them.

Lucille was chilled with horror as she watched the spy repeat himself, his face calm and emotionless. Apparently he had quite forgotten the hidden, silent figure upon the floor, whose hunched face was slowly regaining its color. Thompson was groaning when Loubeque impatiently pressed a button and waited for an answer.

CHAPTER XX.

When the Owl Hoots.

IT came even before he expected. A loud clanging of bells through the house punctuated the silence, a clanging that pierced through the treble sound of the doorbell. Hugo Loubeque sprang to his feet swiftly. The mask of his face dropped and showing that face keen, eager, a bit perturbed.

The clanging sound was augmented by the rushing of feet. She had never dreamed there could be so many in the house. More like a warren it was than anything else. Whispers sounded from the halls. But she gave them all no heed. She was swaying gently to and fro, her body fighting against the faintness that was causing her knees to refuse support, her eyes wide with delighted recognition and love and disbelief, and then she opened her lips, trying to cry out aloud the name of the man she loved, the man she had worked so hard for, the man who stood in the street below, staring up at the very window at which she stood. But all that came from her lips was the faintest sound, tremulous, plaintive, the whisper of his name.

Before she could regain control of herself, even realize that she really was seeing her sweetheart here in flesh and blood, the hand of Loubeque was about her waist, drawing her gently, but firmly, away from the window. But even as the ensemble shut out her view of him she caught the lightning flash of recognition as her appeal drew Gibson's own eyes to that window, and she knew he had seen her.

Loubeque restrained her firmly. The clanging of the bells throughout the house ceased instantly just as a loud hammering on the door below rose. Came a flying rush of men within the room, filling it completely. Loubeque swiftly glanced about at the anxious faces, then nodded.

"The tunnel!" he cried sharply. Suddenly Lucille became aware that the room was shrouding downward like a giant elevator. She glanced about her, sick with apprehension, upon the faces so close to her own in the narrow confines. A breath of rank, cool air fanned her cheek from out the darkness. Loubeque's hand was upon her wrist, his voice softly advising her to follow him. Far in the distance, a little speck of light reached out toward them.

For what seemed an endless distance she was led by the spy, with always that rust of feet behind. The light was growing broader, brighter. Lou-

CURIOUS FOSSIL FORESTS.

Twelve Tower, One Above the Other, in Yellowstone Park.

In the Yellowstone National park twelve successive forests, one on top of another, have been buried by outflows of lava and petrified, according to a government pamphlet entitled, "Fossil Forests of the Yellowstone National Park," by F. H. Knowlton.

The area within which the fossil forests are now found was apparently in the beginning an irregular but relatively flat basin, on the floor of which, after a time, there grew the first forest. Then there came from some of the volcanoes, probably those to the north, an outpouring of ashes, mud flows and other material which entirely buried the forest but so gradually that the trees were simply submerged by the incoming material, few of them being prostrated. On the raised floor of the basin, after a time, the next forest came into existence, only to be in turn engulfed as the first had been and so on through the period represented by the 2,000 feet or more of similar beds.

The whole history of the manner in which these forests were fossilized is not fully understood, but it was undoubtedly dependent on or at least greatly facilitated by the presence of volcanic and hydrothermal activity, which was doubtless then, as it is to some extent now, a marked feature of the park region. The fossil forests are surrounded by a matrix that is known as an acidic lava, which contains abundant silica in solution. The first part of the process of alification may well have been that silica would be deposited in all the cells and vessels of the wood, making an accurate cast of all open spaces. Then, while the slow process of decay went on, as each particle of organic matter was removed its place was taken by the silica, until finally all the wood substance had disappeared and its place, atom by atom, had been taken by silica.

SAVE THE SOIL.

Don't Let the Rains Wash the Valuable Plant Food Away.

If you knew that it takes nature 10,000 years to form a foot of soil, maybe you would have a higher opinion of Mother Earth and be more careful how you drain your garden or field. If you saw a granary full of rat holes you would suspect a careless farmer. But a field left to wash away by the unchecked rush of surface water after a downpour is fully as wasteful. The only difference is that here the waste is of plant food before it gets into the grain.

If your garden or field is on a slope, terrace it; if on a level, plant it not in straight rows, but in circles. And in both cases the drain it, for the stuff that washes away is precisely the stuff that your crops must need. Once gone it is expensive to replace.

When you stop to think that every thing depends on the soil, clearly the soil is worth saving.—Seattle Star.

A Dog Story.

We brought from Scotland a colly about six months old. He was allowed to be with us at the breakfast table, but never to be fed in the dining room. This rule was enforced by my daughter. I was the only member of the family who ever broke over the rule. And often when I offered him a tempting bone he would glance across the table, and if he caught the forbidden eye he would resist the temptation. But one morning she left the table abruptly. I followed her into the hall and watched her till she had closed the door of her study. Then he scampered back, nudged my elbow, as if to say, "Now is our time," seized the bone and was soon crunching it with the greatest satisfaction.—London Spectator.

HIGHWAY ENGINEERING.

Much has been heard, especially during the past eight years, about the primary considerations that should govern in the selection of materials and methods for building various types of roads and pavements. It is fair to say that highway work would be further advanced and on a basis comparable with other engineering problems if the generally accepted principles derived from scientific research and the practical experience of recognized experts had been more generally adopted and applied.

It must be admitted that highway engineering has not kept abreast of the times as compared with other branches of engineering. As a matter of fact, the problem which presented itself with the advent of the automobile and the consequent revolutionizing of traffic conditions is just beginning to be solved, and while it is true that the highway problem would not be so serious as regards country roads were it not for the automobile, it is equally true that it never received the attention it deserved and was generally looked upon lightly by both engineers and public officials; and the highway departments afforded splendid opportunities to parcel out jobs to men from all walks of life and without any qualifications for the work.—Good Roads.

Her View of It.

"There was a time," said the old inhabitant, "when that piece of property sold for a song." "Really?" replied the grand opera prima donna. "How very expensive!"—Washington Star.

Tax Commission Takes Hand.

At their October session the Board of Supervisors voted to reduce the equalized valuation of Boyne City by a substantial cut on hearing evidence which they deemed sufficient to warrant it. Some party called the attention of the Tax Commission to the act and they, deeming that their only excuse for existence is to boost assessments, have decided to take a hand. They have now notified all of our assessing officers not to spread state of county tax until they had investigated, as if they did not find the cut warranted, they would re-convene the Board of Supervisors and order them to make a new equalization.—East Jordan Enterprise.

L. D. Willson and Miss Jennie Black to Represent County at State Grange.

Charlevoix Pomona Grange, No. 40, met with Marion Center Grange on Thursday, November 5th, and in spite of bad weather there was a good attendance representing nine granges.

In the afternoon the topics "Torren's System of Land Transfer" and "The Tonnage Tax" were discussed by the members present. The general sentiment seemed to favor both. In the evening Dr. A. M. Wilkinson gave a very interesting talk on "Local Option," pointing out that all newspapers allowing liquor advertisements should be barred from homes where there are children.

L. D. Willson of Boyne City and Miss Jennie Black of Charlevoix were elected to represent Charlevoix Pomona at the State Grange to be held at Battle Creek, December 8, 9, 10 and 11.

Five candidates were initiated into the fifth degree by the Marion Center degree team.

The next meeting will be held at Pine Lake Grange some time in February.

The ladies of the R. N. of A. will serve a l0c tea at the home of Mrs. Hannah Risher, 116 Hurllant avenue, Friday afternoon, Nov. 13, from 2 to 5 o'clock. —Adv. 451

HOW TO KEEP A GARBAGE CAN CLEAN.

All garbage should be kept in a covered galvanized can. When possible have a wooden box with a blued lid to hold the receptacle; otherwise nail an ordinary wooden box, bottom side, to the fence or back shed. Give it a coat of outside paint. It will be easier to clean and much more sightly.

As garbage breeds mosquitoes and the deadly germ bearing fly, the greatest care must be taken in cleansing the pail. This should be done each time the garbage is removed. Use weak solutions of any coal tar products. These are at once disinfectants and deodorizers. They are inexpensive and will kill not only the flies and mosquitoes, but their eggs. One, about 50 cents a pint, and another, about 85 cents for a similar quantity, may be obtained at any drug store.

In making a solution of either of the above use in the proportion of a teaspoonful to a pint of water, or if made in gallon quantity, which may be bottled and kept until used, have the proportion a quarter of a pint to a gallon of water.

A solution of chloride of lime, one teaspoonful to a pint of water, or a strong solution of water and washing soda make good cleansers. All of these are recommended by the city health authorities. These solutions will kill the grass and should therefore be emptied into a hydrant drain.

Keep a discarded whisk broom for cleaning out the garbage can. for the hands need not come into contact with the dirty water. Put the cleaned can in a tilted position so that the sun can penetrate the entire inside.

The box in which the garbage can is kept should be cleaned two or three times a week. Some housewives advise putting freshly cut grass or a layer of newspaper in the bottom of the can to prevent the garbage from sticking to the bottom.

THREE GOOD IDEAS.

How to Realize the Possibilities of the Turkish Towel.

The Turkish towel, with its affinity for the wash tub, has many practical possibilities, three of which are a laundry bag for the inside of a closet door, bath slippers and a folding traveling case.

To make the bag turn the bottom of the towel up so that it forms a pocket. Let the top border of the towel extend about five inches above the top of the pocket.

The plain bands in the border may be bricé stitched and the word "laundry" worked in French knots in a pale colored wash dress.

To fashion the bag securely to the inside of the door screw hooks can be placed to fit into eight white home rings, four to be placed on top of the bag and four on the bottom of the pocket.

Cute little bath slippers are quickly made by shaping the uppers from Turkish toweling and the regulation bedroom slipper soles. Cut the towel in the shape of an apron pocket, about eight inches on the straight side and six inches deep.

The straight edge is hemmed or braid stitched and fastened to the soles in the usual way. A perky little bow of wash ribbon or a simple rose or two in French knots on the top of the upper completes a little pair of slippers which even a bath cannot spoil.

A traveler's case to hold the usual toilet articles can be made quite attractively and durable if Turkish toweling is used in place of the usual cretonne.

The case should be made in the usual style about 9 by 10 inches, lined with rubber and arranged with pockets to hold brush, comb, wash cloth, sponge, soap, tooth paste, brush and a button-book.

The outside cover of Turkish toweling is decorated with the initials of the owner in French knots on the back, and perhaps a border of knots around the outside edge corresponding to the color of the wash ribbon to be used to tie the case when folded.

How to Keep the Refrigerator Clean. Cleanliness does come "next to godliness" as regards your refrigerator—more perhaps than in any other part of the establishment. The housekeeper's first aim regarding her refrigerator must be absolute cleanliness. A few hints concerning this article may be helpful to the inexperienced:

Look over the icebox daily. Wash it at least three times a week. If the pipe connecting the ice chamber and drip pan is adjustable it should be removed and scaled once a week, for you will be surprised to notice the green slime that forms an inside coating. Do not simply empty the drip pan once or twice daily. Clean it regularly also. There is nothing better for the purpose than old fashioned sal soda combined with plenty of boiling water.

Never be guilty of putting ice in the chest wrapped in newspapers. That is well enough to keep in a box or tub and be used at times. It is more and more to wash before placing it in the ice chamber and put aside the risk of clogging the waste pipe with particles of straw and sawdust.

There are more such reminders by study than by nature.

LUCILLE LOVE

The Girl of Mystery

beque released his hold upon her. She could see him reach and press harshly against something, a door evidently, for the light slowly lengthened and broadened. Daylight and a foreign street.

A bitter sob broke from her lips as she looked at Loubeque and realized how infinitely far away she was from the man she loved.

Days upon the desert—blistering days with merciless sunlight pouring from the mottled kettle overhead, burning savagely at the imperious sand and cast that alone had resisted the fire so many ages.

Nights of cold, unwinching stars—stars pitiless in their steady undeviating scrutiny as the glower of sun; nights where the desert breeze searched out the marrow of the bones; nights surrounded by the millions of Loubeque, by Loubeque himself; nights of sleeplessness for herself, but nights filled with the sounds of the slumbers of her captors.

Save Hugo Loubeque, Loubeque never slept. Lucille saw he had steeled himself against her vow, that never again would she be able to penetrate his pitilessness in the pursuit of his previous revenge.

Close at hand was the hour for him to strike, ready, at hand were the means. What was his object in seeking Mexico and the Constitutionalist leader she had no means of knowing? That there was a great object, one which she must defeat at any and all costs, she knew.

It was the eighth day he ran into a foraging party sent out by Villa in advance of his main army. Much as she knew of the mysterious spy, Lucille was still surprised to mark the respect and deference paid him by the dark-skinned rebels. Consequently several days later, days of tireless travel, she was not surprised on reaching the main body of the army to find herself being treated with the greatest respect, while Loubeque was in constant consultation with the rebel leader.

Day after day she felt the growing helplessness of her position. Loubeque seemed omnipotent in the opinion of these men upon whom he appeared to have stumbled.

Still she would not permit hope to die. The justice of her cause, the growing humanity of the international spy, her very youth and the power of her love forbade this.

Through the very eagerness and desperation of this feeling she slowly became aware of the attitude toward his master of Thompson. She was aware of the subtle atmosphere of hatred which the sick, scowling mask of servitude concealed so well. In lieu of anything to do on her own account she took to watching the man, following his every move, his every change of expression.

Enmity toward the master he had served so well and who had introduced him into the world of the girl he had so lovingly wooed and who had brought his punishment about. Consequently Lucille was surprised to come across a friendly scintilla only on a bit of the paper such as she had often noticed the master using in rolling cigarettes. It was pressed tightly against one of the partially cut sheets of bread when Thompson served his master and Lucille with their dinner. She detached the fragment of bread, dropping it to the floor and securing the fragment of paper as she picked it up, concealing it in the palm of her hand.

For what seemed countless hours she bravely attempted to eat the food before her, tried to endure the heat breaking period during which Loubeque smoked silently at his cigar. It was with a sigh of relief so obvious the spy was obliged to smile that she made half-hearted protest at his retirement. No sooner had his figure ceased to darken the doorway than she started eagerly to examine the message.

"At the third hour of the owl leave," merely that, but the delicate words seemed pregnant with wondrous meaning.

Hours trod upon one another's heels so fast they moved under the tension of her waiting. Vague forebodings which she could not analyze oppressed her despite the fires of hope that had been kindled within her drooping spirit. There had been something deadly about Thompson's manner, under the scrutiny of the man she knew he hated so venomously, which made her shudder and form a half-resolution to acquiesce Loubeque with his servant's treachery. She had half-risen to her feet, still fighting against the ludicrous impulse when the shrill hoot of an owl reached from out the nighty distances of the far-reaching desert waves.

And now the very seconds lagged. Every nerve, every muscle, flexed, for she knew not what. Lucille waited, her ear against the wall, her eyes pools of mirrored terror.

After what seemed an interminable age came again the sound. Unable this time to endure the long interminable age she was charged to undergo, she softly opened the door, peering out over the sleeping city that the rebel chieftain had hung up at a mere command. Immediately before her own bedside she made out the less, pretentious shadow of the international spy. A dim light from the partially opened door cut a segment from the darkness. Far more significant of slumber than complete darkness was that light.

A tiny droning sound reached her ears. By main force piercing the thick veil of night Lucille made out the shadowy outlines of a lean motorcar dimly silhouetted against a pile of lava dust. Something shapeless and dark and furtive of movement crept across the space that intervened between it and the light cleavage of Loubeque's quarters. Lucille could not resist the impulse that forced her from the door into the open.

Something tugged at her feet, fairly drawing her away from the scene. Then a strange wave of pity for the unsuspecting one against whom this furtive attack was being made urged her forward. As the dark figure slipped through the door Lucille thrust her head cautiously within. Upon the cot lay the long figure of the international spy, his face turned toward the silent, motionless figure that stood in the center of the room staring at him. The eyes were tightly closed, but the girl knew that the man merely feigned slumber.

Thompson turned toward the table upon which the lamp dimly burned. Lucille allowed her eyes to wander for a second in that direction, her heart thudding so violently at sight of the diary and papers there that she was fearful she would be heard. Along side the papers, its facets sending out a million flashes of reddest blood, lay the strand of rubies. She marked the involuntary flexing of the thief's hands as he tiptoed toward them.

Not a sound disturbed the silence, but something caused her to dart a swift glance at the sleeper. His eyes were narrowed, but open; lights of amused malice in them she had never suspected could show in mortal eyes, lights so mollignant she shuddered even as she would have opened her lips to cry a warning. The butter-thief drew closer to the prize he had worked so hard to gain. His thief's fingers were outstretched to grasp the necklace, when, with a crash, the lamp darted toward him, smashing upon the floor and leaving utter blackness in its wake.

Upon the heels of his startled alarm came a chuckling laugh from Loubeque, a laugh that matched the evil that had glowed from his eyes so scant before. Came a gurgled oath, the heavy breathing of strong men in combat.

Lucille turned as though to run. There came a swift vision before her, one that made her step swiftly within the wall of muffled darkness. Eyes met her own eyes, eyes that seemed to force their way through the dark interior and cause her to forget everything that had intervened, eyes that mirrored a message of love and faith and hope to her as she looked down from the window of the mysterious house in San Francisco into the eyes of her lover, the man whose happiness could not be insured without those papers so short a space before her.

With the thought she sprang into the room. She bounded high, clearing the bodies of the two men and landing squarely against the table. Groping, groping, her hands encountered the cold rubies. She thrust them swiftly into her bodice, her left hand reaching for the papers. Papers rustled under her fingers. An iron hand was upon her shoulder, but she wrenched herself loose and leaped back.

Along the wall she moved until her body encountered the swinging door. Even as Loubeque sprang at her she snatched the door shut. There came a cry of pain and rage, the stumble of feet backward.

Lucille fled through the night, fled toward where she had seen the motorcar from which Thompson had come to this place. It was a chance, no odds what orders the man had been given.

What commands had he been given? She stopped a second. She had been warned to wait for three hoots of the owl, and but two had been given. Impulse directing her, she lifted her hands to her mouth. First no sound came. A second time she made the attempt. Feeble it was at best, but the startled silence took it up and hurried back this offender against restfulness.

To her right came the purr of the motorcar. From behind sounded a shot. She lunged toward the first sound and entered the tonneau. A dark figure leaped from the seat and drew her beside him. Lucille clung to the man, sobbing from nervous reaction even as the car shot through the night.

The whine of a bullet sounded overhead, another and yet again another. She dared not look back. The papers warmed through the flesh against which they pressed, warmed through her body and to her very heart itself. But Hugo Loubeque knew the method of her departure, knew what she carried with her. And already she knew Hugo Loubeque was working to overtake her.

Low in the seat beside the driver crouched Lucille with the precious papers and rubies in the waiting automobile the butler had arranged for himself.

Suddenly she leaned forward, beating her little fists together, urging the Mexican chauffeur to accelerate his speed. The man smiled down at her, shaking his head to signify he did not understand the words, even as he stepped on the clutch and shot the car forward like a huge arrow newly released from the bow, and behind some-where upon the same road there was another machine with a determined man in it, a man who had never yet allowed machine or man or even the elements to thwart him.

Then came the dull clattering sound from before her. The car swerved viciously, swung in such an abrupt circle she elung to the side of her seat to avoid being hurled out. The driver righted his machine swiftly, dexterously, and she started to leave a huge sigh of relief.

But only started to, for the front wheels suddenly slipped, seemed smoothly to be gliding upon a surface of nothingness, clawing for a foothold. The chauffeur reversed heavily, fought with his wheel, but vainly.

Then the heavy car lost balance, tilted heavily and rolled down, down down.

Lucille felt no fear. It was all too deadly for that. She was only conscious, even as her tiny hands clutched the edge of her seat, of a droning sound from behind that was growing into the rhythmic hum of a motorcar.

Came a long period of delicious languor, of sinking, much as though she floated upon ether; a harsh, crunching lug fol and blackness—merciful upon slowness that closed black shutters across the mental vision of her and brought a sweet smile to the lips that had been tightened so long. Sleep—

Lucille placed together happenings vaguely after that; then dismissed them as of no account. Nothing appeared to matter. She was comfortable and partially content. She recollected for a fractional space of time being lifted and carried away by strong, friendly, flying arms. The memory passed immediately with the coming of an impression of swift travel in a motorcar, which, in turn, gave way to the more sharply etched impression of being wheeled aboard a train in an invalid's chair. Then came a vision of the lean, powerful face of Loubeque close to her own, the gentle whisper of his voice close to her ear, calling her name over and over again, while, matching the suffering in his tones, were the deeply carved lines of agony upon his face. Over and over again the man called to her, and yet she knew it was not to her he called, but to the mother whom she resembled.

She felt all her sympathy going out to this man who had proved such a bitter enemy, who had brought such catastrophe upon her and her's and who would again prove so relentless should she attempt to take advantage of his temporary weakness to appeal to the better side of him.

Undoubtedly Loubeque was again in possession of the papers. Suddenly she felt that he had conquered his emotions and moved away. She slowly opened her eyes and looked about. She was in her own private compartment on the train. She was alone.

Tremulously, fearful yet almost positive her hands would not encounter that which she sought, she touched her bosom. The feel of the necklace and papers reassured her, drove away the last mist of unreality. Where was she going she did not know nor care. With the precious papers she could do anything. Simultaneously with the thought came one of terror. Vague at first, it spread over her spirit like a cell that obliterated all light, all hope.

As though forcing herself against her will, she closed her eyes and drew forth the laudle and necklace. Yes, there could be no doubting the genuineness of the rubies. Their scintillating luster was fairly blinding. But she paid them little heed. Her fingers groped at the papers even as her eyes snapped open. Then a little cry of rage and chagrin came from her lips.

The packet upon the table had evidently been nothing but a blind. Hugo Loubeque had taken no chances with the stolen papers even while awake. She had stolen a sheet of worthless waste paper. The international spy still held the whip hand.

She clutched her pretty teeth tightly together even as she kept repeating to herself over and over again the question of why—why had he bothered to pursue her when he knew how she had been misled, why had he not allowed her to go her way and leave him safe to transmit the last act in his plan of revenge? Why—why—why had he taken to himself so dangerous an enemy?

She knew he was fond of her, fond of her in the same way her own father was, but what of that? Alone, with the ruby necklace, she had sufficient means to do as she pleased and be perfectly safe from any danger. But was she safe from any danger? Had she not been in danger before? Yes, on the train. And the reason was because Thompson knew she held the ruby necklace. Thompson was one to be feared and respected.

Softly she slipped down the vestibule aisle. She had reasoned out the answer. Thompson had escaped Loubeque and, fooled in his attempt to gain the necklace, was still in the pursuit.

Swiftly she stepped down the aisle, through car after car, until she halted abruptly and moved back again, for, dozing against a pillow in the tourist car, a long gash over his eye rendering him a bit villainous looking, was the butler-thief.

Lucille sought her compartment, her brain a whirl. It was a three-cornered fight now—Loubeque to retain the papers and to protect her in her wealth; Thompson to gain the ruby necklace and revenge himself upon his master, but she—Lucille only sought the papers. Nothing else counted as against that. And Loubeque held the papers. (To be continued next week.)

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

WAYS OF PUTTING UP PEACHES.

PEACH marmalade may be made with small fruit, but only large, handsome fruit should be chosen for canning or preserving.

Fruit Must Be Stoned.

Peach Marmalade.—Peel and stone some peaches. The smaller kinds will do for this. Weigh, pared and pitted fruit, allowing to every pound of it three-quarters of a pound of sugar. Cook the fruit by itself for three-quarters of an hour, stirring it constantly. At the end of this time turn in the sugar and cook for ten minutes, taking off the scum. You may either put it up at this stage or you may add to it the chopped kernels of a dozen or so of peach stones and the juice of a lemon for every three pounds of fruit.

There should be a good deal of extra juice, and if this is dipped out after the addition of the sugar and of any flavoring and sealed in bottles it makes it the same for baked or boiled puddings.

Natural Looking Fruit.

Canning Peaches. This recipe saves many hours' standing over a hot stove. Try to have as many jars ready as will be needed before beginning with the peaches. Peel and put in halves and drop in jars as fast as you peel them so they will retain their original color. Let the outside of the peach come next to the jar and they will look like whole peaches. Now have ready a hot-syrup made with two cups of sugar to one-half of water. Use only one cupful of water if you like them quite sweet. Have covers heated, and after pouring hot syrup over the fruit and filling them to the brim adjust covers and rubbers and screw as tight as possible. Now place in a boiler of boiling hot water, cover closely and let remain until cool enough to handle, then screw lids down tight. When the jars are cold tighten again.

Left Over Juice Makes Jelly.

Preserved Peaches.—Fill a dishpan half full of peaches, then cover them with boiling water, let them stand three or four minutes, then drain off the water and the peaches will peel very easily. When you have a cupful of sugar and two-cupfuls of water for every quart jar. When it boils put in your peaches and cook until a straw will run through them easily, then can as usual. If the peaches are very large cut them in halves after they are peeled, leaving the stone in one half. If they are small ones put them up whole. In either case leave the stones in, as it helps to give them a nice flavor.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE-STUDY-ON
ST. PETER SIFTED LIKE WHEAT.
Mark 14:27-31, 53, 54, 66-72—Nov. 15.
"Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."—1 Corinthians 10:12.

TODAY'S lesson deals with the special sifting which came to St. Peter at the time of our Lord's death, and of which he was forewarned by Jesus, saying, "Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for you, that your faith fail not." St. Peter's courage was his weak point. Notwithstanding all that Jesus had said to warn him, he realized no fear. Hence he did comparatively little watching and praying, and his very self-confidence led him to undo for a time.

His Hour Had Come.

Temptations come in an insidious form. We cannot imagine that at the time when St. Peter cut off the ear of the high priest's servant he had any sympathy with the thought of denying our Lord. But circumstances and conditions had changed. The Master was taken prisoner. Whatever power He had previously exercised whereby He walked away from His enemies, and they could not take Him because His "hour had not yet come," that power He evidently was not exercising now—His hour had come. To see His Master apparently without friends in Heaven, delivered over to His enemies and led from one tribunal to the other, had a paralyzing effect upon St. Peter. His courage oozed out.

St. John had St. Peter Younger All-gone, such an acquaintance since with some one connected with the palace that he was permitted to enter the court and bring St. Peter with him; but they had separated. St. Peter was in the courtyard. It was cold, and he approached an open brazier to warm himself. In the light of the court, surrounded by the gossiping servants of the palace, he was keenly scrutinized by one of the maids, who said, "Thou art also a disciple of the Nazarene."

Stunned by the identification and wondering to what it might lead, St. Peter promptly denied that he had any knowledge of Jesus. Then he moved away to another part of the court, where the shadows were deeper and the people fewer. But again he was recognized as a Galilean, and accused of being one of Jesus' disciples. Again he denied. The third time he was approached with the same charge that he was one of Jesus' disciples, and a Galilean, and that his speech betrayed him. Again, with cursing he denied that he knew his Master.

The Master's Words Fulfilled.

Terrible, we say. And surely St. Peter felt afterward that it was terrible; for just at that time, the early morning, came the beginning of cock crowing, and he remembered the Master's words, that Satan had desired to sift him as wheat; and that before the cock crew, he would have denied his Master three times.

The whole matter came upon him with crushing force; and, wrapping his cloak about his head, he hastened away into the darkness, weeping bitterly; for just about the time that the cock crew, Jesus was led forth not far from him; and as he looked at Jesus, the Master lifted up his eyes and looked at St. Peter. It was a glance full of sympathy, not of anger; but it went straight to the heart of St. Peter.

St. Peter's crime was nothing like that of Judas; he had merely sought to protect himself. He had not sought to injure or even to risk the injury of his Master. The thoroughness of St. Peter's repentance is abundantly testified by his subsequent loyalty even unto death. Tradition has it that he was condemned to be crucified; that, remembering how once he had denied his Master, he felt that it would be too great an honor to share exactly the same death; and that at his own request he was crucified head down ward.

St. Peter's Denial.

The Lesson to All Christians.
Our Golden Text voices to all Christians the lesson of St. Peter's experience—"Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." When we are weak in our own estimation and, full of faith, cling resolutely to the Arm of the Lord, then we are really at our best. In the light which God supplies through His Son, our Lord Jesus. Another lesson is that however different the experiences of God's people, all who fall into line for the great promotion to the First Resurrection must expect to endure severe siftings, testings, provings, of their love for the Lord, their love for the Truth, their love for the brethren, and of their loyalty to all these.

Let us never forget that these siftings are permitted, not because the Lord wishes us to be sifted out, but because the love of interest in us, but because only those who can stand the sifting will be able to fit for places in the Kingdom in places of responsibility and trust.

GOOD ROAD DAYS FIXED IN MISSOURI.Governor Major Calls Upon People of His State to Work on Highways.

Aug. 18 and 19 were designated by Governor Major of Missouri as good road days. He called upon the Missouri people, the newspapers, the county courts, road overseers, commercial and civic organizations, automobile clubs and road societies to contribute their help toward getting out an army of volunteer workmen upon the highways during these two days.

The governor announced that he would put in twenty hours of work during the two days, and he believed that there were not fewer than 300,000 other able-bodied Missourians who would do likewise.

GOVERNOR MAJOR AS A ROAD WORKER.

He suggested in his proclamation that the work done be of permanent character so far as practicable, such as grading, culvert building, ditching, dragging, graveling, etc.

Governor Major held good road days last year, and it was estimated that fully 250,000 men worked the roads of the state, doing work valued at $1,000,000.

He suggested in his proclamation the necessity of organization in the various counties and road districts, so there will be no lost motion. He would like to see every volunteer workman turn out with proper tools, team, material, etc., so no time will be lost in repairing the highways.

Most work would be done, he believed, upon the dirt roads, which, the governor said, "represent the first leg of the journey over which moves the traffic of the state." The dirt roads, he says, are the "real highways of commerce" and should receive much attention.

The proclamation states that Missouri has 63,270 miles of unimproved dirt roads, 54,264 miles of improved dirt roads and 6,507 miles of gravel, macadam or other permanently constructed roads. The total mileage is 124,041 miles.

Hard Surface Roads.

In a bulletin the department of agriculture points out that of more than 2,200,000 miles of roads in the United States only about 200,000 miles have been given a hard surface. It is true, of course, that a large part of the remaining mileage consists of roads that are entirely unimproved, and that on roads of this class the drag is practically useless. There is a much larger tollage, however, that has been partially improved, and it is on roads of this character that have been crowned or drained, but have not got a hard surface, that the use of the drag is advocated.

Red Sea Heat.

At certain seasons of the year the Red Sea is almost unbearable. The water taken from seventy to eighty feet below the surface at 6 o'clock in the morning will often register a temperature as high as 90 degrees. If, in addition, a sandstorm thickens the air, the whole air is full of a mass of innumerable particles of fine, hot sand, which blind and suffocate at the same time.

Striking at the Cause.

Mr. Littlest—Doctor, what did you tell me was your special treatment for sleeplessness? Medico—We strike at the cause or the origin of the trouble. Mr. Littlest—You don't say so? Well, you will find the baby in the other room. Only don't strike at him too hard.—New York Globe.

Squaring It.

Mr. Shoddy—Yes, that's the armor used by my ancestor who came over with the Conqueror. Young Lady—(after examining the armor carefully)—It says "Made in Germany" on the gauntlet. Mr. Shoddy—Oh, yes; my ancestor—er—started from there, don't you know.—London Telegraph.

Contemptible.

Grace—If it was a secret why in the world did you tell that girl? Gwendolyn—It won't do her any good, my dear. I'd already telephoned it to all the girls she knew.—Puck.

Human Nature.

Eddie—Pa, what's human nature? Pa—That's the fellow that always catches it when a fellow can't blame it on anybody else.—London Mail.

THE FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

Exceeds Area Affected by the Five Previous Outbreaks.

Statement by Secretary of Agriculture Regarding Quarantine of Dread Disease.

The present outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease, which is one of the most contagious and destructive diseases of cattle, swine and sheep, exceeds in area affected any of the five previous outbreaks in this country. Unless the infection can be immediately localized and quickly eradicated, it threatens untold losses among live stock.

So contagious is the disease that in past outbreaks where but one animal in a herd was infected, the entire herd in almost all cases later contracted the sickness. While the mortality is not high the effects of the disease even on animals that recover are such as to make them practically useless. They lose flesh rapidly; in the case of cows, the milk dries up or is made dangerous for human consumption; in the case of breeding animals, the animal once infected becomes valueless for breeding, as it may continue to be a constant carrier of contagion.

It is possible to cure the external symptoms, but during the process of attempting to cure one sick animal the chances are that hundreds of others may be infected. The treatment or killing of a single animal in a herd was tried in an outbreak and did not prove effective, for the reason that the remainder of the herd soon became affected and had to be killed.

As a result of the five outbreaks in this country, and other disastrous epidemics of the disease in Europe and Great Britain, veterinary authorities of the United States are agreed that the only method of combating the disease is to stop all movement of stock and material which have been subjected to any danger of infection, and to kill off without delay all herds in which the disease has gained any foothold. This enables the authorities to eradicate affected herds and to isolate and hold under observation all suspected herds.

For these reasons, the Department of Agriculture has already quarantined ten states for the foot-and-mouth disease. The Federal quarantine prevents all interstate movement of stock and materials likely to carry the infection. At the same time, the State authorities are imposing local quarantines which prevent the passage of animals from farms or localities known to be infected to other localities in the same State in which the disease has not appeared. Each infected herd, as rapidly as the disease is discovered, is killed and the dead animal buried in a covering of lime. The skins of the animals are slashed so as to permit the rapid action of the lime.

The owner of the slaughtered animals is reimbursed on basis of the appraised value of the herd, the appraiser being appointed by the State. The expense of the whole process of condemnation and disinfection is divided equally between the Federal and State Governments.

Until the entire premises have been thoroughly disinfected and all danger of spreading the disease removed, the farm is quarantined by the local authorities in the same way in which it would be for a contagious human disease. This local quarantine prevents the visit of individuals or the transfer of any produce or animals from the farm to other farms. In some cases, because human beings can carry the disease to other herds, the State authorities have prevented children on infected farms from attending school. In other cases, as in Illinois and Ohio, the State authorities have closed the stockyards until they can be cleaned and disinfected.

The first effort of the department is to discover and segregate all animals sick with the disease or that have been exposed. To this end, the federal and state inspectors are now tracing up through bills of lading and railroad records—all shipments of live cattle which have been made during the last sixty days out of any of the infected or suspected districts. The herds of animals so shipped are located and immediately examined by veterinarians. In this way the presence of foot-and-mouth disease has been discovered in various places in the present wide area now under federal quarantine, which includes Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Maryland, Wisconsin and Iowa. Similarly, the numbers of all cars in which animals have been transported from these districts have been obtained and these are being located and thoroughly cleaned and disinfected.

Following the imposition of a general federal quarantine and the killing of actually infected herds comes a farm-to-farm inspection of the entire quarantined area. Later—when it becomes clear that the disease has been localized—it will be possible for the federal and state authorities to free from quarantine all but the actually infected counties or districts and allow the uninfected territories to resume interstate shipments of stock.

The present outbreak first appeared in southern Michigan. How it was introduced there is not known. Shipments of diseased hogs from this place which passed to Chicago are believed to be responsible for the infection of the pigs in the Union Stockyards. Once the yards became infected there was danger that every shipment of live stock through Chicago to other parts of the country might pick up the germs of the disease and spread the contagion. These shipments, composed largely of feeders and stockers, were sent to farms for fattening and did not remain in Chicago long enough for the disease to show itself in external symptoms. Some of the cattle carrying the contagion after shipment develop external lesions and this accounts for the outbreak of the disease in states as far apart as Iowa and Massachusetts. For this reason a large force of federal inspectors is now running down every shipment and examining the animals or herds at their place of delivery.

At present the chief danger lies in there being concealed sources of infection. Every effort is being made by state and federal authorities not only to trace suspicious shipments but to convince farmers of the seriousness of the disease and the extreme ease with which it is communicated and to urge upon them to report at once to state or federal authorities all suspicious cases of sore mouths or lameness.

PICKLING STATION

Charlevoix is to Have Station if Acreage Can be Secured—Boost It.

The James H. Johnson Pickling Company of South Haven are securing acreage and will place a pickling station in Charlevoix. George Hale in the city now securing acreage and Mr. Johnson will be here this week. Three hundred acres is the amount the company wants to contract for. The company will furnish the seed free and are paying the highest prices of any such concern in the state.

The Johnson company has installed seven other stations in the state and intend to put in two others on the P.M. road south of Charlevoix. The seven stations already in operation are at Newaygo, White Cloud, Woodville, Scottville, Thompsonville, Baldwin and Bileys.

The site has been located for the enterprise and is near the old sugar factory on the railroad. This industry is a paying proposition and brings money to the farmer at a time in the summer when money is not coming to the agriculturist, cash being paid for each load delivered. People wishing more information can secure the same by calling at S. M. See & Sons'.

DEATH ENDS SUFFERING

Celina Lemieur Peacefully Succumbs After Six Months Illness.

Tuesday morning at 12:30 Mrs. Celina Lemieur died at her home, 320 Mason street, after an illness of over six months duration. Leakage of the heart was the affliction, causing considerable suffering, that finally claimed deceased at the age of 61 years.

Mrs. Lemieur was born in Canada January 1st, 1853. When but a young girl she came to Michigan and was married to Raphael Lemieur September 12th, 1872, at Provamont, Michigan. She moved to Charlevoix with her husband from East Jordan seventeen years ago last June.

Mr. Lemieur died in this city in August, 1901. Mrs. Lemieur is survived by one daughter, Miss Della, and five sons, Joe, Louis, Albert, Phillip and Archie. Five brothers and two sisters also survive.

A PROCLAMATION

By the Governor

In all the years since eighteen hundred seventy-six there has been no greater reason for giving thanks to Almighty God than in this year nineteen hundred fourteen. The United States is at peace with all the nations of the earth. The stars and stripes symbolize to all the world "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Sunshine, rain and toil have given us an abundance of the good things of life. Our glorious nation has gone forward unswervingly towards the goal of civic justice and civic righteousness. We, the people of Michigan, are happy in joining every other state in reverent and hearty thanksgiving.

Therefore I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby join the President of the United States in designating Thursday, the 26th day of November, as a day for all the people of this commonwealth to celebrate in thanksgiving and prayer.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the state this fourteenth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, and of the commonwealth the seventy-eighth.

Woodbridge N. Ferris,
Governor.

By the Governor:
Frederick C. Martindale,
Secretary of State.

FIRE SEASON IS HERE

Inspect Your Heating Plant, Stove Pipes, Etc.

Precaution Now Will Eliminate Dangers of Property Loss and Death by the Fire Route.

Defective furnaces, stoves, fireplaces, stove pipes, hot air pipes too near the woodwork, defective chimneys, sparks from chimneys, chimneys burning out, placing ashes in wooden receptacles, on wood floors or against wooden walls—in the last fiscal year were responsible for 1449 fires in Michigan. These fires were responsible for the snuffing out of many human lives.

Ordinary care and timely repairs would have prevented most of the fire waste and loss of human life. The danger season for this class of fires is now at hand, so do not delay having your heating plant inspected by a competent man and make the needed repairs at once. Consider carefully the following questions:

Have you a metal stove board under the heating stove?

Is all woodwork within two feet of the stove protected?

Is the stovepipe clean, sound and perfectly jointed and rigid?

Have you protected all woodwork within eighteen inches of the stovepipe?

Is there a double, ventilated thimble around the pipe where it passes through a partition?

Is the chimney clean, is it free from cracks, and is the mortar between the bricks still sound?

Does any woodwork come in contact with the chimney?

Are any flue holes papered over, covered with wood or stuffed up with rags?

Does the wall paper come up against the stovepipe?

Have you protected the ceiling over the boiler or furnace and the walls near either?

Have you protected the woodwork above and near the smokestack?

Are you overheating the stove or the furnace, or leaving drafts wide open?

Have you metal receptacles for ashes?

Do you dump ashes on wooden floors or against wooden walls, partitions and fences?

Do you deposit rags, waste paper or other rubbish with ashes?

Do you keep the boiler room free from combustible rubbish?

Safety along these lines means protection of your property and the lives of those dear to you, so inspect all these things and exercise due care.

Let Us Call Before the Fire.

Insure your property with a responsible agency. Your policy may some day stand between you and disaster. Our policies are legally correct; our companies absolutely reliable; our settlements always satisfactory.—Myrtle Young & Son. Adv. 4611

PROBABLY WORK OF FIRE BUG

Third Fire Within Thirty-six Hours Proves to be of Serious Nature.

Two Big Barns and Contents of One Totally Destroyed Sunday Morning.

About three o'clock Sunday morning the two barns owned by Henry Wood on East Hurlbut avenue were discovered on fire. By the time the alarm was reported and the firemen had arrived on the scene one barn was completely destroyed. Firebrands flew from the second barn on the rear of the lot to the first one, setting it on fire. Considerable property was in grave danger by the flying firebrands, and water was first played on the adjoining buildings.

In the second barn Mr. Wood had three winter busses and two summer busses stored. These, with many small articles, were a total loss. In the first barn an old buss and the tank for a sprinkler were stored. The buss was removed by the daring efforts of Mr. Wood and some bystanders. Ed. Burns had two horses in the first barn and he rescued them. J. M. Saunders released his cow from the burning building.

Mr. Wood estimates his loss at about $2000; which is well covered by insurance. The sprinkler tank owned by Mr. Wood was removed from the wagon trucks. While the sprinkler is badly charred, it is not certain to be a total loss.

Considerable suspicion points to the work as that of an incendiary. It seems hardly possible that a barn not in use except for storage purposes would catch fire at 3 a.m.

Last summer an attempt was made to poison a horse that Mr. Wood had in the same barn. A bloodhound was placed on the trail, but, owing to the fact that many people had been about the place, no clew could be followed.

The above fire was of a destructive character and the insurance carried greatly reduced the loss. Are you as well protected? If not, see Myrtle Young & Son. Adv. 4611

Will Lecture Here.

Chaplain Lougher, a champion of the men of the underworld, will lecture in the Methodist church November 25th on "The Shackles of the World." Senator Townsend represents him as equal to Captain Hobson as an orator. He has no superior on the American platform. He speaks with a throbbing enthusiasm and with a statesman's conception of his theme. This lecture is not primarily to make money, but to instruct and enlighten people on this all-important subject. All students in the public schools will be admitted for 15 cents; others 25 cents. Adv. 4611

INTERESTING MEETING

Mothers of Charlevoix are Requested to be at the High School Saturday.

Some things are too good to keep. The Dictionary Club of Charlevoix have been having some work that is too good to keep and should be given wider hearing.

The topics concern the school and are of vital interest to all people who are parents and especially to the mothers of the community.

On consultation with the superintendent, H. A. Craig, arrangements have been made to hold a public meeting in the high school Saturday afternoon, November 21st, at 2:30 o'clock. At that time a paper will be given entitled "Making for Citizenship." Several other topics of interest will be discussed. Come and get in touch with some of the important problems in the educational world to-day.

If this step meets with the approval of enough people an sufficient interest is taken it will be made a permanent feature. All people interested in the schools of Charlevoix are invited and a special invitation is given to the mothers of Charlevoix.

Persons wishing help can secure the services of students by applying to the superintendent, H. A. Craig.

Auction Sale.

On page two will be found the auction sale advertisement of O. W. and Gertrude Powers. The date of the sale is Wednesday, November 25, and will be at one o'clock sharp. The farm is located three miles south of Charlevoix and is known as the Frank Smith farm. W. E. Byers will cry the sale.

Accident to Fish Tug.

Last Saturday afternoon during the heavy gale on Lake Michigan the fish tug Carolina, owned by G. C. Geiken of this city, had a narrow escape from foundering. While out in the lake the boat sprang a leak. At the same time it became impossible to keep up steam and five hours time was taken for the tug to limp into port which otherwise would have been completed in two hours. Many times it was thought the boat would sink in deep water. Sunday, while other tugs were making lifts, the Carolina was being repaired.

Turkey Shoot.

On Tuesday, November 24, a turkey shoot will be held at Lawrence Vandusen's 54 miles southwest of Charlevoix. Rules—Rifles over 22 calibre six inch circle at 25 rods; 22 calibre six inch circle at 15 rods. Shot guns 12 gauge 4 inch square at 8 rods. Most shot in card winner. No. 4 to be used. VICTIM OF NORTH WOODS

Peter Knudsen of Ironton Meets With Accident While Hunting.

Falls Over Log—Charge of Gun Severs Artery in Right Leg—Bleeds to Death.

Charlevoix and vicinity were painfully shocked at the news announcing the death of one of Charlevoix county's pioneers Monday morning. Mr. Knudsen went to Rexton, Mackinac county, about two weeks ago with Henry Nowland of Charlevoix and Jimmie McCollman of East Jordan in quest of deer.

Last Thursday he brought down one deer, the only one the party had landed. Sunday morning he went out on the runway before daylight, where he intended to sit and wait for his quarry. In some manner he fell over a log and in the fall accidentally discharged the shotgun he carried. The charge of buckshot entered the upper third of the thigh of the right leg, glancing across the abdomen and left leg. It severed the main artery. His companions, hearing the shot, waited a few minutes and then went out to see what had happened. The boy went out first to see if he could find Mr. Knudsen. He walked by him and then heard a sound and, turning around, found Mr. Knudsen trying to crawl to camp on his hands and knees. The boy ran to the shack, about twenty-five rods from where the accident occurred, and got Mr. Nowland, who rushed to assist the injured man and carried him on his back to the shack. Mr. Nowland tied a cord about the severed artery, but could not tie it high enough to stop the flow of blood. A doctor was called, who gave what assistance he could. Mr. Knudsen only lived a few hours, dying at a few minutes to eleven. A team was sent for to convey him to town, only five miles distant, but death claimed its victim before the team arrived.

The remains were brought to this city by his companions, arriving Monday afternoon. The body was left at See's morgue, where it was prepared for burial. Mr. Knudsen was shot in the same leg thirty years ago by a companion in Wisconsin. He had went in quest of deer for the last thirty years. Mr. Knudsen was born in Denmark December 24, 1853. He came to this country 43 years ago and had resided in Michigan 29 years, making Charlevoix county his home at that time. Besides his widow four boys and two girls survive—Harry, at lone, Washington; Robert, at East Jordan; John, residing on the Paddock farm near this city; Christie, who has been living at the parental home this summer and fall; Mrs. Fannie Bowen of East Jordan and Mrs. John L. Anderson of Bridgeville, Delaware. He also has one brother living in Denmark.

The funeral was held from the farm home, two and one-half miles south of Ironton, Wednesday morning, with interment at Brookside cemetery. Mr. Knudsen was a congenial old gentleman with a great many friends, who, together with the family, mourn their loss. This is another toll exacted by the deer season, and this time it strikes off one of our own highly respected citizens.

DIED MONDAY NIGHT

Cyrle Beaudoin Was an Old Pioneer Resident of Charlevoix County.

Cyrle Beaudoin died at his home on Monday evening about 8 o'clock at the age of 79 years. He was born in Canada February 15th, 1835. Mr. Beaudoin came to Michigan when fourteen years of age, first going to Detroit. From Detroit he went to the upper part of the state, later going to Beaver Island at the age of 24.

Mr. and Mrs. Beaudoin were married 54 years ago and came to Charlevoix 16 years ago. Since that time they made this city their home.

The widow and four children survive, Charles of Manistique, Bert of this city, Mrs. Nellie Corlette of Cheboygan and Mrs. Julia Beaudoin of Gloucester.

Mr. Beaudoin had been ailing since last July from old age complications. The funeral will be held from the Catholic church Friday morning at 9 o'clock, with interment at Brookside cemetery.

GAVE DOCTORS ENOUGH TO BUY FARM--RESTORED IN ONE DAY

Battle Creek Man Finds New Life in First
Dose of Wonderful Remedy.

William N. Goss, 218 Aldrich street, Battle Creek, was troubled with stomach and intestinal ailments for years. Year after year he spent endless time and money with specialists and in expensive treatments that failed.

He took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy at last and wonderful results followed. When he had taken only one bottle he wrote:

"I got more relief out of one bottle of your wonderful stomach remedy than I did in all my years of treating with specialists."

"If I had all the money I have spent for doctors' bills I could buy a farm. I will certainly recommend Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy."

Mr. Goss' experience is like those of thousands of others who have taken this remarkable remedy with such astounding results. It is known everywhere because of its merit. The first dose proves.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid secretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy.

One dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleanser ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold by leading druggists everywhere. The first dose must give you absolute satisfaction or we don't want your money. It is sold with the positive understanding your money will be returned by your druggist without quibble or question.

Live Stock—The average condition in the state of horses is 97; cattle, 90; sheep, 101, and swine, 96.

Poles vs. Americans.

Saturday night, November 7, a gang of Pole lumberjacks inhibited too freely in booze and turned riotous and with the aid of revolvers, axes and clubs started to wipe out the American lumberjacks at Camp 18 owned by the Johannesburg Manufacturing Company of Otsu county. The wages of the foreigners had been reduced and they laid the blame to the foreman and were trying to "get him." Several shots were fired at the Americans in the fight that ensued, but no one was injured, the Americans using a bunkhouse as a fortress.

Deputy Sheriff Sherman and Marshal Mavety went out to the camp and hauled in four of the gang. The prisoners were arraigned last Wednesday and, in default of bail, were bound over to the February term of court for trial. The names of the prisoners and the charges lodged against them are as follows:

Joseph Lendy, violation of the local option law; Tony Kuenski, assault with intent to commit the crime of murder; Jan Vermager and Chas. Smith, assault with intent to commit murder.

The men were taken to Bellaire and placed in the county jail.

Jerry Wolihan is the foreman of Camp No. 18, where the fight occurred, and states that his firm is determined to weed out and punish the lawbreakers.

Poultry Show.

Traverse City is to have a poultry show during the coming month. The dates arranged for are December 21, 22, 23 and 24. Plans were laid last Wednesday night for offering inducements sufficient to bring in high grade birds from distant points. Archie Webb, secretary of the association, was appointed to dispose of the membership tickets. Considerable interest is being displayed and at the meeting of last Monday final arrangements were completed for the big show. R. V. Otto of Middleville will be the judge.

ENDORSED AT HOME

Such Proof as This Should Convince Any Charlevoix Citizen.

The public endorsement of a local citizen is the best proof that can be produced. None better, none stronger can be had. When a man comes forward and testifies to his fellow citizens, addresses his friends and neighbors, you may be sure he is thoroughly convinced or he would not do so. Telling one's experience when it is for the public good is an act of kindness that should be appreciated. The following statement given by a resident of Charlevoix adds one more to the many cases of Home Endorsement, which are being published about Doan's Kidney Pills. Read it.

Henry Newman, 203 Sheridan street, Charlevoix, says: "I have been troubled for years by my kidneys. I was annoyed by too frequent passages of the kidney secretions at night and I also had backache. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got a box at the Ivy Drug Store. They gave me great relief. I can now rest better and I don't have much backache."

Price 50c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy, get Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Newman had. Put your money where it will do you good. W. E. Milburn, Charlevoix, Mich.

LUCILLE LOVE THE GIRL OF MYSTERY

BY THE
"MASTER PEN"

Copyright, 1914. All moving picture rights reserved by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which is now exhibiting this production in leading theaters. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted.

SYNOPSIS

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, international spy, from General Love, whom Loubeque hates, in Manila. Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille nurses him in an attempt to recover the papers.

Lucille gets the papers, but the ship is wrecked. She is cast ashore on a Pacific island and is taken by a native chief to his hut to nurse his sick child.

The native child is restored to health, and the grateful natives idolize Lucille. Loubeque, also cast ashore, tries various plans to recover the papers, but in vain.

Loubeque, baffled, forges a message from a neighboring chief to lure Lucille away from her friends. She falls into a pitfall, losing the documents.

Loubeque's native aid steals the papers from his master, and Lucille takes them from the native after he is killed by a lion. She finds and follows an underground passage in the jungle.

Lucille falls into the hands of a tribe of ape men, whose leader drops a necklace of priceless rubies, which she takes. She and Loubeque are rescued from the island by a yacht commanded by Captain Wetherill.

The girl and Loubeque are set adrift in an open boat by Wetherill after she repulses the captain's advances, and he takes the papers.

Saved by fishermen, Lucille and Loubeque are in China. As she passes a house Loubeque's diary is thrown to her mysteriously. She tries to board a vessel bound for America. Loubeque recovers the papers from Wetherill.

Lucille stows away, is caught and dresses as a cabin boy with the aid of the captain of the steamer in order to search Loubeque's stateroom for the papers. He catches her at work.

Loubeque takes the papers from Lucille. Landing at San Francisco she is kidnapped by the spy and held a prisoner in Loubeque's house by Thompson.

She throws a message from her window to the captain of the boat, who passes the house, and a fight follows, which Loubeque wins. He is hurt, and she takes and hides the papers. Thompson tries to steal the rubies.

At Loubeque's ranch in Mexico, to which Loubeque takes Lucille, the girl is befriended by a mysterious Mexican, who helps her to escape after she strikes down Thompson.

Lucille flees across the border and meets Lieutenant Carmody, an army friend. He puts her on a train for San Francisco. On the train is Thompson, watching her.

Thompson steals the necklace from Lucille, and Loubeque takes the papers from her after she enters his house to recover them. Loubeque accuses Thompson of being a traitor to him.

Loubeque chokes Thompson into submission. He takes the girl again to Mexico, but she flees again with the aid of her mysterious friend, taking with her the papers and the rubies.

Lucille, stowed in an accident to her strange friend's automobile, is recaptured by Loubeque. In San Francisco she escapes again and pledges the rubies for aid.

CHAPTER XXI.

Lucille indulges a Feminine Instinct. LUCILLE thrilled with indescribable delight when she found herself once more in San Francisco, the place where last she had seen her sweetheart. She imagined him roving the city, using every means in his power to find her. She knew he had led the assassin upon that house, and that not even the secret exit made by the occupants could divert him from his purpose of finding her. But she had a far better chance than he with Loubeque. She only caught herself hoping that the international spy would return to his home.

Not for the cunning brain of such a one as the spy to go back to a place from which he had been driven and which he had every reason to believe would be under surveillance. Instead of doing this he promptly took a motor to the St. Francis, relying upon the very misadventure of his move to protect him.

Lucille followed him quietly, almost meekly. They had but little to say to each other. Both knew the other's thoughts too well to waste time in words; both knew the other's relentlessness of purpose. And, more than that, they knew the fight between them must be settled very shortly, that any move must be made quickly.

Lucille slipped out of the hotel the second day, undecided as to what to do and caring little to plan or plot. For always there was to be reckoned with Thompson, who had turned against his former master. Thompson was the man upon whom she confided herself with feminine intuition she must depend. Thompson would lay upon a way. And the hate of Thompson would turn itself against the fate of Loubeque and then her own great love would have its triumph.

And in this mood, for the first time since leaving Manila so abruptly in the aeroplane of Harley, her thought turned from the sweetheart, she felt was in the city in the thought of seeing him.

She stopped short, the song upon her lips frozen there as she looked down at herself. For the first time

Her Hands Sought the Precious Necklace.

In months an idea occurred to her, an idea that seemed to have formed a major portion of her life in life before that time—clothes.

Clothes! She fairly blushed as she looked upon the beautifully dressed woman upon the street. Clothes! Why, she looked a perfect ragamuffin. She had become frightfully self-conscious, as the glances of admiration bestowed upon her from pedestrians to her shudders. Unconsciously her hands sought the precious necklace.

She speeded swiftly and furtively down the street. Self reliance had become a part of her from her experience, but the thought of obtaining money was something that appalled her. She had never known anything of money in her life.

Resolutely she bit her lips and forced her way through the doors of a jewelry establishment, flinging her resolution to the point of approaching the bespectacled, important looking man behind the counter.

"I wish to sell," she murmured bashfully.

The salesman stared from her to the necklace, his eyes growing wider and wider with bewilderment as he looked before him.

"The proprietor," he whispered.

Lucille followed the direction of his pointed finger, on the verge of bursting into laughter at the change in his demeanor. With added confidence she pushed open the ground glass door, upon which was marked a caution for all outsiders to keep out.

A keen eyed little man turned upon her abruptly, his lips half open for a protest against the intrusion, when his eyes fell upon the necklace she carried loosely in her hands.

"I wished some ready money," Lucille quickly explained, blushing at her own temerity as she placed the precious necklace upon the desk.

The man drew a jeweler's glass from his drawer and stooped to examine each stone, his lips pursing in a little whistle of awe and admiration every few moments.

"Where did you get this necklace, miss? I presume you realize something of its value?"

"I—I really don't know exactly where. It was on a savage island, where I was cast away on an island just eight days out of Manila."

"A savage island—from Manila?" A bit of the incredulity had left his manner already. Once more he stooped to examine the necklace. "Yes," he muttered; "the cutting of the stones is different from any I have ever encountered—old Asiatic undoubtedly."

Again he turned to her. "How long was this, miss? What is this story of being cast away? I do not recollect any wrecks?"

"The Empress," Lucille quickly explained.

"Well, well, well," he rubbed his hands together in frank amusement. "to think that any one escaped from the wreck of the Empress!" Once more his lips pursed. "But why have you not reached friends?"

"I am Lucille Love," she said quietly. "I cannot go back."

the Presidio here, and you will not go back because of the disgrace that caused you to leave when the orders from Washington were stolen?"

"There was no disgrace," Lucille said, her tones fairly chilling. "The papers were stolen by an outsider, sir. That was why I boarded the Empress. That is why I am here. That is why I seek money; why I am still searching."

"But my dear Miss Love," he smiled, "you must realize that there is not money enough in the establishment to purchase such a wonderful necklace as the one you own. A few stones, possibly, or," he added as an afterthought, "I might purchase an option on the necklace for, say, as much of a reasonable sum as you desire at present and will then look about for a purchaser."

Lucille's face showed her relief. "I will give you $10,000 for an option to sell the necklace within six months," the man continued quickly. "Meanwhile I will keep it here and give you a receipt for it in order that I may show it to possible customers."

"Ten thousand dollars!" Lucille's eyes were wide in wonderment. It was not ten minutes later, with a mutual promise to say nothing of the transaction, that she left the shop with a certified check for the sum mentioned in her tightly clenched fist, accompanied by a clerk.

A strange shadow seemed to have fallen upon her, one which took a large part of the amusement she anticipated getting from her shopping away. She could only ascribe it to meeting with one who had known her father, who unwillingly showed her what the judgment of the world had been in regard to the missing orders, the necessity for immediately telling Hugo Loubeque.

As she left the bank with the roll of banknotes in her hand and a warning from the clerk still ringing in her ears she thought no longer of adorning herself, had forgotten her shabbiness and her fear of meeting her sweetheart. Her thoughts were still upon clothes, the most gorgeous clothes. And her thoughts were also upon Hugo Loubeque, the international spy, the man who stood between her and the fruition of all her hopes, the man—and a warm flush suffused her cheeks, which she fought, down swiftly—who was constantly proving himself but a mere man, after all, a man susceptible to woman's charms.

Her head was high, her cheeks sparkling as she entered the first fashionable shop she came to; her manner such that the crowding, bustling women made way for her as for a queen in regal attire instead of a young girl with ballrimons torn and disheveled.

And always, alongside the doors of all the establishments, she entered, waiting—patiently waiting, furtively waiting—a rather servile appearing man stood, respectful, quiet, enquiring.

Lucille's return to her apartment at the hotel was greeted with an apparent respect that spoke plainly of the arrival of the flood of packages she had ordered sent immediately that she might prepare herself for the conquest of Loubeque.

It was several hours later that she looked at herself in the long cheval glass, frank admiration and wonder thrilling within her. Nothing her cheeks with roses that no rubies necklaces could have purchased. For the first time she realized that she was wonderfully beautiful. And even as she stood there came a clear tapping upon the door. With a smile upon her lips she moved forward to answer it to open the slightest fraction at a time.

Hugo Loubeque stepped within, immaculate in his evening clothes, and bowed gravely, his eyes taking her in from head to toe, frank admiration glowing in them.

"You will dine with me?" His manner was courteous as ever, yet there was a change. Something already was lost between them, some of the strands which bound them together slackened, dropped apart never to be put together again.

Lucille merely nodded. Her heart was growing larger and larger, and she found herself frightened. She rested her hand upon his sleeve and allowed him to escort her to the dining room.

In the dining room she gave herself over to a mood effervescent as the champagne that bubbled in the glass before her. Loubeque had not proven adamant against the frank admiration which went the length of the room at the appearance of Lucille.

She was playing a part she had never dreamed of playing until she caught sight of her beautiful reflection mirrored back at her from the long glass in her apartment. And a great shame was upon her; even as her growing self disgust divided itself between said one of our savings depositors. It is truly amazing the way the small coins count up in our little home savings bank. The members of my family vie with one another in putting away spare coins, and when I come to the bank on the first of each month to make my deposit I am pleasantly surprised at what we have saved.

"THERE'S A FASCINATION ABOUT SAVING"

You can enjoy a similar pleasure by becoming a savings depositor here and you will have also the additional satisfaction of seeing 4 per cent interest added to your credit.

CARL Hans Lody, alias Charles A. Inglis, found guilty of espionage, was executed in the Tower of London November 2nd as a spy. This was the first execution in the Tower of London since 1700. The scene of the execution was the tower barracks, where other famous historic executions were enacted. Thus another page of crime and torture is added to the list.

THEATRICAL

When a theatrical attraction can remain at the Detroit Opera House for fourteen weeks and continue to draw houses of capacity at each performance it is something out of the ordinary. One week is the usual length of time allotted to any attraction in that house. Such is the record achieved by Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter" and the attendance and praise won by that attraction set a record that will scarcely ever be duplicated. Every newspaper in Detroit pronounced "Neptune's Daughter" the film masterpiece of the world. The producers seem to have reached the limit in beauty, in perfection and in execution. There is only one Annette Kellerman and no other person in the world can accomplish the feats this diving Venus does so well and gracefully. In a few words, "Neptune's Daughter" amuses, thrills and delights.

Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter" is coming to the Majestic Monday, November 23rd.

Another Bad Fire.

Tuesday evening the home of George Cheney on Lincoln street was destroyed by fire. The fire was discovered about nine o'clock. The origin is not known. Mrs. Cook, who occupied the house, had left there about seven o'clock. Her clothes and those of her children were all destroyed. The furniture, owned by George Cheney, was partially destroyed. The house was totally destroyed. Insurance was carried on both house and contents by Mr. Cheney.

Insurance comes in at the proper time when fire destroys your property. See Myrtle Young & Son about insurance now. Adv. 461 Fiftieth Anniversary.

Last Wednesday Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Struthers celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at the farm home of their son Andrew in Hayes township. An enjoyable dinner was served to about forty relatives and guests and a general good time was indulged in by those present. The old couple enjoyed themselves and partook of the day's pleasures as though in their youth. Both are well known and their hosts of friends wish them many happy returns of the day marking another milestone turned to the credit of their matrimonial venture.

CHICHESTER'S PILLS

DAIRY WISDOM.

For the production of sanitary milk the dairyman must have healthy cows, a sanitary barn, clean bedding, dust free air, a clean barnyard and clean cows.

Dairymen bring their best returns when it is made a systematic line of work, not merely an incidental to the other farm activities.

Why wait till the separator squeaks before oiling it? See that it never comes to the squeaking point.

Sunshine will do much for the churn after you have washed it, but don't expect it to do your part.

A swill pail left in the room with sweet milk will do more to spoil a whole mess of butter than you can undo in any possible way.

There are still some pretty poor hells in this country. Wherever you find one of these animals you will find a man with whom dairymen is a dismal failure.

SILO A NECESSITY IN MODERN FARMING

The silo may well stand as one of the great factors in increasing the efficiency of the farm through a better utilization of the products of the soil, says the Kansas Farmer. All through the corn belt is produced each year feed enough, if conserved by means of this great efficiency method of preservation, to feed all the live stock in the land. As at present handled from 75 to 80 per cent of the roughage part of the corn crop is absolutely wasted.

It has been abundantly demonstrated in modern practice that no man need say he cannot afford a silo. On farms heavily stocked with live stock, where everything raised finds mouths waiting and demanding even more, the farmer cannot afford to be without a silo. Under present day conditions the silo will reduce the cost of producing a pound of butter by at least 10 cents. It will

When first introduced the silo was regarded by many as a fad, as a plaything of the rich man, and was not taken seriously consideration as a permanent farm practice. That time has passed, and the silo can no longer be considered a passing fad, but as a permanent farm equipment. It is not necessary to present the extravagant claims which in times past were made for the use of the silo and silage. The fact statement of facts will be an explanation whatever is sufficient to convince every farmer that the silo is indispensable.

likewise reduce the cost per 100 pounds of producing beef by $2.50. Truly, the farmer cannot afford to be without a silo who is attempting to convert the rough feed of his farm into a marketable form in the most economical manner. For such the silo is an economic necessity. As has sometimes been stated, the farmer who attempts to get along without a silo under these conditions will find when he casts up his accounts at the end of the year that he has paid indirectly the cost of a silo through the loss sustained in failing to most efficiently utilize his crop. As a means of working out a permanent system of agriculture through the regions of scant rainfall the silo is well nigh indispensable. Its utility here cannot be questioned. In especially favorable years, when the crop is in excess of the immediate demands, the silo forms the only means of equalizing these fat years in feed production with the years of poor crops which may possibly follow. Practically all that is required to place the farming on a safe basis is the accumulation of a sufficient capital through some means to secure the necessary equipment in silos.

Red and White Holsteins.

Red and white Holsteins are often found in Holland. In this country they are not eligible to registration. It is not at all surprising that now and then a black and white pure bred Holstein bull should throw red and white calves, for undoubtedly the remote ancestors of a great many Holstein cattle were red and white.

Lime-water For Calves.

Lime-water is recommended for bowels trouble and scours in calves. To make lime-water take a few ounces of quick lime the size of an unpeeled walnut and steep it in a pint of water. Let the mixture stand over night and then use the clear liquid.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

BIG FIRE AT BAY SHORE

Bay Side Inn Was Totally Destroyed
Last Friday Evening.

Was Originally Intended for an Orphan's Home—Owned by Gertrude Ross.

Bay Shore was the victim of another big fire last Friday evening, when flames destroyed the Bay Side Inn, the last of a number of big buildings Bay Shore used to boast about. The fire was discovered about seven o'clock and could be plainly seen from this city. The origin of the conflagration is unknown. When discovered the fire was in the third story and with the inadequate fire protection there was no possible chance of saving the building. A large barn near the hotel was saved by the strenuous efforts of the large crowd of men that soon arrived.

The furniture on the lower floor of the hotel was saved, while that in the other rooms was totally destroyed. It has been reported that an apple buyer at that place lost $200 in the flames. At the time of the fire there were several boarders at the place. The building and contents are reported to be insured.

The structure was originally intended for an orphan's home, the funds for the construction being gathered by Rev. W. S. Sly, a pioneer resident of Bay Shore. The building stood uncompleted for many years, but was finally finished and turned into a hotel. Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hudson were the first to conduct it. The place changed hands repeatedly and finally Mrs. Gertrude Ross and her mother, Mrs. F. E. Fisk, purchased it and for three years have successfully conducted what had not been considered a paying investment.

Bay Side Inn had become famous as a place to go for fish and game dinners, hay ride outings and banquets. Resorters always made this hotel a stopping place when traveling about the country.

Insurance protects you against inscribable losses by fire. You should see us for that protection.—Myrtle Young & Son. Adv. 461

A city man recently visited his country cousins. The man from the city, wishing to explain the joys of metropolitan life, said: "We have certainly been having fun the last few days. Thursday we autoed to the country club and golfed until dark; then trolled back to town and danced until morning." The country cousin was not to be stumped in the least, so he began telling of some of the pleasures of the simple life: "We have had pretty good times here, too. One day we bugged out to Uncle Ned's and went out to the back lot, where we baseballed all the afternoon. In the evening we sneaked up into the attic and poked until morning." A sturdy old farmer who was listening, not to be outdone, took up the conversation at this time himself. "I muled to the cornfield and geehawed until sundown. Then I suppered until dark and piped until nine o'clock; after which I bedsteaded until the clock fived; after which I breakfasted until it was time to go muling again."—Exchange.

SOCIETY VS. SCHOOL

Parents Should See That Society Does Not Interfere With School Work.

The High School stands, first of all, for wholesome work. This is the critical time of year for students in our high schools. These days are deciding whether or not the school year is going to be a success. Almost every student who is regular and faithful in his work will succeed. Very seldom do boys and girls fail because their school work is too hard; very seldom is the work injurious to their health. There is, however, a practice which causes failure and undermines the health of pupils, girls especially. Quite generally there is too much of "society" outside of school. Children are permitted to dissipate when they should be at home and asleep. Teachers often hesitate to discourage this practice for they do not wish to interfere in matters which belong to the home. Parents on the other hand are often under the mistaken impression that these "society" affairs are looked upon with favor by the teachers. The parents submit, therefore, against their own better judgment. Of course boys and girls should have opportunity for social intercourse, properly directed. Teachers as well as parents know that. The care in this matter is, however, mainly the parents' responsibility. State Superintendent Fred L. Keeler would impress parents most earnestly that they keep their children at home evenings—especially if they are to do a day's work at school the next day. First of all, the High School stands for wholesome work.

Can You Beat It?

Coulter Bros. report that they have harvested 1000 bushels of corn on eight acres at their farm near the old sugar-beet factory. This is the third record-breaking crop that has been brought to our notice. We would like to hear of others. Publicity is what this county needs. Who can make another good claim for Charlevoix?

The protest made to the state tax commission was made wholly on the Boyne City roll. The townships were satisfactory. George Durrance, Supervisor Charlevoix township, Member of Equalization Board.

Barber a Man of Strength. "I suppose that most people," said a barber, "would consider plying the shears and razor as comparatively easy work; they would not expect to find barbers men of muscle."

"The fact is that standing all day and even in the easier parts of his work using his arms all day in various positions the barber keeps his muscles in constant exercise, while in such operations as shampooing and massage he is called upon for the exertion of downright strength."

"He may not have the muscle of a man always in strict training, but I think you would find that, as a rule, the barber is no weakling."—New York Sun.

came. They darted to her side, fairly tearing her gown from her in their haste. She did not know what odd whiff had induced her in pursuit of the little coquettish bluff of a dancing gown that fitted the part she intended playing so perfectly.

A bit breathless she returned to the enlivened. The girl gave her a shove forward and she found herself standing in the big room, beads, as from a long way off, the strange orchestra brilliantly playing "La Paloma."

"O'waa! Boat It!" It was the voice of the cabaret dancer.

Lucille knew then that she must go through with what she had started. Taking a long breath, her body swung to the strains. Slowly, gracefully she glided into the room, her face partially concealed by the mantilla. A gasp of surprise followed her appearance, men and women turned forward, forgetful of their dinner, turned by her infectious grace and charm. But she had eyes for him one man, the later-arrived spy, who, a surprised, puzzled expression on his face, leaned far forward in his chair, watching this woman who danced so wonderfully.

Then suddenly the music changed. Lucille flashed a glance at Loubeque and then, as if by magic, she was alone. It was perfectly obvious to every one in the room. The spy snuck back in his chair, a bit embarrassed but quite aglow with delight. The music was growing slower, slower, and, with a tinkling laugh of triumph, Lucille swung wide her mantilla and bowed mockingly to the assembly.

For just a second his speechless mouth gaped, then, with eyes that shot strange fires at her, his palms cracked vigorously together as he led off the whirlwind of applause that set the glasses and cutlery clanging. The orchestra leader waved his hand toward Lucille for an encore, and from her chair, opposite Loubeque, into which she had snuck, she half rose to respond with a bow.

"My God!"

"My God!" said Lieutenant Gibson.

The voice was hoarse, terrifying in its bitterness, its scorn. Lucille turned, startled; then, involuntarily, her hands reached out toward the man who was standing, tense, a horrified expression of disgust and abhorrence upon his countenance.

"Dick!" she quavered.

Lieutenant Gibson moved away as her slender figure swayed toward him. Her hands were upon his wrists. He looked at them a second then slowly detached them and turned away, leaving the great room, leaving behind the woman who had dared everything for him.

And Lucille, the radiant face of a moment before, came into a mask, a fright, icy look, was held him as, without turning he left her alone to fight the battle for him. Loubeque reached her shoulder sympathetically.

"Poor child, Lucille," he murmured. "It was Gibson. After all you might have believed of him, to have him turn that way instantly!"

"Dick is a man," she said sadly. "Ann is full of sympathy. But when a woman loves she does not ask for references."

CHAPTER XXII.

On Board the Terror.

LUCILLE awoke in a numbed sense of failure, defeat, of loss irreparable. For a few moments she allowed her head to rest against the pillows, perfectly passive, retracing the course of her efforts in the fight with Loubeque for recovery of the papers up to this disastrous conclusion.

She dressed leisurely and for some time was seated at her window scattering crumbs on the ledge for stray birds. As she crossed the room a moment later a metallic sound struck against her ears again and again before she was even conscious of it. She looked about the room, then made out the sound coming from the window ledge. Curiously she regarded the piggish strutting about there, eagerly devouring the crumbs. Upon his leg she saw a flag brass cylinder, tap, tap, tapping with his every step.

Her heart gave her a warning, thumping violently even as she recognized the pretty creature for a carrier bird. Stepping quickly to the window of her bedroom, she stared about her, a smile crossing her face as she carefully counted the crumbs on the crumpled upon the eighth window ledge from hers. That would be Hugo Loubeque's apartment.

Swiftly, softly, tremulously, for fear the bird might have fled, Lucille reached the ledge, her voice low and cressling as she reached and clasped him firmly. In a second she had detached the cylinder, taking the day issue paper note from it.

Arrangements complete. Deliver papers to Ensign Howell, U. S. ship Terror, with address as to late by General Sumpter Love, now under trial Washington, D. C. At your residence, 530.

Lucille gasped as she took in the meaning of the message. For just a moment she sat staring dully ahead of her, dismay and terror frozen in her eyes. At 5:30 the international spy's work would be completed and her father released.

She clinched her fists tightly together, peering up and down the floor of her suit, her pretty teeth fastened upon her under lip, her very being aflame with protest at the horrible injustice of it all. It must not be. It could not be. She stopped suddenly. It should not be. Calmly she crossed to the writing desk and added a line through the hour appointed, carefully making an eight of the five. She scanned the result of her labors with knitted brows.

She loosed the pigeon, pointing him toward a window which was open. She knew Loubeque was growing impatient from that sign. Furtively she watched the eager hands clutch the bird and draw him from view. The window snapped shut once more.

His residence she knew must mean the house of mystery, the weird place of horrors, of sliding staircases and folding manes. That Loubeque should choose such a rendezvous showed how plainly he considered the first trick in the game of his life played, how absolutely assured he now was of absolute and final success. At 5:30 Ensign Howell would be at that house. She had three hours wherein to work.

She rose and moved toward the door, dosing it softly behind her. For a moment she hesitated in the hall, then stepped boldly to the suit of the spy, opening upon the door.

Hugo Loubeque, master of men and billions, whose power was so great the course of empires halted at his spoken word of command, moodily stared out his window after the carrier pigeon he had just released. For forty years he had bent every energy of his life for this day. And now that it had come, somehow the sweet had turned bitter upon his palate.

Strangely enough, a tender smile played about the corners of his hard mouth as he thought of the girl upon the same floor with him, the girl who was the image of the Lucille of forty years ago.

Lucille! He murmured the name over tenderly, even as his fingers plucked the precious picture of the girl's mother from his breast pocket. He had treasured that picture above all other possessions these forty years, yet now he found himself regarding it merely as the likeness of the daughter. Lucille, the daughter of that other Lucille of the long ago.

He rose impatiently, ashamed of the mellow mood that was upon him, and moved across the floor. The slight swaying of the curtains that connected with the bedroom caught his eye. He did not pause, did not even hesitate, but a hard look crept into his eyes. A tapping on the door made him turn hopelessly, then answer it, smiling to find Lucille, dressed for the street, confronting him.

"Shure the mountain won't come to Mohamut. Mohamut must go to the mountain," she quoted with a light laugh, a laugh that belied the word expressed about her lips.

"The mountain certainly knew of no desire," snatched the spy, frank pleasure on his countenance. "Is it a walk you planned, my?"

"An invitation to luncheon," she returned. "And I wonder if it would be too much to ask of you to see that they give me a good machine for the afternoon?"

"I'll phone," he responded, hurrying instantly at the shadow of displeasure that crossed her face. Evidently she wished to be rid of him. He smiled to think of how close the game was to being dashed. Somehow, he could not get any more pleasure out of it now he looked at this smiling girl and realized that previous fear would be the smiles upon that face after he had finished. But, pshaw! Why would his mind persist in thinking of such things? He bowed and repeated the hour of their engagement as she tripped down the hall, then resumed his seat at the table.

From a drawer there he took a small, thin mirror which he slipped swiftly into the flap of his glove, then placed the glove upon his hand. A grim expression was on his face as he leaned back in his chair once more, his eyes fastened upon the entrance to the bedroom as revealed to him in the mirror, an automatic pistol gripped in his free hand.

Hour dragged upon the beat of hour. Slowly the gray bend of the man swayed from side to side. He caught himself abruptly. Again his head snuck toward his chest, this time to remain there. Apparently Loubeque kept as he did everything else, soundly, yet with the most possible amount of effort.

The pictures swayed more and more rapidly. Grew the outline of a human face against the smooth velvet background. He caught himself abruptly. Again his head snuck toward his chest, this time to remain there. Apparently Loubeque kept as he did everything else, soundly, yet with the most possible amount of effort.

"Open the teeth, my old friend," open them or I'll knock them out! Put the gun inside your mouth. It's simple—only a second—then a longer trip than you've ever taken before. Don't fight—it's useless—you should know that. Surely you won't resist and make it hard for your master. I think—if you don't—I might be called a murderer—while—if you follow instructions—it's just suicide."

With every syllable he rendered the words of the struggling man nerveless, forced the steel muzzle of the gun more and more harshly against the tender gums. As he pronounced his final judgment, the judgment he hoped would prove that of a corner, the muffled shot bent against the walls of the room. Thompson writhed, then straightened. Loubeque held tightly to the wrists until rigor mortis gripped them about the weapon.

As Lucille stood in the doorway of Loubeque's room, her eyes always keenly suspicious to the slightest trifle when about the man, observing that as he talked with her his eyes were fastened upon the gloved hand, it should have struck her as strange he should wear a glove in his room. Then she caught the reflection of his eyes and saw the mirror flashing in that palmy—the eyes of the man watching the curtains leading to his bedroom. They swayed slightly. Then she made her motion, for she knew Loubeque was not alone.

In her own mind she paced the door nervously. What did it mean? Some one had entered Loubeque's room, was spying upon him, and the surreptitious presence had been discovered. The risk was under surveillance. But who could that visitor be? What was his motive?

Thompson Gibson, Gibson-Thompson. Her sweetheart and the butler. Both both might have motives for such an entry. That it related to the stolen papers she had no doubt. Suppose they were taken by some other just in this moment? But the man behind the curtains had little if any chance against Loubeque.

It was not curiously merely that made her place her head outside the window. She heard the snickling voice of Loubeque, but dimly. Still it was his voice and surcharged with menace. But how could she gain an entrance, how see what was transpiring?

She quietly stepped to the fire escape. Two high and wide ledges separated her from the fire escape outside the spy's wall. She dared not look down, dared not think, dared do nothing save leave a sign of relief when she found herself safe once more outside the spy's window. It had been easy after all. She peeked within the room, straggling a little expression of rage and shame as Thompson's threat came to her ears. Broadly she watched the man struggling upon the floor, unable to understand the hurried retreat of both from the room. She opened the window and slipped inside, her bosom heaving tumultuously at this opportunity to search the man's suit.

The door snapped open just as she was exploring the drawer of the table. She felt herself seized by the wrists, uttered a cry of protest and dismay and plending, only to look into strange, untraced faces, the faces of home detectives and not the sanely friendly one of Loubeque.

"Nipped in the act!" grated one of them, as he dragged her toward the door. "The culprits come out!"

Protesting, weeping, hysterical, Lucille was dragged to the elevator and hurried into a cab. Unable to think, to reason, she only realized the full extent of her calamity when the green globe before her grim police station bounded before her eyes. She might have been unconscious, so little was she actually aware of what was transpiring. Active, yet nerveless

"Turn me over, will you? Well, listen to what's coming to you when you do it. I know a thing or two."

"You know too much," snatched the spy coolly. "That is exactly the reason I am disposing of—"

"And I know about her." The thief's hand waved toward the car. "Maybe I can't tell a thing or two about you and her. What's she doing here—what's the reason she got on the Empress and stuck to you ever since?"

The revolver slapped against the opposite wall as Loubeque buried it in the man's head, following it with his flying body, his frame crashing the man to the floor, his fingers groping for the vile mouth that spluttered on.

"I ain't saying as what you and I know—the saying as what I can tell and what I'll look like. What?"

Loubeque turned his head suddenly, his eyes fastened upon the entrance of his bedroom. The rattle of the elevator outside reached his ears. He sprang to his feet, dragging the body after him.

"We must get out," he breathed hoarsely. "We must away before they come. I'll—I'll kill you for this!"

Swiftly the pair darted through the door and down the hall. Loubeque hurriedly twisted the knob to Lucille's door. It swung open. With a gasping sob of relief he dragged Thompson after him and slipped the door shut muttering his hold narrative.

"And that is what you would say—would tell?" His voice was not harsh, not even indignant, merely curious.

"That's what?" Thompson straightened, a touch of braggadocio about his very figure.

Slowly, inexorably, the fingers of Hugo Loubeque reached out and grasped the man's wrists. Slowly, inexorably, he pressed the cold metal of the automatic iron into the useless palm. Slowly, inexorably, that weapon bearing hand was lifted, lifted until it pressed against the blue lips of the thief then stopped. Loubeque's voice was soft, parting, soothing.

"Open the teeth, my old friend," open them or I'll knock them out! Put the gun inside your mouth. It's simple—only a second—then a longer trip than you've ever taken before. Don't fight—it's useless—you should know that. Surely you won't resist and make it hard for your master. It was not curiously merely that made her place her head outside the window. She heard the snickling voice of Loubeque, but dimly. Still it was his voice and surcharged with menace. But how could she gain an entrance, how see what was transpiring?

She quietly stepped to the fire escape. Two high and wide ledges separated her from the fire escape outside the spy's wall. She dared not look down, dared not think, dared do nothing save leave a sign of relief when she found herself safe once more outside the spy's window. It had been easy after all. She peeked within the room, straggling a little expression of rage and shame as Thompson's threat came to her ears. Broadly she watched the man struggling upon the floor, unable to understand the hurried retreat of both from the room. She opened the window and slipped inside, her bosom heaving tumultuously at this opportunity to search the man's suit.

She Opened the Window and Slipped Inside.

subconsciously so, she knew she defied herself stoutly against the charge of being a hotel sneak thief. She feverishly elied the obvious ridiculousness of Hugo Loubeque's looking such a charge against her. The sergeant was frankly puzzled.

Obviously this girl was not a thief. The brilliant idea struck him of summing the jeweler from whom she claimed to have received the money. Also the failure to produce Loubeque argued heavily against the house detective's case.

And all the while Lucille peered up and down the floor, white faced, snatching her lips moving as she muttered:

"Fifty-thirty this afternoon. Ensign Howell cuts for the papers. Fifty-thirty—fifty I must be there must be—must—must—"

And the station house clock grinned wide derision at her, its hands pointing ironically toward the hour of 4.

Suppose they were taken by some other just in this moment? But the man behind the curtains had little if any chance against Loubeque.

Broadly she watched the man struggling upon the floor, unable to understand the hurried retreat of both from the room. She opened the window and slipped inside, her bosom heaving tumultuously at this opportunity to search the man's suit.

The door snapped open just as she was exploring the drawer of the table. She felt herself seized by the wrists, uttered a cry of protest and dismay and plending, only to look into strange, untraced faces, the faces of home detectives and not the sanely friendly one of Loubeque.

"Nipped in the act!" grated one of them, as he dragged her toward the door. "The culprits come out!"

Protesting, weeping, hysterical, Lucille was dragged to the elevator and hurried into a cab. Unable to think, to reason, she only realized the full extent of her calamity when the green globe before her grim police station bounded before her eyes. She might have been unconscious, so little was she actually aware of what was transpiring. Active, yet nerveless

OLDER BOYS' CONFERENCE

Governor Ferris, Charles E. Townsend and Wm. L. Bryan will be Speakers.

Announcement has been made by J. A. VanDus, boys' work secretary of the Michigan Y. M. C. A., that Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris and Senator Charles E. Townsend will deliver addresses at the older boys' conference at Ann Arbor November 27th. Both men will be the principal speakers at the Friday evening session, the first big meeting of the three day session. The speaking program will take place at Hill Auditorium on the campus of the University of Michigan.

With the addition of Governor Ferris and Senator Townsend the program for the conference of Michigan boys this year contains a larger list of notables than ever before. Secretary of State W. J. Bryan has consented to speak on Saturday night of the conference. In addition there will be Fred B. Smith, one of the famous leaders of the Men and Religion Forward Movement in Michigan and other states, who will hold the boards at the Sunday afternoon meeting.

Registrations now being booked by local committees at Ann Arbor indicate an unusually large attendance. Four thousand boys of Michigan signed the petition to Mr. Bryan to speak to them and it is known that approximately half of these are making an effort to attend the conference sessions.

House Burned.

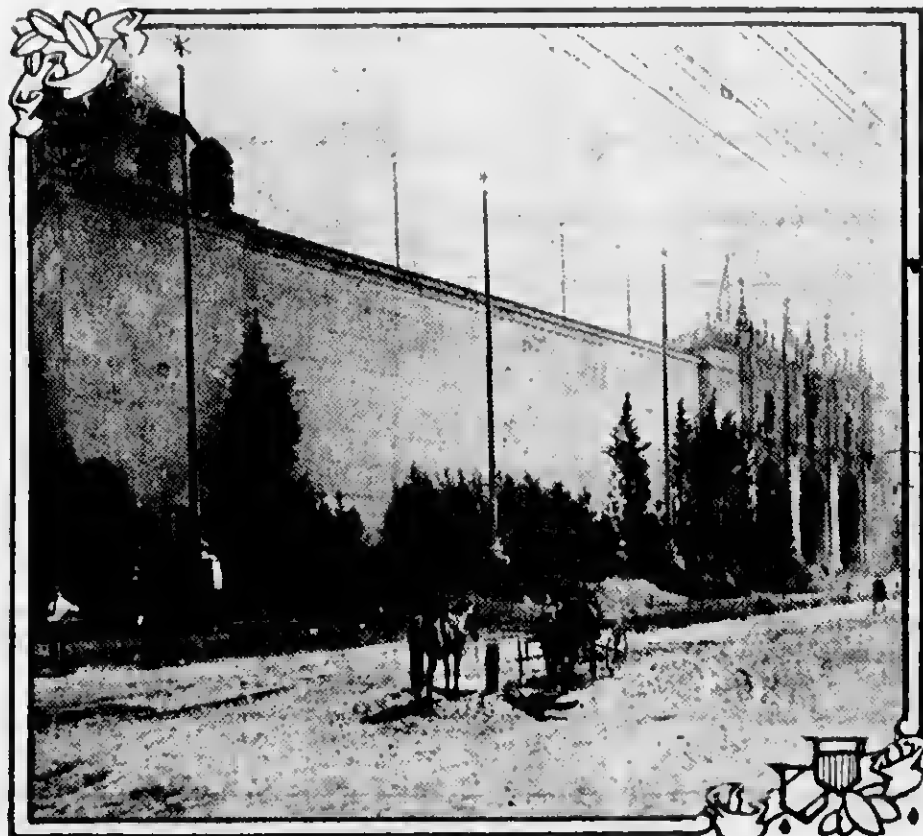

Last Friday night an alarm of fire was given for the home of Mrs. C. E. Anderson, corner of Alice street and Garfield avenue. The cause of the fire is unknown, as the house was not occupied at the time. Mrs. Anderson has been out of the city for about two weeks. All the furniture and the house were either destroyed by fire or damaged by smoke and water. It could not be ascertained whether the loss was covered by insurance or not.

Lofty Colonnades of the Superb Court of the Four Seasons, Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915

THIS photograph faintly portrays the beauty of the arches that stand between the Court of the Four Seasons and the Western-Venetian Court. While it truly presents the attractiveness of the architecture, it cannot even hint at the beauty of color tones.

The pilasters shown in this photograph are of verd antique bronze, the background of brilliant Travertine is of color hue more than half the height of the arch, and the upper portion is of Pompeian red, with touches of orange and copper green in the ornamentation.

Inside the arches the ceilings are of cerulean blue, and bas-relief in white shows scenes typical of the seasons. The square wall surface at the left of the picture shows where one of many round paintings will be placed.

Looking through the arch, a part of the Court of the Four Seasons may be seen. A closer inspection shows a vase from Spenser and below it the signs of the Zodiac.

The view is to be given again here in the section of courts at the Exposition, and will be a most interesting feature of the construction. The Exposition will open on San Francisco, Jan. 31, 1915.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON

JESUS TRIED BY PILATE.

Matthew 27:11-26—Nov. 22.

"Pilate saith unto them, What then shall I do unto Jesus, who is called Christ?"

Verses 11-26.

As early as possible in the morning, the chief priests hurried Jesus to the Praetorium, the judgment-hall of Pilate, the Roman Governor of Judea. Pilate inquired as to what charge they had against Jesus. They evasively answered that He was worthy of punishment, else they would not accuse Him. Pilate reminded them that under the Roman usage they had great liberty in dealing with all disputes of a religious kind, and that therefore they should settle the case themselves.

The priests responded that they had no power to inflict the death penalty thus revealing that they had deliberately plotted to have Pilate put an innocent person to death.

Then they accused Jesus of perverting the nation—telling the people not to pay taxes to Caesar and claiming to be the Jewish King—Messiah.

These were serious charges, which Pilate was bound to consider, and were totally different from those brought against Jesus at the Sanhedrin trial. Jesus made no defense; for He knew that the time had come for Him to die. He would not attempt to turn aside that which He knew to be a part of the Divine Program for Him.

Jesus Before Pilate and Herod.

Another account tells that Pilate perceived that the chief priests and the scribes were moved with envy in making their charges. That he must not appear to treat lightly the charges respecting another king than Caesar. He therefore questioned Jesus; but receiving no reply, he went out to the scribes and Pharisees, who had refrained from entering the Praetorium because the Passover season had begun. After hearing them, apparently he returned and asked Jesus, "Art Thou the King of the Jews?" Jesus inquired whether the question was based upon Pilate's knowledge of His teachings or which upon the assertion of His enemies. Pilate replied that the chief men of Jesus' own nation had delivered Him and that He wished to know the cause of their opposition.

Jesus answered that His Kingdom was not of this world. Order of things He was not, therefore, in conflict with Caesar. Pilate questioned Him a little further, and then went forth to the Jews, to whom he said, "I find no crime in Him."

The chief priests, who were alarmed, then Jesus was stirring up the people, and that, beginning away off in Galilee, He had preached everywhere.

When Pilate heard this, he sent Jesus to Herod king of Galilee, who was at his palace in Jerusalem. Herod had heard many things respecting Jesus, and was curious to see Him do some miracle. Jesus made no reply to the king's questions. The chief priests and the scribes accused Jesus violently to Herod, who sent Him back to Pilate, after having, with his soldiers, mocked our Lord and put upon Him a gorgeous robe. This act of deference on Pilate's part, and Herod's return of the courtesies, bridged over an enmity between the two.

Neither Pilate Nor Herod Condemned.

On several occasions Pilate had released prisoners in honor of the Pass over. The multitude cheered him and inquired whether he would release some prisoner that year. Thinking to get Jesus out of the hands of the chief priests, Pilate asked the people, "Whom will ye that I release unto you?"

The rabbi, the highwayman, or Jesus, who is called Christ? Incited by their religious leaders, the multitude demanded the release of Barabbas.

Pilate remonstrated, declaring that he found no cause of death in Jesus, whom he would chastise and then release. Jesus was therefore delivered over to the Roman soldiers, who were only too willing to mock and to scourge Him.

Shortly after ward, Pilate brought Him forth to the waiting multitude. Wearing the purple robe and a crown of thorns, Jesus stood before them.

Pilate then said, "Behold the Man!" See Him whom you are trying to have me put to death. He is one of the noblest specimens of humanity. Behold the beautiful dignity of His character. Whatever you have against Him, you will feel placated when you see His humility.

But they cried, "Cruelly Him!" Pilate again remonstrated. Then they came to the roof of the maller—that Jesus had declared Himself to be the Son of God, an assertion which they considered blasphemous. This made Pilate all the more afraid. He thought again to release Jesus. But the Jews persisted.

Finally Pilate yielded, saying in desperation, "I am innocent of this righteous man!" They cried, "His blood be upon us and our children!" And for more than eighteen centuries it has been so.

The fire department responded to a call of fire at the home of Wright Ripley about nine o'clock Saturday morning. Gas had formed in the furnace and exploded, sending volumes of smoke through the house. No damage was done and the firemen used neither of the fire apparatus. This was the second alarm of fire within twelve hours.

Case was bound over to the next term of court. Mrs. Hahn is reported as recovering from the wound she received.

Thursday night Charlevoix was visited by a deluge of wet and heavy snow. With the strong northwest wind that blew, Friday morning found the streets badly drifted. The city snow plough was not brought into play, but many shovels were busy clearing away paths for pedestrians and school children. Of course, the beautiful looked good to the kids, who were busy snowballing and building forts.

Members of the high school faculty at Petoskey and the forty pupils who were suspended after the boys and girls exchanged apparel and wore it to school have reached an agreement after considerable hostilities. The students were to be barred from taking part in school plays and the commencement exercises and were obliged to make up lost time. The penalties have been removed and all is running smoothly.

Charlevoix citizens had the pleasure of seeing two expert sign painters at work Friday and Saturday. The men are employees of the Thos. Cusack Co. of Chicago and with four others are the representatives in this state. The men painted the sign on the Wood bus barn on Bridge street and on O'Leary's barn. Ordinarily the men would have put the sign on Wood's barn in three hours, but the weather conditions made the spreading of the paint more difficult. It was quite a revelation to the public to see how quickly and accurately the work was done.

Every man is a part of his town. The town embraces the fortunes, and in some measure at least takes the character of the man. So loyalty to one's town is no more than loyalty to one's self; and this loyalty is in the line of all well shaped human nature. Therefore it is right to say that the man who does not stand up for his town is in some way dwarfed. There is something wrong about him. His fellows will pass their judgment upon him, and the chances are that while he may add to the discomfort of others he will not escape making himself unhappy.

Remarkable Journey.

On October 4th while enjoying a picnic at Old Mission Point Miss Marion Snushall and Miss Delite Sawyer of Traverse City wrote a note asking that the finder of the missive write to them. The note was then carefully placed in an olive bottle and thrown into Grand Traverse Bay. Last week Miss Sawyer received a letter from Henry Stanberg of Brooklyn, New York, stating that he had found the bottle while out in his motorboat in the Hudson River. The remarkable fact that the bottle had been found in the Hudson River within five weeks time showed that the currents had favored it, causing the bottle to pass through four lakes, two rivers and one canal, which is a record as far as known that has not been equalled by a bottle message.

PETOSKEY HAS ANOTHER BLAZE

Overholt Bakery Badly Damaged by Fire, Water and Smoke Wednesday.

Petoskey Suffered Bread Famine Last Thursday—Overholt Bakery Supplied Big Trade.

The fire of last Wednesday night at the Overholt bakery in Petoskey was the third there within a few weeks. The estimated damage is about $4,000, partially covered by insurance. A defective chimney is attributed as the cause of the fire.

The fire was first discovered in the roof of the building about 7:15. The fire department quickly responded and soon had several streams of water playing on the blaze. At first the fire was thought to be of a more serious nature, as the bakery was in between several other wooden structures. Only the gallant work of the fire department saved the other buildings. Water and smoke did great damage, however, as practically the whole stock was soaked with water dripping through from the attic and second story of the building.

Fire brands set fire to the building occupied by the Saigeon & Ferris store, but the blaze was soon extinguished. No damage was noticed in this store Thursday morning. The stock and fixtures in this store represented about six or seven thousand dollars.

The building on the west, owned by Robert Ames, was burned considerably on the side next to the Overholt store. The fire dropped down between the walls, but the good work of the firemen probably saved the whole row of buildings from being destroyed.

Mr. Overholt, owner of the damaged store, was in the north woods hunting at the time of the fire. He was notified at once. As a result of the fire Petoskey had a bread famine Thursday, as the Overholt bakery supplies a large number of stores with bread each forenoon. The shop was turning out an average of 1000 loaves of bread a day and a large percentage of this was consumed in Petoskey. Large quantities of pie, cake, cookies, etc., were also turned out to the various stores. Charlevoix is supplying bread to the Overholt customers until that institution can be placed in operation.

Are you listed among those carrying insurance? If not, Myrtle Young & Son will gladly put you on the right path. See us at once. Adv.461t Larsen-Lyngklip.

At the pleasant home of Mrs. Karen Lyngklip at Ironton on Thursday, November 12th, occurred the marriage of her youngest daughter, Miss Lillie, and Peter Larsen, both of Eveline. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mitchell. To the strains of the wedding march rendered by Mrs. Wm. Meggison the bridal party entered the parlor, where Rev. Quinton Walker, pastor of the Charlevoix Methodist church, heard the vows which made them one for life. A sumptuous dinner was served to fifty guests. The presents were numerous and valuable. The young couple are held in high esteem by their many friends in Ironton, who wish for them the best things in life.

FIRE AT BOYNE

Blaze Could Be Seen from Charlevoix—Three Buildings Burned to Ground.

Last Monday evening about supper time fire was discovered at the William Campbell barber shop on Lake street, Boyne City, and before the firemen could get water on the burning structure the building on the north, occupied by Lee Cook, and the one on the south, occupied by Mrs. Turner's restaurant, were also a sheet of flame. The heavy fifty mile gale blowing made fire fighting very difficult. The Turner building was partially saved. The other two were total losses. Insurance was carried on each building and on the contents owned by each occupant. Much of the goods was saved.

Firebrands flew all about the city and had it not been for the light covering of snow the whole district would have been seriously damaged. In the repair shop of Lee Cook were many cartridges and some powder, but during the explosions no one in the large crowd was injured by the flying lead missiles.

One man took out insurance a few days ago and was burned out. Why not think of your situation? Ask us about insurance to-day.—Myrtle Young & Son. Adv.461t

NEW ADDITION TO BEACH HOTEL

More Room is Needed to House Vast Throng of Resorters.

Will Command One of the Best Views on Lake Michigan—Cottages are Popular.

Season after season of increased patronage and the fact that more room is needed to care for the people who apply for a place to spend the summer has again forced the owners of the Charlevoix Beach Hotel to make plans to build a large addition to their already commodious hostelry. When the hotel was enlarged some two years ago it was thought that, in connection with the many cottages, it would be large enough to accommodate all who applied. The past season, however, has demonstrated that more room is needed, and now the hotel is being entirely remodeled.

An addition 63x63 will be built on the west side of the present building. Cement retaining walls on the bluff will be put in and the building when completed will extend some distance to the west from where it now stands. When completed the hotel will be seven stories high on the west side, commanding one of the most beautiful views of Lake Michigan to be found in northern Michigan.

The first floor of the new addition will be taken up with bath rooms and like equipment. The second floor will be used for card rooms, boiler room and baggage room. On the third floor the casino and tea room will each occupy the floor space of about 60x30 feet, equipped with etage and dressing room and special equipment for a first-class tea room. The casino, tea room and office will be finished in oak, while a mammoth boulder fireplace will be constructed in the tea room and office. A first-class German delicatessen will be run in connection with the tea room. The main dining room will occupy the third floor and will cover a space of 112x32 feet, finished in white enamel. Two smaller dining rooms will also be arranged. What is now the old office will be converted into a dining room for the maids and children. The main dining room will be equipped with entirely new furniture.

The office will occupy the ground floor at the west end with the ladies' parlor and each will be magnificently finished with oak. When completed the office will overlook the lake and will be fitted with all modern conveniences.

The next three floors will be sleeping rooms and will double the capacity of the hotel. Some 35 bedrooms and 19 bathrooms are to be added to the present facilities.

A promenade porch will be added and will be 12x63 feet, all enclosed. Each floor will have its own porch. New and modern fire escape will be constructed, as well as standpipes on each floor. Fireproof automatic doors will be placed between the old and new parts of the building. Hot and cold running water will be placed in every room not provided with a bath, making accommodations even better than in the old part. An electric elevator will be installed, making easy access to any of the floors. The kitchen of the old building will be entirely remodelled and equipped, affording larger and more convenient working rooms. All of the new part will be heated with steam, an up-to-date plant to be installed. This feature will give the hotel a place to stay late in the season.

Hatzfield & Knox of Chicago are the architects and have made the plans for a beautiful structure when completed. John Curtis, one of our home carpenters, has charge of the construction work. Milton Russell of this city, who has been building the long stretch of stone fence on Michigan avenue for the Baker, will construct the large boulder fireplaces in the hotel. The excavating is nearly completed and the cement work will be started the last of the week. It is hoped that the building will be enclosed before the hard weather sets in.

Every energy is being put forth to have this popular hostelry finished and open to the resorters by June 1st. In addition to the large hotel capacity thirteen cottages are listed in the Beach hotel enterprise and will afford 100 extra rooms for the guests. The cottages are rapidly becoming very popular among Charlevoix visitors and the Beach Hotel cottages are favorites.

That Charlevoix is fast becoming the most popular resort in the north has been convincingly proven by the thousands who have spent the past summer here, and indications point that next year will go far beyond the present one. No one has realized more fully the importance of properly housing this vast throng of people than the owners of the Beach Hotel, and the present plans for increasing the size of their hotel is evidence that it is one of the most popular places in the north.

ABOUT 60 PRESENT

First Mothers' Meeting was a Great Success—Fine Program was Carried Out.

About sixty mothers and friends of the Charlevoix schools attended the mothers' meeting in the high school Saturday. The program was exceptionally interesting and instructive. Mrs. Crane's reading of the paper on "Making for Citizenship" was a treat from which was carried away many new and helpful suggestions.

Mrs. Bush's solo, accompanied by Mrs. Rachow, and the piano solo by Herbert Taggart added much to the program.

Much interest was shown over the display of mantle toys manufactured by Mrs. Nettleton of Charlevoix. The Nettleton mantle toys are a new creation and bid fair to become very popular. Mrs. Nettleton already has many orders for Christmas, some from very exclusive shops on Fifth avenue, New York. The toys are made of basswood, hand painted and varnished. They represent such stories as "The Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe," "Hiawatha Hunting," "Little Bo-Peep," etc. With every set is a verse which explains the set. They are unique and instructive. Those who did not see them missed something.

FIRST NUMBER LECTURE COURSE

Rev. George L. McNutt Will Open Season
1914-15 Lecture Course.

Article Written by Miss Shockley in School Contest
—"Are You Troubled with Curiosity?"

The first number of the citizens' lecture and entertainment course will be George L. McNutt in one of his famous lectures at the Charlevoix theatre Monday evening, December 7th.

All the members of the English 111 class wrote on this topic and Miss Shockley's was one of the best. The article follows:

"Are You Troubled with Curiosity?"

Daniel Webster defines curiosity as the disposition to inquire. Did you ever see a man with a dinner pail and wonder what was in it? If not, now is your opportunity not only to wonder but to know the contents. The Dinner Pail Man with the dinner pail that is sure to contain something for you will speak at the Opera House under the auspices of the Charlevoix entertainment and lecture course committee December 7th. Rev. Geo. L. McNutt comes to us with the highest recommendations. Mr. McNutt is a man with a big heart, a big brain, and a big message. After preaching fifteen years he entered the university of hard knocks to study the labor question in the laboratories of living men. He will give you something to think about with story and humor mixed with fact. Season tickets are for sale by Perry Mason, Ward Genett and Cora Driggott at the former price of $1.50, and $1.00 for students. The course for this year is an unusually good one and your support will be appreciated.

H. Shockley.

Thanksgiving's Boys

COUNTRY boy with cheek of tan
(So the old time poem ran),
You're the one to catch our turk;
Hope you find it easy work!
Hold him tight as you are able,
Lest he never reach our table!

CITY kids who hold the bird
Never of his birthplace heard.
But they know how good he tastes.
How he makes expand their waists!
Fowl that joins us folks. of all ranks,
For your toothsome we give thanks!

Local Y. M. C. A. Work.

In organizing the Y. M. C. A. work for the local schoolboys who are twelve years of age or over the aim is to have a 100 per cent. enrollment. Five groups have already been organized having a total membership of 45 out of 58 eligibles. The junior groups hold their regular weekly meetings in the high school building on Monday evening from 7 until 8:30 and the eighth grade club meets in the eighth grade room at the same hour on Tuesday evening. The junior group officers are Howard Major, president; Thomas Nowland, vice-president; and Chester See, secretary. Bob Krulik is president of the eighth grade club. Geo. Driggott vice-president and Claire Webster secretary. Will Bellingier is the leader of the eighth grade club and the junior groups are in charge of Jas. Leenhouts, Ward Genett, Roy Bahcock and Glen Dolberg.

Youth's Companion Calendar for 1915.

The publishers of the Youth's Companion will, as always at this season, present to every subscriber whose subscription is paid for 1915 a calendar for the new year. It is a gem of calendar making. The decorative mounting is rich, but the main purpose has been to produce a calendar that is useful, and that purpose has been achieved.

BOYS' CONFERENCE

Charlevoix to be Represented at Twelfth Annual Y. M. C. A. Meeting.

The indications are that the twelfth annual state boys' conference of the Y. M. C. A. will exceed in attendance and program anything ever attempted in the United States. Two thousand delegates was the original standard set for the conference and a week before the final date for registration this number had been exceeded. Even before this report reached the editor, Jack Supernaw promised that a part of the attendance would be large. Among the speakers are William Jennings Bryan, Governor Ferris, Senator Charles E. Townsend, Fred B. Smith, and E. M. Robinson. This county will be represented by nineteen delegates. The local boys who have registered are Herbert Taggart, Jack Supernaw, Bob Sloan, King Saunders, Allen Arnold, Dewey Jones, Glen Dolberg and Leo Butler.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to thank the neighbors and friends for their kind sympathy and flowers at the death of our beloved husband and father.

SCHOOL FUND

The Primary School Fund is Very Necessary to the Schools of the State.

The improvement of rural schools is a pressing problem in Michigan. Most parts of the state have passed the pioneer stage for which the old-time district school was well fitted. Besides reading, writing and arithmetic the country now needs instruction in home making, agriculture and those things which modern development demands. Never before was money needed for rural schools as it is now. The greatest help in building up the rural schools is the primary school fund. This fund was needed in pioneer days to lay the foundations of our school system. It is needed now even more to adjust the school system to the new conditions.

YACHT MAKES LONG TRIP

From Harbor Springs to Jacksonville, Florida, a Distance of 3000 Miles.

Word received at Potoskey last Friday stated that the handsome twin-screw power yacht Mohawk, belonging to Thos. R. Frost, a summer resident, had reached Jacksonville, Florida, after completing a voyage of approximately 3000 miles from Harbor Springs.

The Mohawk is elegantly furnished and is equipped with every modern safety device and convenience. She will be placed in commission at once and will cruise along the west coast of Florida during the winter. The trip to southern waters was made through the Great Lakes, Erie canal, Hudson River and Raritan River to New Brunswick, thence down the Atlantic coast through the inside passage to Beaufort, North Carolina, then out upon the ocean to her destination.

BRAVED STORM

Young Couple from Beaver Island Cross Lake Michigan During Sunday's Blow.

Such courage as displayed by a party of St. James, Beaver Island, residents should ultimately win success. The old saying "faint heart never won fair lady" must have filled the heart of one Harold McCann with more than an ordinary amount of bravery, for with Miss Ella Martin, his fair bride-to-be, he braved the angry waves of Lake Michigan and made the crossing from Beaver Island to Charlevoix during the driving storm in order that they might be in Potoskey to be married at Saint Francis church Monday morning.

The young people are well known residents of St. James, the bride being the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Martin, and the groom the son of Mr. and Mrs. John McCann. Father Bruno performed the ceremony, the young couple being attended by Miss Carrie Hynd of Cheboygan and Alfred Gibson of Potoskey.

NEW SHINGLE MILL

W. H. White Company Replaces Mill Destroyed by Fire Three Years Ago.

The new shingle mill at Boyne City has begun operations and is furnishing employment for some twenty-five men. It is expected that when the regular run is well started the mill will cut an average of 100,000 shingles a day.

The mill, which is entirely new and modern in every respect, stands on the Boyne River just east of Mill 3. The logs are unloaded into a boom in the river, from where they are directly taken into the mill. The W. H. White Company formerly owned and operated a shingle mill near the B. C. Lumber Company mill on the lake shore. This mill was destroyed by fire some three years ago, when the entire structure and all the equipment was burned.

Pastor Has Returned.

Rev. Lloyd C. Vineyard of Elizabethtown, Illinois, who a few weeks ago conducted special meetings in the Baptist church, has returned to the pastorate he accepted before being called home by the serious illness of his father. Mr. Vineyard will begin the regular services at the church Sunday morning at 10:30 and will conduct them as announced in the church notices in another column. Everyone is cordially invited to attend all the services and are urged to bring their friends.

THE WAR TAX LAW OF 1914

Passed October 22nd, 1914—Part Effective Now.

Some Things Which Affect the General Public—Save This for Reference.

The war tax law of 1914 as passed by congress October 22nd, 1914, has partly gone into effect November 1st, when certain business lines—such as tobacco dealers, theatre, banks and brokers, liquor dealers, commission merchants, and many others—had to pay a specific tax during this month to the collector of internal revenue according to the new law as enacted.

On December 1st it goes still further into effect and we mention herein only a few of the things that will be borne by the public through stamp tax and which is of general interest and something everyone should be familiar with.

On goods shipped by freight or express by one consignee to one consignee on one bill of lading, per shipment.....01
The stamp to be attached to the bill of lading by the shipper.

On all promissory notes, whether given to individuals, banks or otherwise, on each $100.....02
Stamp to be placed upon the note by the party giving or signing each note.

On insurance policies—On each dollar of premium or cost.....005
Stamp to be paid for by the assured or party in whose favor the policy is written.

On deeds or realty transfers, mortgages excepted, when consideration exceeds $100 and does not exceed $500.....50
Each additional $500 also .50 extra.

Parlor car seats, each.....01
Telegrams and telephone messages—On each message over 15c. 01
Payable by person paying for the message.

There are many more things that require stamp tax, but these are some of the general or ordinary matters that interest everyone. There is no requirement for stamps on bank checks or certificates, as has heretofore been in order when stamps were used, as the banks have been obliged to pay a special tax which is supposed to cover that feature.

Familiarize yourself with these new requirements, as you will meet with them when you ship goods by freight or express, or when you sign notes, or get insurance policies, or use the telegraph or telephone on long distance calls, etc.

It may be inconvenient, but it is the law and we must all comply with it. The above is not a copy of the law, but as we understand it.

MICHIGAN WOMAN'S STOMACH ILLS ENDED BY A WONDERFUL REMEDY

Mrs. Beamer of Flint is Delivered from Headaches by Just a Few Doses.

Mrs. Guy A. Beamer of 1307 North street, Flint, Michigan, was for a long time a victim of stomach and digestive troubles. One of the serious effects was in bad headaches which attacked her almost daily.

She took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Then she wrote: "I thank you very much for what your medicine has done for me. I never saw anything work such wonders as just the three bottles have. There was never a day in my life that I did not have my head tied up with a cloth and I have not had a headache since. I had been doctored by apothecaries, too, and received very little benefit."

Just such stories are told by thousands who have used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. It is known all over the United States. It clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings quick relief to sufferers with stomach ailments, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations; many are sure it has saved their lives.

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. One dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleanser ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold by leading druggists everywhere. The first dose must give you absolute satisfaction, or we don't want your money. It is sold with the positive understanding your money will be returned by your druggist without quibble or question.

Kidney Troubles Attack Charlevoix Men and Women, Old and Young.

Kidney ills seize young and old. Often comes with little warning. Children suffer in their early years. Can't control the kidney secretions. Girls are languid, nervous, suffer pain.

Women worry; can't do daily work. Men have lame and aching backs. If you have any form of kidney ills you must reach the cause—the kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys. Have brought relief to Charlevoix people.

Charlevoix testimony proves it. Mrs. M. Olney, 310 W. Huribut Ave., Charlevoix, says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills a valuable kidney remedy. I have taken them several times for kidney complaint and severe backaches and have been greatly benefited. Others of the family have used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store, for lame back and pains in the kidneys and have had good results."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Olney had. Foster-Milburn Company, Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

CHARLEVOIX DRUGGIST HAS VALUABLE AGENCY

B. A. Herman has the Charlevoix agency for the simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler-I-ka, the remedy which became famous by curing appendicitis. This simple remedy has powerful action and drains such surprising amounts of old matter from the body that JUST ONE DOSE relieves sour stomach, gas on the stomach and constipation almost IMMEDIATELY. The QUICK action of Adler-I-ka is astonishing.

Additional Locals

Mrs. J. H. Steenburg of Eveline, left Monday on an extended visit to Paris, Mich., where she attends the marriage of her cousin's oldest daughter, Miss Mary Ryan. She will also visit her brother and sister at Grand Rapids, and on her return at another brother's farm home near Big Rapids, Mich.

Two young girls unceremoniously left their homes at Boyne City a few days ago and it was thought they had run away. No word was mentioned to the parents of their contemplated trip. Everything came out lovely at the arrival of the girls at their homes last Thursday from a visit with relatives in the southern part of the state.

Captain Harrison Berdan was pleasantly surprised by a number of his friends Saturday evening the occasion being his eighty-fifth birthday. A pot-luck supper was served and a pleasant evening was pronounced by all present. His many friends hope that he may celebrate many more birthdays with them.

Last Wednesday noon snow began to fall at tremendous rapidity and since that time the city beautiful has been slowly but gradually covered. The snow plows were in evidence last Thursday and Friday mornings. Sleighing was fairly good Friday in the city, but the country roads were drifted in places and bare in others. During the storm Wednesday a barge had considerable difficulty in entering the port. The bridge whistle was kept busy answering calls so the barge could follow the sound to the harbor.

INTERESTING MEETING

W. C. T. Union Met With Mrs. Bagbee Friday, November, 13th.

Considering the inclement weather, there was a good attendance at the meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union at the home of Mrs. Bagbee Friday afternoon, Nov. 13th. In the absence of the president, Miss Agnes Rodger, who was called to the bedside of a sick brother in Detroit, Mrs. Taggart acted as chairman of the meeting. We were sorry to learn that Miss Rodger did not reach Detroit till after her brother had passed away.

Miss Rodger has the sympathy of the organization. A committee was appointed to write to Major Henderson relative to his coming to Charlevoix to give an entertainment. Major Henderson was a drummer boy in the Civil War. He and his son have given entertainments for years in many states with evident satisfaction. We hope to be fortunate enough to secure them for an entertainment here.

Miss Annie Metcalf's report of the district convention for the first day was fine. Mrs. Wilkinson reported some of the good things of the second day. Mrs. Weikel also gave items of interest.

Mrs. Taggart had charge of the program, which gave interesting prohibition items. Reading by Mrs. Correll, "Are Taxes Higher Under Prohibition?" Mrs. Mosington gave a reading, "One Half Million Children Never Saw a Soldier in Kansas." Mrs. Correll sang a solo, "Jim and Me," which was much enjoyed by all present.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage licenses issued by County Clerk Lewis during past two weeks: Patrick Early, age 40, of St. James; Mary Gallagher, age 35, of St. James; Harold McCann, age 22, of St. James; Edith Martin, age 18, of St. James; Paul James Belley, age 21, of Boyne City; Arlene Alexander, age 21, of Boyne City; D. Goodman, age 50, of East Jordan; Nellie Sweet, age 39, of East Jordan; Walter Vosburg, age 21, of Charlevoix; Edith Russell, age 16, of Charlevoix; Peter Larsen, age 29, of Charlevoix; Lillian Lynkipp, age 22, of Charlevoix; Julius C. Henser, age 31, of Boyne Valley township; Gertrude Price, age 26, of Boyne Valley township; Arthur Schloesser, age 21, of Charlevoix; Katherine Parker, age 19, of Charlevoix; Daima Lou Auble, age 21, of Boyne Falls; Nina May Pearson, age 22, of Boyne Falls; George McNally, age 47, of Charlevoix; Anna O'Neil, age 40, of Charlevoix.

New serial story next week. Watch for it. "Christmas."

Livery Barn Burns.

The Morgan livery barn, the oldest and largest of its kind in northwestern Michigan, was destroyed by fire at Traverse City last Thursday forenoon. The origin of the fire is unknown. The heavy north wind that was blowing fanned the blaze until the whole of the 165-foot wooden structure was a roaring furnace. All the horses and equipment were saved. The barn was built in 1875 and the livery equipment was owned by Glen C. Silver. A foot of snow on the roofs of nearby buildings saved them from catching fire. The loss is about $8000, partially covered by insurance.

Near Jail Delivery.

Under Sheriff Doherty discovered a plot for a wholesale jail delivery at Petoskey last Saturday morning. The prisoners who were planning to get away were Case, the would-be Harbor Springs murderer; Martenau, who burglarized the Smith & Lake store, and Johnson, who stole a suitcase from the G. R. & I. depot. The bars had been sawed in two on one window and the bolts removed from the steel wire screen on the outside of the window. A steel table knife has been missing for some time and it is thought it was converted into a saw and used in the effort to free themselves. An Indian released Saturday admitted that the trio intended escaping Saturday night or Sunday morning.

POLLY'S THANKSGIVING

Now a Little Girl Got a Holiday All For Her Very Own.

SUCH a funny little roly poly Polly as she was, with her big chins blue eyes, that were forever seeing something to wonder about, and her round, red cheeks, that always grew redder when anybody spoke to her, and her crinkly, flaxen hair, that never would stay in place. Such a queer dumping of a Polly!

All the same, she liked nice things to eat as well as anybody could, and when once upon a time somebody gave her the measles just in season for Thanksgiving day she felt dreadful about it and cried as hard as she knew how because she couldn't have any turkey nor pudding nor mince pie for dinner—nothing at all but oatmeal gruel.

But crying didn't help the measles a mile, as, of course, Polly knew it wouldn't. But she couldn't have helped crying if she wanted to, and she didn't want to. "Most anybody'd cried, I wouldn't wonder," she said a day or two after, when the measles had begun to go away again, "not to have a mite of any Thanksgiving for dinner—not any pie, not any cranberry sauce, not any—oh, dear!"

"Well, well," said Polly's mother, laughing. "I guess we'll have to have another Thanksgiving day right off."

"Oh, can we?" cried Polly, brightening up.

"Not unless the governor says so," answered her father, with a twinkle. "The governor makes Thanksgiving days, Polyanthus."

"Where does he live?" asked Polly, with an earnestness that was funny. Everybody laughed.

"At the capital," said Polly's Uncle Ben Davis. "Do you know where that is?"

"I guess I do," said Polly, and she asked no more questions.

But what do you guess this funny Polly did? By and by, when she felt quite like herself again, she borrowed pencil and paper and shut herself up in her own little room and wrote a letter that looked a little queer, 'tis true, but still made her wishes known:

DEAR MR. GOVERNOR, WILL YOU PLEASE MAKE ANOTHER THANKSGIVING DAY BE CAUSE I HAD THE MEASLES THE LAST ONE. POLLY PINKHAM.

Then she folded the letter and put it in an envelope and sealed it and took 12 cents out of her bank for the postage and ran away as fast as she could run.

Mr. Willey kept the postoffice, and if he himself had been behind the glass boxes that day I don't believe Polly's letter would ever have come out of Tinkerville. But Mr. Willey's niece was there. She read the address on the envelope Polly handed in, and her eyes danced, it looked so funny:

Mrs. GUYNER, at the CAPITAL.

One or two questions brought out the whole story.

"The governor shall have your letter, Polly," roguish Miss Molly said as she stamped it and postmarked it.

And so he did, for, not quite a week later, a letter came in the mail for Polly—a great white letter with a picture in one corner that made Polly's father open his eyes.

"Why, it's the state's arms!" said he. "What under the sun?"

But I think he suspected. Oh, how red Polly's cheeks were and how her small fingers trembled when she tore open her letter! It was printed so that she could read it herself, all but the long words:

DEAR MISS POLLY—Your letter received. I am very sorry you were so ill as not to be able to eat any Thanksgiving dinner. It was quite too bad. I hereby appoint a special Thanksgiving day for you—next Thursday, Dec. 9—which I trust may be kept with due form. Your friend and well-wisher.

ANDREW COLBURN.

"Oh, oh, oh!" said Polly, hopping on one foot. "Will you, mother? Oh, mother, will you? I wrote to him myself. Oh, I'm so glad!"

"Did you ever?" cried Polly's mother. "Why, Polly Pinkham! But Polly's father slapped his knee and laughed.

"Good for Governor Colburn! I'll vote for him as long as he wants a vote. And Polly shall have a special Thanksgiving worth telling of, so she shall!"

And so she did have, the very best she ever remembered.—A. O. Stoddard in Youth's Companion.

Fasting and Feasting.

A fast and a feast kept close company in Puritan calendars. A fast frequently preceded Thanksgiving day and was sometimes appointed for the day succeeding the feast, a clever plan which had its good hygienic points.

Though in the mind of the Puritan Christmas smelted in heaven of idolatry, when his own festival Thanksgiving, because annual, it assumed many of the features of the old English Christmas. It was simply a day of family reunion in November instead of December, on which Puritans ate turkey and Indian pudding and pumpkin pie instead of "superstitious meats," such as a baron of beef, boar's head and plum pudding.

Many, many stories are told of the early Thanksgiving days, such as the town of Quichester calmly ignoring the governor's appointed day and observing its own festival a week later in order to allow time for the arrival, by ship from New York, of a hoghead of molasses for pie.—From "Customs and Fashions in Old New England," by Alice Morse Esale.

LUCILLE LOVE

THE GIRL OF MYSTERY

BY THE

"MASTER PEN"

Copyright, 1914. All moving picture rights reserved by the Universal Film Mfg. Co., Inc. This production is being exhibited in leading theaters. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted.

SYNOPSIS.

Valuable governmental papers are stolen by Thompson, follower of Loubeque, international spy, from General Love, whom Loubeque hates. In Manila, Love's daughter Lucille flies to a steamer to recover the papers in order to clear the name of Lieutenant Gibson, whom she loves.

Loubeque, tampering with the wireless on the steamer, is hurt. Lucille nurses him in an attempt to recover the papers.

Lucille gets the papers, but the ship is wrecked. She is cast ashore on a Pacific island and is taken by a native chief to his hut to nurse his sick child.

The native child is restored to health, and the grateful natives idolize Lucille. Loubeque, also cast ashore, tries various plans to recover the papers, but in vain.

Loubeque, baffled, forces a message from a neighboring chief to lure Lucille away from her friends. She falls into a pitfall, losing the documents.

Loubeque's native aid steals the papers from his master, and Lucille takes them from the native after he is killed by a lion. She finds and follows an underground passage in the jungle.

Lucille falls into the hands of a tribe of ape men, whose leader drops a necklace of priceless rubies, which she takes. She and Loubeque are rescued from the island by a yacht commanded by Captain Wetherell.

The girl and Loubeque are set adrift in an open boat by Wetherell after she repulses the captain's advances, and he takes the papers.

Saved by Ishmeroo, Lucille and Loubeque are in China. As she passes a house Loubeque's diary is thrown to her mysteriously. She tries to board a vessel bound for America. Loubeque recovers the papers from Wetherell.

Lucille slows away, is caught and dressed as a cabin boy with the aid of the captain of the steamer in order to search Loubeque's stateroom for the papers. He catches her at work.

Loubeque takes the papers from Lucille. Landing at San Francisco she is kidnapped by the spy and held a prisoner in Loubeque's house by Thompson.

She throws a message from her window to the captain of the boat, who passes it to the captain of the steamer, which Loubeque wins. He is hurt, and she takes and hides the papers. Thompson tries to steal the rubies.

At Loubeque's ranch in Mexico, to which Loubeque takes Lucille, the girl is befriended by a mysterious Mexican, who helps her to escape after she strikes down Thompson.

Lucille flees across the border and meets Lieutenant Carnody, an army friend. He puts her on a train for San Francisco. On the train is Thompson, watching her.

Thompson steals the necklace from Lucille, and Loubeque takes the papers from her after she enters his house to recover them. Loubeque accuses Thompson of being a traitor to him.

Loubeque chokes Thompson into submission. He takes the girl again to Mexico, but she flees again with the aid of her mysterious friend, taking with her the papers and the rubies.

Lucille, stunned in an accident to her strange friend's automobile, is recaptured by Loubeque. In San Francisco she escapes again and pledges the rubies for freedom.

To win Loubeque's admiration Lucille appears as a cabaret performer in a hotel, shocking Lieutenant Gibson. She intercepts a message telling Loubeque to deliver the papers to an officer of the U. S. Army. Thompson tries to take his master by surprise.

Thompson is killed by Loubeque, who tries to make the killing look like suicide. A little later Lucille enters Loubeque's house, takes the papers and flees in a taxicab, pursued by Loubeque.

The papers are delivered by Lucille to the captain of the Terror. Olson, searching for Lucille, encounters Loubeque in the spy's house and crosses broadswords with him, but is disarmed.

Loubeque gives a box in Gibson for Lucille. The lieutenant delivers it in Washington. It contains the rubies and a page of Loubeque's diary exonerating General Love. Lucille, her father and Olson are reunited.

CHAPTER XXIII.

An Ensign Feels His Dignity Offended.

I lacked but fifteen minutes to 5 before she found herself upon the street with the jeweler who had rushed to her assistance and, after a short conference with the officers and detectives, had arranged her release, personally agreeing to produce her when desired.

"If you know Loubeque has the papers," he demanded, "why don't you call on a policeman to protect you and to rescue them?"

Lucille smiled faintly at his commonplace advice, realizing the absolute impossibility of impressing anyone with the power of her enemy. And she must hurry to the mysterious house where Ensign Howell was to call at 530, even as she thanked her friend bidding him goodbye at the door of her motorcar.

Hurriedly she searched the streets for the mysterious residence of Hugo Loubeque. She had ten minutes leeway before the ensign was due to call, ample opportunity if she had not for gotten any details of the message. The house was vacant, just as she had thought it would be, for Loubeque would never trust himself for a long time to the place that had once been raided. It would suffice for this short bit of haste that that was all.

She let herself easily in by the door, the smashed lock of the riding party never having been replaced. Swiftly she rushed through the familiar rooms. In the desk drawer of the spy she found a medium sized automatic, the trigger still fastened on it. The front door bell clanged.

The last act in the play was about to be begun. Ensign Howell was at the door, unless the spy had detected her trick in tampering with the message of the carrier pigeon.

Her right hand, which had been closing the revolver concealed beneath her coat, unslipped, and a sigh of obvious relief came from her lips as she opened the door to greet a young ensign in uniform. She did not quite know what she would have done had it been Loubeque.

"Ensign Howell?" she murmured, dashing quickly at the admiration and astonishment on the officer's face at being greeted by such a vision. "I am very sorry," she murmured hurriedly, as he started to enter, "but Mr. Loubeque was obliged to leave hurriedly. He left word that he would surely be at any place convenient after 8:45."

"Any place convenient?" The officer's tones were more of surprise than vexation.

"That is," she hesitated, "where it would be convenient for a cutter or boat of some sort to take him to the Terror. That matter is of such importance he does not wait—that is."

The young man straightened himself, his face wearing an expression of wounded dignity. Lucille heaved a sigh of relief.

"That is quite Mr. Loubeque's privilege," he snapped. "I shall write the address on a card where the cutter will be so there can be no further mistake."

Lucille accepted the card negligently, holding her eyes averted that he might not read the ecstasy that fairly flooded them. She watched his riper straight back as it disappeared down the street, then clasped the card feverishly to her breast. The first move had been made, and she had more than taken the honors. High hope beat in her heart because of the little victory. She snapped her teeth tightly shut. Yes, the papers would be taken aboard the Terror, but not by Hugo Loubeque. Neither would there be any aid with them from the army spy. She was ready for anything now.

Laggard time for once flew while she waited the long interval that was to elapse before the arrival of the spy. Lucille found once more the tunnel through which she had been led, found mysterious passages and explored them, studied out the position she would be in when she completed her work with the enemy who was to come.

A step sounded overhead, slow, measured, methodical. She pressed close against the switchboard to the house of mystery, her fingers trembled slightly. The feet moved up the stairs. She waited, fingers outstretched toward a little ivory button. The cool surface kissed the finger pad, the pad upon which depended the honor of father and sweetheart, which spelled home life, love to her.

Hugo Loubeque moved slowly to his private office on the second floor. He shivered slightly as he went up the stairs. Ghosts were in the house, ghost memories that he was about to shun finally and forever.

He seated himself at his desk to wait, wandering off in a day dream of pleasant memories. Lucille—how her very presence here had made the place bearable. He took the precious packet of stolen papers from his pocket.

The sweet he had longed for was his now and yet it was not sweet. He slapped his fist heavily upon the table, cursing himself for a fool that such thoughts should oppress him.

What ailed the ensign that he did not come? It was past the time appointed. That was most unusual. He strode nervously up and down the floor. Suddenly the door gave way violently beneath him, flashed down with lightning speed, bringing up upon the haemorrhoid floor with such violence that everything in the room was overturned, while he, himself, lay half stunned against the table.

He staggered away, finding himself so weak and dazed he was obliged to clutch the table edge to keep from toppling over. Something cool and soft brushed against his hand, then his fingers were loosened from their clutch. He staggered back, back against the basement wall. He heard Lucille's voice uttering a little cry of delight. His hands encountered the light switch, instinctively pressing. The room was a flood of yellow light. In the center of which, slowly retreating toward the tunnel exit from the house, revolver pointed steadily at him, with eyes glaring behind the revolver that were harder even than the white of metal.

stood Lucille Love, the precious packet of papers in her hand.

Slowly, without a word, she disappeared from view, departed as abruptly, as unexpectedly as she had appeared, making use of the spy's ingenuity to turn it against him in this, his greatest hour. For a moment he could not think or do anything; then he darted toward the tunnel, staggering back as a white hot iron seared his brow even as an orange spur of flame leaped out the darkness at him.

He could not charge that way. He dashed to the stairs, rushing into the open, hatless, wild, disheveled. An automobile stood before the door. He directed it wildly toward the tunnel entrance, arriving there barely in time to see Lucille step inside another motorcar and dart forward like a living thing.

Helpless, hopeless, yet fighting on with building ferocity, Loubeque continued the chase. "There he would use her, only to pick the car up again in the most unexpected place. Then, for a full five minutes, along the water front, she disappeared."

A husky, late chauffeur stepped before his driver and slammed open the door.

"Hey, youse," he bawled angrily, "whatta yuh mean chasin' a lady lika dat?"

Loubeque did not answer. Instead he put a question, snapping it in a tone of inquiry to thrust out. "I am under orders to receive the packet of papers and take them to that court, together with the affidavit of Hugo Loubeque that they were sold to him. If they are in your possession, I will take them; if not, I shall be forced to turn back and find Mr. Loubeque."

"The papers are in my possession, sir. They belong to me until I can turn them over to my father, to whom they were sent. What he will do with them is a matter for the court of inquiry to decide."

"That is quite impossible," the man snapped sharply. "In the first place, your story is quite incredible. Lucille Love was drowned when the Empress took fire."

"Lucille Love is here, sir. Lucille Love was aboard the Empress, flew there with Mr. Harley, the government aviator, because she knew from a message she cut in on upon the telephone that Hugo Loubeque was aboard the Empress and that he had the papers. Ever since, through jungle, desert, land and water, I have followed him. I have seen the spy's diary. It is here with the papers—always. That will show his hatred for my father. That will explain. That will prove my story."

Even as the captain nodded, rising to his feet to eagerly watch the girl's frantic search through the packet, a little, dry sob broke from her lips.

She recovered herself with an effort, shaking her head as though to drive away the mists of faintness which this, the crowning misfortune, had delivered her. The diary of Hugo Loubeque was not among the papers she had recovered.

The captain nodded toward his ensign, who, with a glance of sympathy toward the stricken girl, scooped up the papers and laid them before his commanding officer.

Lucille turned and slowly left the room. Her eyes were fastened directly ahead but she walked as one who journeys in slumber, unseeing, benumbed. And her lips repeated over and over again:

"Too cruel! Cruel! Cruel!"

CHAPTER XXIV.

Exit Hugo Loubeque.

SERGEANT DALY, plain clothes man of the San Francisco police department, showed scarcely a sign of interest as he was assigned to the mysterious case at the St. Francis.

Swiftly he took in the salient details of the house detective, the discovery of a man's dead body in the suit of a young woman who had registered there under the name of Lucille Love. Then he went immediately to the room and examined the corpse.

Thompson had not been touched. He lay as he had been when Hugo Loubeque looked back at him from the doorway, his body twisted a bit from the struggle with the spy, his right hand tightly clutching the revolver in his mouth. Only bent over him, uttering a little ejaculation of surprise which whetted the curiosity of the manager instantly. After a long interval he rose to his feet, holding a soiled linen label in his hand.

"Frank Thompson," he smiled quietly. "Here is the name of the tailor who made the suit he wears. I wonder how he ever came to go to Manila."

"Manila?" Frankly curious was the manager.

"Then he was a crook?"

sergeant interrupted sharply. "You say this suit was assigned to Lucille Love?"

"A young woman who was arrested yesterday, sergeant, when she was caught in Mr. Loubeque's suit. She came here with Mr. Loubeque and he registered her. Her first night here she created a sensation by paying one of the cabaret to allow her to dance in her place. Yesterday a call came to the office from Loubeque's suit that a hotel sneak thief was in his apartment. When the detective arrived the place was vacant, but the young woman was caught on the fire escape and arrested, paroled in the custody of Mr. Rolter, the big jeweler. It is a case of suicide, sergeant?"

Daly shook his head. "Suicide? I should rather guess not. Look at the man's gums. The gun was forced into his mouth and the gums badly bruised in the doing of it. Where can I find this Lucille Love or Loubeque?"

Before the manager could answer the telephone bell tinkled. He turned to the detective excitedly, his hand pressed over the phone mouthpiece.

"A Lieutenant Gibson calling on Miss Love," he explained.

"Tell him to wait."

Richard Gibson was little inclined for cross examination when first the two men approached him. Shamed of his unreasoning jealousy of the girl he loved, he had fought the battle out with himself, coming to the conclusion that there must be a reasonable explanation for her conduct. Sergeant Daly regarded him steadily a moment, then told him the reason for his wishing to know everything. Gibson whirled upon the manager, his face livid with rage. Data clinked.

"And you had her arrested—you had her?" Only held the arm that was about to strike, soothing him with quieting words.

Gibson flung upon his heel and left the hotel, black hatred, suspicion, fear, a thousand and one emotions in his heart. At the jeweler's his tale caused the proprietor to almost have a stroke of apoplexy.

"A murdered man in her suit while she was in the station house?" he gasped. "Then she won't—He fairly of authority that made even the manager cringe."

"Where did she go?"

The driver passed him a grimy card. The international spy turned it over in his hand, reading the address upon it and marking that it was not a block away. On the obverse side he read Ensign Howell's name. The chauffeur was pointing out upon the harbor.

Captain Joe Dead.

Joseph Naganshe, known as Captain
Joe, died at his home in Indian Town, near Harbor Springs, recently. He was about 82 years of age. His whole life had been spent in the Little Travese Bay region. The art of canoe making, learned when he was a mere boy, had been the trade he followed the last years of his life. His miniature canoes were purchased by tourists and were always in great demand as souvenirs. His home for many years had been at Seven Mile Point, where his relatives now live. Naganshe's life had been linked with Emmet county's early history and up to his death he had always held a conspicuous place. He was a most interesting character and very much respected member of his race.

THEATRICAL

"Neptune's Daughter," featuring Annette Kellerman, said to be the most perfect woman in the world, was beautifully portrayed at the Majestic theatre
Monday evening to a packed house.
Miss Kellerman is a wonderful swimmer and her feats of artistic daring are remarkable. The seven reels are among the finest ever prepared and the settings are planned to bring out the qualifications of this notable woman in every way. The plot is intensely interesting.
The transformation from a mermaid to a mortal, the morning glory dance, the curse of the witch, the diving feats of Miss Kellerman, the terrific battle under water and the duel on the king's grounds were the features that held the closest attention. The films are quoted as being the most expensive that are shown in the country. Miss Kellerman is an artist of unequalled merit and has well earned the title of the "Diving Venus."

Stock Exposition.

The directors of the International Live Stock Exposition announced on November 19th that the stock show would not be held during the week of November 28th to December 5th on account of the foot and mouth disease epidemic that caused the Union Stockyards to be closed. The government has taken most careful steps to confine the epidemic in the region where it appeared and deem it unwise to bring the vast crowds together that annually flock to the "International." All interests at the stockyards are co-operating with the government in an effort to stamp out the dread disease.

WHAT TO HAVE FOR SUPPER.

SUPPER MENU.
Parker House Rolls.
Creamed Cauliflower With Ham.
Orange Charlotte.
Iced Tea.

WHEN appetites are espricious a dainty supper like this will tempt even the fastidious.

Delicious Rolls.
Parker House Rolls.—Take three quarts of flour, one quart of milk, one tablespoonful each of butter and sugar, one teaspoonful of salt and one-half yeast cake dissolved in one-half cupful of water; scald the milk, add the butter and one cupful of the flour to it while hot. Let it cool; then mix all together with a knife. Let it rise three hours, cut it down, let it rise one hour, then make rolls. Let rise half hour in pans and bake in hot oven.

Creamed Cauliflower With Ham.—
Take one head cauliflower, three well beaten eggs, two cupfuls white sauce, three-fourths cupful finely chopped cooked ham. Trim the cauliflower and boil in boiling salted water until it is tender; then drain and rub it through a sieve. Add the eggs and one cupful of the white sauce to the cauliflower and pour the mixture into a buttered mold. Bake until firm.
Turn out on a hot, flat dish, cover with sauce and sprinkle with ham.

A Dainty Dessert.
Orange Charlotte.—Take one third box of gelatin, one-third of a cupful of cold water, one-third of a cupful of boiling water, one cupful of sugar, juice of one lemon, one cupful of orange juice and pulp, whites of three eggs. Line a bowl with lady fingers or sections of orange, as preferred.
Soak the gelatin in cold water until soft. Pour on the boiling water, add the sugar and the lemon juice. Strain the orange juice and pulp and add with a little of the strained fluid. Set in a pan of extremely cold water.
When it begins to harden beat it until light. Add the beaten whites and beat together until the mixture is stiff enough to drop. Pour into the mold.

Iced Tea.—One of the most refreshing beverages is iced tea. Prepare a tea as usual. When cool place in clean bottles—milk bottles are good for that purpose—cover and place on ice until very cold. Serve in tall glass es partly filled with crushed ice.

The King of Festivals.
The king and high priest of all festivals was the autumn thanksgiving.
When the apples were all gathered and the cider was all made and the yellow pumpkins were rolled to from may a hill to billows of gold and the corn was husked and the labors of the season were done and the warm late days of Indian summer came in dreamy and calm and still, with just enough frost to crisp the ground of a morning, but with warm traces of be-lignant, sunny hours at noon, there came over the community a sort of genial repose of spirit, a sense of something accomplished and of a new golden mark made in advance, and the deacon began to say to the minister of a Sunday, "I suppose it's about time for the Thanksgiving proclamation."—
From Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Old Time Folks."

Our First National Thanksgiving.
The immediate occasion of the first thanksgiving was the surrender of General Burgoyne to General Gates in the fall of 1777. Thursday, the 18th of December, was designated, and in compliance with the order of congress the army at Valley Forge duly observed the day—the army that had track-ed its way in blood. It was ordered by the Continental congress.

A Proclamation

By the Governor.

We often speak of inalienable rights, among which are "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Liberty and happiness will follow if we put the emphasis on life. For centuries man has sought happiness and ignored the essentials of life, attributing to Providence physical suffering and death. Why not attribute physical vigor and the joy of good health to Providence?

The ravages of the "White Plague" are appalling. Hardly a family in Michigan, hardly a family in the United States, that has not suffered directly or indirectly from this plague.

Cleanliness in birth, cleanliness in person, cleanliness in the use of air, water, food, clothing, shelter, work, thought and purpose make for godliness.

Teach and train all of the people to think less of physical sins; teach and train all of the people to think more and know more of the laws of health.
The industrial world is fast coming to appreciate the tremendous value of all sanitary agencies. The right of an industry to exist rests on the necessity of conserving life, rests on the necessity of enriching life physically, mentally and morally. Physical righteousness exalteth a nation.

Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris,
Governor of the State of Michigan, urge the observance of Sunday, November the 29th, as Tuberculosis Day.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Michigan this 18th day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, and of the commonwealth the seventy-eighth.

Woodbridge N. Ferris,
Governor.

LUCILLE LOVE

The Girl of Mystery

Loubeque looked, started the still figure of Lucille standing upright in the brightly manned cutter approaching the big ship. He turned away.

His shoulders seemed to have slumped in the half hour. His face to have undergone a chiseling process by the sculptor Suffering, but a smile crossed his face.

Once in the cutter, Lucille for the first time heaved a huge sigh of relief as she glanced back toward the shore and saw Hugo Loubeque jump from the car in which he had been pursuing her and glance hurriedly up and down the harbor front.

She clambered over the sides of the waiting government vessel, being met at the dock by the captain himself. His eyebrows rose in surprise as he regarded the slender slip of a girl facing him, her eyes wet with tears.

"Ensign Howell informed me that Mr. Loubeque," he began, when she interrupted.

"The papers are here, captain. I have them. They are safe now."

For a moment he studied her meditatively. She felt an icy chill running up and down her spine. Would he turn back and force her to return the papers? At the very suggestion her face flexed in every muscle, while her eyes met his coldly and steadily, a purpose in their depths which even the officer turned away from, convinced that all was well.

And now that she was safe, the nervous reaction came upon her. In her own tiny cabin, safe finally from the man who had last seen upon the shore, it seemed the very air was fraught with terrors, horrible fears reaching toward her, gathering at her with threats of perils greater even than those she had come through already. A light tapping on the door brought her to her feet, heartily ashamed of the false terrors she had allowed to unnerve her. She opened the door, and Ensign Howell entered.

Lucille regarded him coldly, in far different manner from the courteous young woman who had put him off at the house of Loubeque.

"Miss—Miss," he stammered, "why did you send me away from the appointment? The captain wishes to speak with you, and when you tell him the truth it will appear as though I—"

"You need have no fear," she answered quietly. "Will you kindly conduct me to the captain? I will explain everything."

The captain of the Terror regarded her steadily as she was brought before him. Seated at his desk, in the very throne of his authority, Lucille felt him a very much more formidable being than when she met him on the deck. This man was her enemy, would be her enemy until the question of possession of the papers had been thoroughly thrashed out.

"Your name, please?" queried the commander shortly.

Lucille felt a thrill of pride running through her.

"My name, sir," she said quite simply, "is Lucille Love, daughter of General Sumpter Love, United States army."

The commander held out his hand, "I am in receipt of orders from Washington," he said quietly, "to meet Hugo Loubeque, who would turn over to me certain papers and orders, which he received from General Love while in command at Manila, and which he sold."

"It's a lie," Lucille's voice, rang against the sides of the cabin with vibrant force.

"Yes, a lie," she repeated, quieting the fury which was racking her. "My father did receive the papers. There was a military ball in progress at the time he gave them to his aid, Lieutenant Gibson, my fiancé, to put in the safe. That night they were stolen by a servant in the employ of Hugo Loubeque, and I tell you, not sold."

The commander nodded coldly.

"Your contention is a matter for the time," he said, and moved along the deck, picking up a small ivory box, exquisitely carved, which he handed to Gibson.

"You will kindly give this to—Lucille—with my compliments and felicitations," he murmured.

Gibson stared at him, wondering at the lack of emotion on his face in this moment of peril. Slowly, steadily Loubeque stepped backward. Then suddenly a yawning panel stood beside him. He stood in the cavity a second, smiling as the door closed, and Sergeant Daly, followed by a squad of officers, lurched into the room.

"That's him!" Daly's shout turned into wild yelp of terror, as the room shot from under the feet of the occupants and they found themselves precipitated into the very bowels of the house.

It was half an hour before they managed to find their way out; half an hour which swallowed up the international spy completely as though it had been the grave.

Desperately, Lucille finished her dressing and turned to look out the hotel window over Pennsylvania avenue. She was alone in Washington.

When the captain of the Terror had spoken of the court of inquiry before which General Sumpter Love was being tried for selling the papers he had received from Washington, she had conjured up visions of him behind bars.

But when she realized on reaching the city that he was at a hotel, living quite the same as she herself was allowed to live, her joy had submerged almost every other feeling. It had been four days now, however, and still she had not culled up sufficient courage to see him.

All night she had been awake trying to scheme up some method of adding him. The papers she had recovered, and it seemed that instead of helping she had placed in the hands of the government exactly what they wanted to convict. She determined to appeal to the secretary of war. Surely there might be some chance in an appeal to him. And so this morning after a long, timorous glance up and down the long avenue, she had started for the army and navy building.

"Miss Lucille Love—Lucille Love"—The secretary turned the card over and over in his hands while regarding her narrowly the while. "I have heard of you, Miss Love, and of the papers. You may rest assured your story will receive every attention in the conduct of the trial of your father. Certainly you know the nation can ill afford to lose such a man just at this time."

"But you can investigate—my story is strange, unbelievable," she pleaded

"I am Lucille Love, daughter of General Love."

He went to the depths of his emotions. "Then the necklace I sold must have been stolen," he finally cried, his eyes flashing vindictively.

"Sold—this necklace sold—who bought it?"

"A Hugo Loubeque—never heard of a millionaire by such a name, but he had the two hundred thousand to buy it, and I let it go."

"Hugo Loubeque!" Gibson grasped the amazed man by the shoulders and fairly shook answers from him.

Dick Gibson rushed from the establishment finally, an idea in his head which he cursed himself for not having thought of before—the house where he had last seen Lucille. Might not, was not, this mysterious Loubeque the one whose hand he had seen dragging her from the widow?

Breathlessly he darted up to the door and, finding the lock still unrequited dashed inside and up the stairs.

Suddenly he stopped, halted abruptly. He could hear no sound, yet was positive some one was close to him, that he was being watched.

"You wished to see me, sir?"

Silent and suave, his great, brooding eyes holding a light of melancholy and sorrow such as the young officer had never witnessed before, appearing as if by magic and now facing him, was Hugo Loubeque.

"Loubeque," he stammered.

The international spy bowed gravely, his eyes still fastened upon the young man before him.

And as his eyes sought the carpet, away from the magnetic power of the man, all the rage returned to the young officer. This man was the one who had taken his sweetheart. His eyes roved the room, lighting upon a pair of broadsword crossed upon the wall. He caught the smile on the spy's face when he looked again at him and knew his thoughts had been read.

"What have you done with Lucille Love?" he cried.

"Miss Love," murmured Loubeque, his voice taking on a sliding note that fairly tortured the listener's ears. "Miss Love is on a warship bound for Washington, I believe."

"You know a man was murdered in her suit that she was arrested as a hotel sneak thief?"

"Miss Love has been through many more trying situations than that," answered Loubeque slowly, "since she piloted herself against me."

"Pitted herself against you! Then it was you who stole the papers?"

"Quite so," Hugo Loubeque turned upon his heel, but the iron grip of the officer was upon his shoulder, whirling him about so that their faces met.

Like a panther Gibson leaped across the floor, seizing the broadsword.

Easily, by wrist alone, Loubeque played with the man. His eye held no expression save that of one looking very far away, sad, mournful, distant. That look of indifference only served to madden Gibson doubly.

Furiously he lunged, when suddenly the blade of his adversary whirled, sending out scores of scintillating lights as it danced in the air above his head. He fell back as from a blow, his wrist numbed and deadened by the wrench that had carried the handle of the heavy sword from his grasp. Hugo Loubeque had dropped his own blade to the floor and was studying him quietly, no glimmer in his eyes, Gibson glared over his head. The sword was still swaying from side to side from the fury with which it had been driven into the low hanging wooden beam overhead, instinctively his hand reached to recover his weapon when Loubeque laid a hand of iron upon his shoulder.

"That will do," he cried sternly. "Be a man, sir." Again that mellowed light drove the light of anger from his eyes. His lips opened and the voice of him was little more than a sigh: "Such a man as Miss Lucille Love deserves."

Gibson looked at him, startled, aghast. Once more Loubeque would have spoken when, from below stairs, came the shrill scream of a police man's whistle, followed almost instantly by a rush of feet upon the stairs.

He placed the ivory box in her hands.

Impulsively, "I know that, but if you would only investigate you would find that I tell the truth."

"All details of your story have been proved," Miss Love, gravely, and, as she swept the cabinet minister, "but there is no evidence in your father's favor. What would be the motive for Hugo Loubeque?"

"Revenge," she answered quickly. "Can't you see?"

"If it could be proved!"

He was interrupted by the entrance of a clerk with a card. The secretary frowned, then listened to the whispered explanation of the man, a slight smile upon his face.

"Mr. Gibson—formerly Lieutenant Gibson—"

Lucille sprang to her feet, all confusion. The last time she had seen her sweetheart he had repulsed her.

Gibson entered quickly, halted abruptly at sight of the woman he loved standing there, with the gentle love light in her eyes and the reproach of a maid offended in her form. Slowly, very slowly, he placed the little ivory box in her hands, the box which Hugo Loubeque had given to him. She looked at him inquiringly and his lips parted.

"From Hugo Loubeque with hopes for forgiveness and reconciliation."

With trembling fingers she pried open the delicate lid, then gave a sharp cry of disappointment that was echoed by one of mute admiration and amazement from the others, turning the box upside down, the wonderful ruby necklace fell upon the floor, every blood red facet darting a thousand threats at them. But Lucille's eyes told the necklace was true. Instead they fastened upon a little slip of paper in the bottom of the box.

Christmas

A Story by Zona Gale

OUR CHRISTMAS GIFT TO YOU—THIS GEM OF HUMOR AND PATHOS—

This New Serial Story CHRISTMAS DO NOT FAIL TO READ IT

"Page from diary of Hugo Loubeque. 'In account with General Sumpter Love for dismissal from West Point and robbing me of Lucille—'

"Theft committed!"

She read no farther, but, snubbing with the abandonment of a child, placed the page from the diary in the hands of the secretary of war.

"I see," he murmured quietly. "You say, Mr. Gibson, Hugo Loubeque gave this to you to hand to Miss Love?"

"Yes, sir."

"If you do not object, Miss Love," he said to the girl, with a little knowing smile in the direction of her sweetheart, "I shall take this immediately before the board of inquiry. I think, with your story and the verifications I have gathered of its details, it will not only clear your father, but also return to the army a young lieutenant who had been named captain at the time this unfortunate incident occurred."

Evidently, important official officer though he was, the secretary expected no answer, for he did not even glance back at the couple, who were so forgetful of etiquette as to ignore him. But Lucille had her arms close, close about the neck of Richard Gibson, and that young man was only mindful of his burden at the moment.

At his desk General Sumpter Love smiled as the murmur of two voices came to him. His eyes closed wearily and his head sank forward upon his chest—a vision of dreams—dreams of the long ago. It had been hard, giving up in another, this daughter whom he had only just regained. And yet—and yet—there was another Lucille—

"You called, father?"

Lucille's arms were about his neck, just as they had been about his neck that other time in Manila when she coaxed his consent to her marriage to Gibson. And Gibson, with the straps of a captain, was standing once more in the doorway.

His hand rose to pat the rose petal cheek of her. Then his fingers encountered the necklace about her throat. As though he had struck a snake, his hand recoiled.

"Loubeque's necklace?" he muttered.

The arms about his neck tightened. The cheek was pressed against his own.

"Poor, poor Hugo," she murmured. "Poor, poor man who did not know there was no room for hate in a world that might be filled with love. Poor, poor man!"

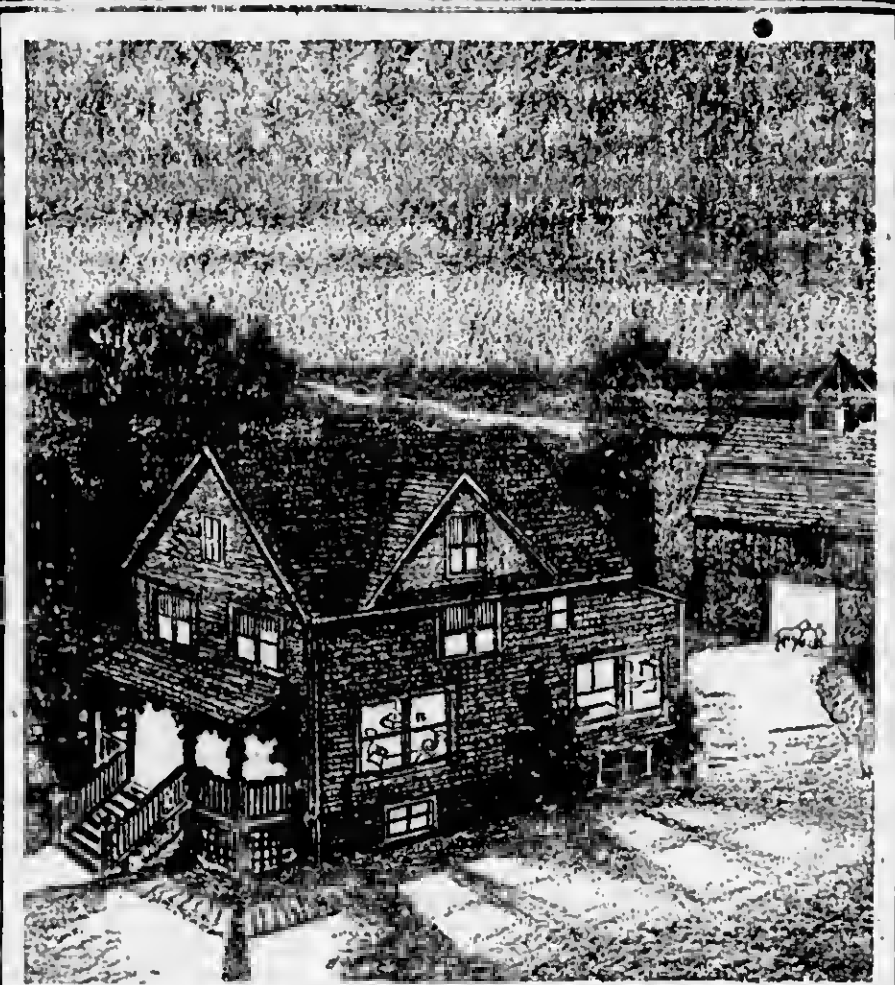

The three were silent. There was no room for words. Ghosts were all about—whispering, soothing ghosts that murmured over and over again—

"Lucille—Lucille!"

Ghosts that had in echo from the lips of a world weary man directly under the earth from them—Hugo Loubeque, none with his ghosts that murmured always—

"Lucille—Lucille!"

"The end."

Light Your House and Barns—Cook Your Meals With Home-Made Acetylene

And Make Your Acetylene With a Pilot Lighting Plant

Pilot plants make Acetylene automatically a little at a time as you use it in your gas cooking stove and in your lights distributed throughout your house, your barns and out-buildings. You simply fill the generator with the gas-producing stone, "Union Carbide" and water about once a month.

Pilot plants are approved by The National Board of Fire Insurance Underwriters.

All told, over 250,000 country homes are using Acetylene made the Pilot way.

A complete Pilot plant, consisting of generator, pipes—hand-some light fixtures and gas cook stove, can be installed in any country home in a couple of days' time.

Such a plant is a permanent improvement and will furnish you with the cheapest, safest and most practical light and fuel now available for country home requirements.

Write for our illustrated catalogs and descriptive booklets giving all the facts.

A THANKSGIVING DAY "SERMON"

MY friend, Thanksgiving day comes, by statute, once a year. To the honest man it comes as frequently as the heart of gratitude will allow, which may mean every day, or once in seven days, at least.

Now, I propose, my friends, to state a few of the things for which we are thankful for—when we are in the mood, of course, for when we are not inclined who can make us give thanks for anything? We should be thankful that we know more than anybody else, for we are not capable of talking and giving lectures upon every subject ever asked of?

We should be thankful that we are all good looking. Alas! we? Just look around this audience and see if you can "spot" the person who is, in his own estimation, not good looking. It would be a curious study, to be sure, to find in what particular some people are good looking, but it's none of our personal business if a man has curly hair, eyes like a new moon, nose like a split pear, mouth like a pair of wattle frons, chin like a Dutch churn, neck like a gander's and a body like a crow-bar. Comparatively he is good looking—that is, there are homelier men and animals than he—so everybody is good looking and has a right to put on airs.

We should be thankful that we are more pious than any one else. That we are pious is evident from the manner in which we treat poor creatures who have most unfortunately been driven to sin: from the fact that we pay our preachers occasionally and always require them to be unexceptionable in all respects; from the fact that we don't work on Sunday and eat the blithering which has made the women folks almost blind to death to prepare. Who is the person in this room who is not pious? I do not care to know him for the present.

We should be thankful that this world was especially created for our own comfort, convenience and use; that we have a perfect right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, no matter if these do conflict with some other person's wishes and happiness and rights.

I hope you will thank me for this recognition of your good qualities, your rights, your glory and trust. I shall be permitted to say of myself when I retire:

"Here lies an honest young man."

Thanksgiving Among the Greeks.

The Greeks held the grandest feast of all the year in honor of Demeter, the goddess of the harvest, and the Romans, who borrowed most of their customs from the Greeks, also held a grand celebration in honor of the same goddess, whose name they changed to Ceres. They went in long processions to the fields, where they engaged in music sports and crowned all of their household gods with flowers. Both of these feasts were held in September.

THANKSGIVING.

Come forth, come forth, to the feast of the

As our aires were went in the days of old;

The reapers are home with their harvest

And the cullers of fruit our vaults

With the wealth of the orchard's freight of gold.

Obtain a piece of bluish card and make a hole in it with a needle; then place a very small object—say, for instance, a tiny insect—on the end of a pin or gum to a strip of glass and view this object through the needle hole in the card at about an inch from it. The insect will appear quite distinct and about ten times larger than its natural size. If, however, you suddenly withdraw the card without disturbing the object the latter will be invisible. The reason is that the naked eye cannot see at so short a distance as an inch, but the card with the hole enables the eye to approach within an inch and to see not only well, but, as it were, ten times better than with naked vision.

Dog Ghosts.

The phantom dog specter was one of the hardest of old English superstitions. Almost every county had its black dog which haunted its lonely spots and was the dread of every native. Most of them were regarded as devils, but some were held to be the spirits of human beings transformed thus as a punishment. Lady Howard, a Devon notable of the days of James I., for instance, was said to be compelled to haunt Okehampton in the form of a dog as a punishment for her cruelty to her daughter.

No Exceptions.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON

"SMITTEN OF GOD, AFFLICTED."

Mark 15:23-37—Nov. 29.

"Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted."—Isaiah 53:4.

DURING the three years of His ministry, the Savior had given forth His vitality freely in the healing of diseases. Besides this, He had been on a constant strain without sleep from the time He had sent His disciples to prepare the Passover. Now, condemned to crucifixion by those for whom He had sacrificed His Heavenly home and glory, He was additionally required to carry His own cross. He did so, until finally His weakness hindered, and a passing farmer was compelled to assist.

Where were Peter, James, John and the others, that they did not volunteer assistance? Doubtless they were deterred by fear. Crowding around the Savior were weeping women. Turning to them, He said, "Weep not for Me, but for yourselves and your children." The Master's words respecting their seeking the mountains and hills for protection are assumed by some Bible students to refer to the great trouble which came upon the Jews thirty-seven years later, in the destruction of Jerusalem; and that this trouble fore-shadowed the greater distress which will occur in the close of this Gospel Age.

"They Parted My Garments."

While Jesus was dying, the stony-hearted Roman soldiers cast lots for His seamless robe, dividing His other garments amongst themselves. The attitude of the world is further represented in the two empires who were executed at the same time, one on either side of Jesus, above whose head was the inscription, "King of the Jews." One of them called out to Jesus as a fraud, hater of His people, and that He could not have been the Savior of the world!

The other thief befriended Jesus, declaring that He had been unjustly accused. Turning to Jesus, he expressed his faith in our Savior by asking a reward for his kind words. He said, "Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy Kingdom." The poor thief knew that Jesus claimed to be a King, and recognized that He was worthy to be one, so noble of character and of appearance was He. What if, finally, to the great beyond, this One should prove to be Messiah? The thief would at least tell the truth, declare a word in His defense and ask kind remembrance if this One ever reached His kindly power.

Jesus' answer seems to have been very generally misunderstood in the past. We thought that He promised the thief to be with Him that same day in the Kingdom. Yet we know that according to other Scriptures Jesus Himself was not in the Kingdom that day, but in Joseph's new tomb; that He did not rise from the dead, from Sheol, Hades, the tomb, until the third day; and that even then He said to Mary, "I have not yet ascended to My Father." Evidently Jesus could not have meant that He and the thief would be together in Paradise that day.

Paradise, lost six thousand years ago, will be restored by Messiah in His glorious Kingdom. The thief has been sleeping in death, waiting for the time when Messiah's Kingdom will come. Jesus' answer was in full accord with this fact—"Verily, I say unto thee to day (this day when nothing seems more unlikely than that I shall ever have a Kingdom), thou shalt be with Me in Paradise."

Jesus' Kingdom will quickly turn the world into a Paradise; and in the resurrection of the hosts that have fallen asleep in death, that thief will be remembered by the Master. Undoubtedly a great blessing will then be his; for his comforting words spoken on the cross indicated a tender, contrite heart, such as the Savior's Dying Words.

The Master's cry, "My God! My God! Why hast Thou forsaken Me?" attests that He endured to the very limit the sinner's penalty, which was not merely death, but loss of fellowship with God. In taking the sinner's place, He most for at least a moment have the full experience of the sinner's alienation.

The cry, "It is finished!" reminds us of His statement on the day previous, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be finished!" His words, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit," remind us that He was laying down His life. He had not forfeited His right to life, as had Adam. Therefore His "I am finished" speaks of it as His own spirit, His own right to life merely surrendered for the time, under the Divine promise that it should be given Him in the resurrection.

Important Meeting of Horticulturists.

The forty-fourth annual meeting of the Michigan State Horticultural Society is to be held December 1st, 2nd and 3rd at Kalamazoo. The officers of the society have been busy for months making plans for this meeting and it is expected to be the largest and most important meeting that the society has ever held. Fruit growers are expected from all parts of Michigan and other states and the program covers three full days, with one evening session and an annual banquet. Practical talks will be given by successful fruit growers from Michigan and from New York state and a very large exhibit of horticultural products and spraying material is to be made. Every up-to-date fruit grower should be at this meeting. The secretary-treasurer is R. A. Smyth of Benton Harbor. Complete programs are now ready and can be obtained upon application to him.

AN OLD THANKSGIVING FAVORITE

By LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

OVER the river and through the wood To grandfathers' house we go.

The horse knows the way To carry the sleigh Through the white and drifted snow.

Over the river and through the wood— Oh, how the wind does blow!

It stings the toes And bites the nose As ever the ground we go.

Over the river and through the wood To have a first rate play.

He'll ring the bells, "Ting-a-ling-ding!" Hurrah for Thanksgiving day!

Over the river and through the wood Trot fast, my dapple gray!

Spring over the ground Like a hunting hound, For this is Thanksgiving day!

Over the river and through the wood And straight through the barnyard gate.

We seem to go Extremely slow— Extremely slow—

It is so hard to walk!

Over the river and through the wood— Now grandfathers' can I spy?

Hurrah for the fun! Is the pumpkin pie In the parlor?

Hurrah for the pumpkin pie!

FIRE BLIGHT RAVAGES.

Wisconsin Orchards Are Suffering From an Epidemic.

One of the worst epidemics of fire blight that ever visited Wisconsin is gaining headway throughout many sections of the state this season, according to J. G. Moore, horticulturist at the University of Wisconsin College of Agriculture.

The presence of the disease is first indicated by the dying back of the leaves, which turn reddish or dark brown, while the bark is shrunken and shriveled. In many cases if the bark at the lowest portion of the infected area is peeled off, the disease will be found extending internally far below the point where its presence is made known at the surface. In this manner it makes rapid but insidious headway before the true extent of its damage is realized.

Different varieties of apples vary in their susceptibility to fire blight. In Wisconsin the Yellow Transparent, Wealthy, Tetofsky and Transcendent are most seriously affected.

The disease is caused by bacteria which gain entrance to the plant tissues through the flowers or by means of wounds on the surface, particularly those made by insects. The method of the development of the disease is such that spraying cannot control it. The only way of fighting the trouble is the removal of infected parts.

These are usually removed once or twice during the season—once in summer and again in the fall before the leaves are dropped. Mr. Moore states that it is not advisable to leave the infected parts on the trees until the annual spring pruning, as it is then difficult to detect all infected twigs in cutting out the blight it is advisable to go at least four to six inches below any signs of the disease and burn all parts removed.

Blight canker or fire blight starting in small twigs and buds, causing the death of tissues at the base of such points, may be removed with the pruning knife. In removing dead tissues it is well to dip the pruning knife in strong formalin or corrosive sublimate solution in order not to spread the disease to other trees. Wounds caused by cutting out blight canker may be disinfected with formalin and the surface painted with white lead.

THANKSGIVING AT THE WHITE HOUSE

"Hail, to the chief!" That patriotic line of the patriotic hymn certainly applies at this season to the national bird—the turkey, and not the eagle. From the sun kissed sands of the gulf to the snow clad mountain crests of Alaska, from the burning deserts of Arizona to the bleak, stormy wastes of Maine, the turkey is king. Millions of Americans will pay tribute. On the plate dinner table of the farmhouse, on the silver laden board of the city banker, in the cabin, in the mines and cars whirling along their tracks of steel, beneath the glow of electric lights and the sounds of music floating from behind palms or with the gleam of the tallow dip, the sovereign is the same, proudly residing

IN THE STATE DINING ROOM OF THE WHITE HOUSE.

In his bed of brown gravy, his portly sides crackling with deliciousness.

"Thanksgiving is a great day at the White House. The turkey intended for the president each year is a magnificent one, weighing about twenty-eight pounds. It reaches the White House a few days before the great dinner by express, already killed. When roasted it is truly a sight to make Lucullus' mouth water with envy.

The turkey is cooked in a kitchen which is a model for cleanliness and comfort. On one side of the room is an immense range, at least twenty feet in length, and above hangs a large iron hood, which carries off any odor. The tables are two in number and covered with blue. Above them is a hanging rail full of hooks, from which depend rows of shining napkins of all sizes. The floor is covered with blue. The place is lighted by electricity. There are three cooks, but the number of "help" at the White House is sixteen, which includes the maids, laundresses and waiters.

The dishes are washed in a patent outfit. By means of a chain water the metals are taken right up to the boiler's pantry, which adjoins the dining room and contains the presses full of china of all administrations and of every variety of beautiful design. There are historic sets which have come down from the earliest days, for nearly every president's wife has added to the collection. Of china used by Lincoln there are about 100 pieces left, the lighting and coloring being quaint and the dish bordered by a rippling design inside of which is a broad band of color.

There are about the same number of pieces left of a set which was bought and used by the Grants. Roosevelt paid the sum of $22,000 for a set of white and gold china, which numbered 3,000 pieces. One of the prettiest sets is that purchased by Mrs. Benjamin Harrison. The edge is a wide band of blue, and in the white center of the plate appears an exquisitely dainty picture of the American eagle resting on a shield.

The dish sets are all decorated with painted pictures of all kinds of specimens of the funny tribe, and the china used for game has pretty pictures of wild fowl in the air or standing among the reeds. There is even a plate which once belonged to the Confederate White House and one given to Washington by the Society of the Cincinnati. All of the silver at the White House is marked "The President's House."

Other than having a monster turkey to grace his table, the president's dinner will be about the same as that of any other well-to-do American—Washington Star.

When the Ancient Jews Gave Thanks. Three thousand years ago witnessed the Jewish feast of tabernacles, with its magnificent rituals, melodious choirs and picturesque festivities. For eight days the people ceased their work to "eat, drink and be merry." During the three great feasts gathered in and around Jerusalem for several days, living in booths formed of the branches of the olive, pine, myrtle and palm and decorated with fruits and flowers. Grand public pageants were held, and, in addition to these, every household had its worship, its sacrifices and its banquet.

WILL BENEFIT ENTIRE COUNTY

Many People Favor Building Roads as Soon as Possible.

VanPelt Believes a Cheap Road is the Most Expensive One in the End.

Mr. Arnold's article published in the Boyne City Citizen of recent date is just what I expected to hear from some first-class, well-educated farmer. He has certainly made things very plain from his standpoint and no one can criticize in the least what he has said. If the road should be built as they are now building it, a little here and a little there, there never would be any incentive to build good roads diverging from it, but if a permanent and durable road could be built all around Pine Lake all at one time better roads would be built from it, leading to all points, as a natural consequence. The great benefit to be derived from this road is the thousands of people that it would bring into Charlevoix county for the summer, who naturally would buy property, not on the driveway, but find locations such as Mr. Arnold says divide Pine Lake from Bear Lake. The whole country cannot help but be benefited by it, and were I a business man and owned Charlevoix county without doubt the first thing I would do would be to build this road, the same as a man will put out a street in addition in a town or in a city.

I think Mr. Arnold bears down a little too hard on the men who have automobiles, because they are here to stay just exactly the same as horses supplanted oxen in our county thirty or forty years ago, and ten or fifteen years from to-day more farmers will be using automobiles to market their crops than they will horses.

Now, what appealed to me when I first began this propaganda was that good roads which would last fifty to one hundred years would reduce the taxes materially on my property as compared with building them the way they are now and rebuilding them in a couple of years. I have been asked what I thought of the supervisors voting to build a few more miles of road this year. I think it was the proper thing for them to do. I do not see how they could have done otherwise. They want good roads, and until we all see the advantage of building the road all at once, in one or two years at the outside, instead of continuing a mile or two on each road as we are now, there never will be a time when there will be a continuous good road from one end to the other. If it is ever to be done, it has to be done all at one time in order that we may get the good out of it.

I am continually receiving articles and all kinds of literature from people who have read these articles. One says that a cement road is best, and another that a brick road is the proper thing. We, of course, know that brick roads have lasted twenty or twenty-five years and that cement roads are lasting well where they are built, and we all know that the macadam road does not last. In fact it cannot last and you cannot build it so it will last, and the upkeep is a great deal more than any other road. Probably the upkeep of the brick road would be less, as I know places where it has lasted ten years without a dollar having been spent on it, and with much heavier traffic than we would have.

Really, aside from the taxes, it is nothing to me whether these roads are built or not, but I have lived in Charlevoix thirty-one years, and expect to live there thirty-one years longer, and I believe it is the best county in the world, not in the state, but in the world.

I hope others will write and give their views the same as Mr. Arnold did. The way to get the meat out of the nut is to crack it. We will never know what is inside if we do not. There may be a big fat worm there instead of meat for all we know.

Now, good people, talk it over and let us do what the majority think best, but bear in mind one thing—their taxes, with roads being built as they are now, will be double later on. The only way to do on the road proposition is to build the best you can when you first build. If there is any merit in what I have said, let's discuss this proposition and get at it, and if there is not, abandon the idea. Personally, I can get over the road as well as anybody, but I am talking for the general good.

Very truly yours,
George H. VanPelt.

MAJOR-DOUGHERTY

Well Known Couple Unite in Marriage Thanksgiving Evening.

A quiet wedding was solemnized in this city Thursday, November 26, at 4 o'clock, when Miss Mary Dougherty daughter of Mr. Wm. Dougherty of 111 E. Upright Ave., became the bride of Mr. Max Major of Grand Rapids. Rev. Quinton Walker of the Methodist Episcopal church officiated in the ceremony, which was witnessed by the family only.

The bride was becomingly gowned in pearl color satin and carried no flowers. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Marshall. Many useful wedding gifts were received by the bridal couple. The bride is a well known young lady of this city, who was born and raised here. The groom has only lived in this city a little over a year, but has made a host of friends during his short residence here. The happy couple have a host of friends who join in wishing them a happy prosperous married life. They are at home to their many friends at 202 Michigan Ave. The out-of-town guests were Mr. James Dougherty, brother of the bride, from Frankfort, Michigan, and Mrs. August Natzel and daughter, Blanche, of Elberta, Michigan, Mrs. Natzel is a sister of the bride.

The Cleaners will give a Penny Social, Wednesday, evening, December 9, at the Marion Town Hall. Everyone invited.—Adv. 481.

Petoskey Poultry Show.

All entries for the Emmet County poultry show must be in the hands of the secretary of the association before midnight, December 5. This rule will be enforced, as the association is a member of the American Poultry Association and is governed by their rules. The show will be held this year in the Hub building on Lake street, December 9, 10, 11 and 12. It is reported that quite a number of Charlevoix birds will be entered.

THEATRICAL

War Was Predicted by Mysterious Marie.

During the year of 1913, while Mysterious Marie was touring the west, she was asked by one of her clients how long before the world would enjoy universal peace. In answering, Marie stated that within one year, a death in the royal family of Europe, would cause the old world to be thrown in one of the most horrible conflicts ever recorded in history. She furthermore stated that a monarchy, heretofore considered as a leading military or civil power, would declare itself the ruler of the world, and defying confederation.

Marie's wonderful power which enables her to peer into the future and foretell coming events, is startling. Her advice regarding investments, health, missing friends or relatives, lost articles, love affairs and marriage, has gained for her many friends and admirers from every station in life. Marie will appear each and every night at the Majestic Theatre, as an added attraction with the Lillian Lyons Co.

The Lillian Lyons Stock Company will be at the Majestic all next week, beginning Monday, December 7th.

This company is an old, well-known organization with a good reputation and offers on their program such plays as "Camille" and "Paid in Full."

One show a night. Doors open at 7:30.

Last Boat of Season.

The last boat of the Northern Michigan Transportation Company out of Chicago for Charlevoix, Petoskey and Harbor Springs cleared from Chicago Monday evening. Navigation, as far as the upper lake trade is concerned, will be closed for the season at the end of this trip of the S. S. Missouri.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage licenses issued by County Clerk Lewis during the past week:

Max Major, age 41, and Mary Dougherty, age 23, both of Charlevoix; Leslie Clarence LeMoore, age 26, of Hayes township, and Maud Ethel Cummings, age 21, of Grand Rapids; Arthur G. Zipp, age 21, and Bessie M. Tiltonson, age 19, both of Bay Shore.

Densmore-Hamilton.

J. E. Densmore of Boyne Falls and Miss Almina Hamilton of the same place were united in marriage by Rev. Quinton Walker November 25th. Mr. Densmore is the congenial agent at the freight depot. Miss Hamilton is popular among her many friends.

HOW THE WAR WILL AFFECT US

Special Tax on Various Articles Commenced Last Tuesday.

Local Banks Taxed $1 Per Each $1000 of Capital, Surplus and Undivided Profits.

Charlevoix bankers, insurance agents, pool room owners and moving picture theatre proprietors have received or are awaiting information from the government as regards the war tax rates which became effective Tuesday.

Local banks have already been notified and have received the price list from the government of revenue stamps for various purposes. One banker said: "There is a stamp on everything, we use except drinking water and air. So do not be surprised when you are asked to put a two cent revenue stamp on any note under $100 and two cents per hundred for notes over $100." Banks are required to pay a tax of $1 for each $1000 capital, surplus and undivided profits. When you make a deed where the consideration is over $100 you must step into a bank and buy a stamp to put on it, otherwise the document will not be legal. There is a $50 fine in case you forget to purchase said stamp and are caught.

Local moving picture house owners have not yet received any notice of the amount of their tax. It is understood that theatres having a seating capacity of not more than 250 will be required to pay a tax of $25. The owners of billiard or pool halls will have to pay a tax of $5 for each table. This tax is considered heavy by local pool room owners.

There will be a tax on chewing gum and on perfume, talcum powder, face creams and other articles popular with women and the rate is from one-eighth to five-eighths of one cent for each 15 cent value. The war tax on chewing gum will be four cents for every dollar retail value. The tax probably will not increase the retail price, as these prices have become standard.

Charlevoix insurance companies have received notice from their headquarters to immediately purchase stamps and be prepared to use them. On marine, fire and inland insurance a charge of one half cent for each dollar of premium is made and the stamps must be affixed to the policy. Stamps may be purchased from the United States revenue office at Grand Rapids.

Annual Fur Sale Friday and Saturday, December 4th and 5th.—J. L. Crane. Adv. 481.

Held Mask Party.

Friday evening the Dorcas Society of the Baptist church held a mask party at the home of Miss Pearl Booth. Practically all of the colonial characters were represented and the evening was a most enjoyable one. About twenty took part in the evening's entertainment, after which light refreshments were served. Those taking part were invited to repeat the entertainment the following evening at the home of Mrs. Maggie Allard.

For Sale or Rent.

Furnished house for sale or rent. Centrally located, modern throughout. 102 State street. Inquire Myrtis Young & Son, Charlevoix. Adv. F441.

New Serial Story.

The opening chapters of the Courier's new serial story, "Christmas," commences in this issue. "Christmas" is the story of a small community which, stricken by poverty through hard times, decides to forego the celebration of Christmas. The hardships fall mainly upon the children, who realize that they will be without Christmas trees, good things to eat, and above all, gifts. Read the opening chapters—it will prove well worth your time.

Turkey Shoot.

Attend the turkey shoot at Atwood, December 12th. 22, 32, 25-20, 32-20, in a class by themselves. Shot guns, 12 gauge, shells will be furnished for shot guns and large rifles in 3 classes. Shoot will begin at 9 o'clock and will be conducted by Mr. Lawrence VanDusen and Mr. John Parsons.—Adv. 481.

Death Hourly Looked For.

E. R. VanLennan, rural route carrier on No. 4, who has been seriously ill for some weeks, is reported very low at his home on Mason street. "Van's" condition changed for the worse Tuesday morning and his death is looked for at any moment.

USE CAUTION IN MAILING

Your Christmas Packages and Avoid Many Delays.

Postmaster Finucan Tells Patrons of Post Office
About Use of Stickers on Mail.

Postmaster Finucan issues a caution against the misuse of Christmas stamps on mail, and in the desire to avoid complications which delay holiday mail the following instructions have been issued:

No adhesive stamps, or imitations of stamps of any form or design whatever other than lawful postage stamps, shall be affixed to the address side of domestic mail matter, but a such adhesive stamps, provided they do not in form and design resemble lawful stamps and do not bear numerals, may be affixed to the reverse side of domestic mail matter.

All domestic mail matter bearing on the address side adhesive stamps or imitation stamps other than lawful postage stamps will be returned to the sender if known; otherwise they will be forwarded to the division of dead letters.

The post office department has again consented to the issue of Christmas seals in aid of charitable institutions, etc., and the attention of the public is particularly directed to the fact that the department cannot permit the affixing on the face or address side of letters or other mail matter of such seals, although there is no objection to them being placed on the back of letters or other mail matter as stickers, provided they do not bear numerals or indication of value. Letters or other mail matter bearing these stamps on the face or address side will be returned to the senders as violating the postal regulations.

Perry Mason, Ward Cennett and Cora Driggett are anxious to sell you a season ticket for the Lecture Course—Adv. 481.

Increase in Passenger Rates.

Passenger rates to all points out of the state were increased commencing with Tuesday. It has been known for some time that this change would be placed in force on December 1, and Charlevoix people will now have to pay increased fare to all cities out of Michigan. The increase in the fare to Chicago will be about $1.85. No increase is to be made in fares between points within the state.

K. OF P. FEED

Wives of the Members of the Order to Banquet
Their Husbands.

The castle hall of Pine Lake Lodge, No. 122, Knights of Pythias, will be the scene of another evening's entertainment and feed when the wives and sweethearts of the members of the order give a turkey supper Thursday evening, December 3rd.

The ladies have been planning for some time to repay their husbands for the good hanquets they have been invited to in the past, and on the above mentioned evening the hall will be turned over to them to do as they see fit. If you should happen to have a turkey left over from Thanksgiving, our advice would be to place it under lock and key.

Grape Fruit 4c each; sliced Hawaiian Pine Apple 15c can. Mrs. B. W. Miller.—Adv. 481.

Another Small Blaze.

About 7:00 o'clock Thanksgiving evening fire was discovered in the home of Peter McCafferty on the south side. The blaze originated in the kitchen, which was badly burned. Prompt work of the fire department extinguished the blaze. The loss was small and fully covered by insurance.

You will never know when your house will be discovered on fire. Better let Myrtie Young & Son attend to your insurance.—Adv. 481.

Auction Sale.

Page 8 of this issue contains the auction sale of Fred Swanson, who lives four miles south of Charlevoix on the state road. Mr. Swanson is about to return to his old home in the upper peninsula and will dispose of all stock and farm implements. The sale will commence at 1:00 sharp on Tuesday, December 8. W. E. Byers auctioneer, F. A. Butler clerk.

KILLS OWN SON

Elmira Farmer Strikes Him Over Head With Club
After Family Quarrel.

William Sides, a farmer living near Elmira, now lies in the county jail at Gaylord on the charge of killing his own son.

The quarrel first started after Sides had gone to town and stayed too long to suit his wife. Upon his return she upbraided him, which resulted in a bitter quarrel, in which the son joined. After the evening meal Sides went to the barn and hitched up a team to drive to the village, but before departing re-entered the house and the scrap was resumed. The son, it is stated, demanded that his father return to him his watch and necktie which he had borrowed. Sides handed over the articles with some remark to which the boy responded with spirit, and started to take off his coat. The older man's wrath broke forth and, picking up a stick of wood, he struck the boy, knocking him to the floor.

The father then refused to take the boy to town for medical assistance, and he started to town with his mother. Twice in a file he fell down, but finally reached town and was taken to a doctor's house, where he died in a few minutes.

Sides was arrested and when told his son was dead did not show the slightest emotion.

Special for Saturday—Fresh home-made Peanut candy at 15c per pound. Bert Beaudoin.—Adv. 481.

Stricken With Apoplexy.

Word was received last week from Phoenix, Arizona, that "Joe" Lewis, for many years a resident of this county, had been suddenly stricken with apoplexy and that his condition was of such a serious nature that his death would undoubtedly occur by the time the letter reached here. Mr. Lewis and wife left for the west last fall to spend the winter with relatives. No information has been received as to his condition since the first letter was sent.

Additional Locals

Miss Blanche Tooley, Catharine Fitch and Clarence Wood drove to Boyne City Saturday, where they remained until Monday, visiting Mr. and Mrs. C. Tooley.

Miss Mary Finucan returned home Tuesday morning after spending a week in Detroit, visiting her sister, Miss Clara Finucan, who is teaching in that city.

Miss Ruth Mitchell returned Tuesday from Detroit, where she has been spending the past week as the guest of her sisters, Misses Jane and Isabelle Mitchell.

The Women's Missionary Society of the Methodist church will hold its Christmas sale all day Wednesday, December 9th, at Floyd S. Bettes' store. Come and buy your Christmas gifts.

The annual Missionary Society of the Congregational church will meet with Mrs. Harry Nicholls on Wednesday afternoon December 9th. Judge Correll will talk of the "Mission of Sunday Schools."

Miss Lily McCann of Ilig Rapids, Miss Margaret McCann of Petoskey, Mrs. Julia Moore and Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Eagleton spent Thanksgiving as guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Eagleton.

The last week of mild weather has been a great help in the construction work at the Beach Hotel. The first floor of the new addition has been laid and the work is being pushed as rapidly as possible.

Cards were received last week announcing the birth of a daughter, Ruth Elmer, to Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Law of Riverdale, California. Mrs. Law was Miss Clara M. Eaton, a native of and former resident of Charlevoix.

According to a communication received by Supervisor F. J. Meech last Monday, all objections to the tax assessments spread by the various supervisors have been withdrawn and the assessments as originally made are ordered spread.

Unique Window Display.

The south window of the Charlevoix Hardware Co.'s store contains one of the best window displays seen in a long time. A locomotive has been constructed out of a box stove, drum, pipe, files, etc., with wheels of lawn mowers. "Casey Jones" with his hand on the throttle is in the cab, and the tender contains plenty of coal for a long journey. Glance into the window when you pass its worth looking at.

WEST MICH. PIKE REPORT

Charlevoix County Pays More Than Her Share of Expenses.

Four Recommendations Made by Secretary for Carrying on Work.

Louis H. Conger, corresponding secretary of the West Michigan Pike Association, made his annual report at a meeting of the association held in Muskegon on the 20th inst. The official report occupies two columns in a Muskegon paper and gives a great deal of detailed information regarding the activities of the association to date.

Approximately $1,300 was subscribed for the work of the association for 1914 and less than $100 of the amount pledged is still uncollected, which the secretary considers a splendid showing. Fourteen counties participated in the work and the secretary has, by an elaborate method of dividing the cost, figured the amount that each county should pay its just share. The advertising in the Blue Book cost $187.87 and, according to the secretary, each county's share was $13. The signboarding of the pike with 1,000 steel signs cost $155.76 and each county's share is placed at $11. The pike tour cost $208.40 and each county is charged with $15. The 5,000 booklets issued cost $603.43 and the county cost for this service is based upon the amount of space given to the several counties—that is, a county having but one page and having only a few cuts is charged with less than a county occupying several pages and having numerous cuts.

Of the fourteen counties participating in the pike work Muskegon contributed the most, it paying in $211. Leelanau came second with a contribution of $155; Manistee third, $133; Grand Traverse, fourth, $100, and Berrien county fifth, with $94. According to the secretary's figures, five of the counties—including Leelanau, Grand Traverse and Charlevoix—paid more than their share of the expenses, and eight of the counties—including Antrim and Benzie—failed to make adequate contributions.

The secretary makes four recommendations for the consideration of the members of the association. These are: (1) Continuation of advertising in Auto Blue Book; (2) Extension of signboarding by painting bands on telephone poles and by numbering cross roads; (3) The publication of a second edition of the guide book, using maps in two or three colors; (4) A third trip over the pike with more time for meetings.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE

Friends of Orton VanDeusen Gather at His Home to Celebrate Event.

Orton VanDeusen was very pleasantly surprised Tuesday evening, November 24th, when over 60 of his friends met at his home to remind him of his 38th birthday.

The evening was spent in playing games and other amusements, after which a fine supper was served. Mr. VanDeusen was presented with a fine rocking chair as a token of the esteem in which he is held by his many friends.

Historical Society.

The Charlevoix Historical Society will meet Friday evening, December 4th, with Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Crane.

The following is the program: Music—Mr. Otto Powers will furnish the musical part of the program.

"Current Events"—Dr. Frank H. Wilkinson.

Social intermission.

Music.

"The Shakespeare Country"—Mrs. R. W. Paddock.

LaMore-Cummings.

Leslie Clarence LaMore and Miss Maude Ethel Cummings, both of Bay Shore, were united in marriage at the Congregational parsonage on Thursday evening, November 24th, Rev. C. E. Taggart officiating.

Every progressive citizen should buy a season ticket to the Lecture Course—Adv. 481.

JACKSON MAN EATS A SQUARE MEAL AFTER WAITING 15 YEARS

A. W. Hobbs Ends Stomach Suffering Quickly with Mayr's Wonderful Remedy.

A. W. Hobbs of 1801 East Main St., Jackson, Michigan, after about fifteen years of suffering from derangements of the stomach and digestive tract took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. He got the surprise of his life—and swift relief.

Mr. Hobbs has told his own story in a letter, part of which is given here: "After taking three doses of your stomach remedy I am in perfect condition. I have not felt so well for fifteen years."

"I can eat anything now and it does not distress me. I hope those affected as I was will proceed to get your remedy at once."

The first dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy convinces sufferers of its merit. Many have found only one dose sufficient. Mr. Hobbs' experience is typical. Thousands have taken this remedy with remarkable benefit. It is known everywhere.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver, and bowel troubles and many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations. Many are sure it has saved their lives.

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. One dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleanser ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold by leading druggists everywhere. The first dose must give you absolute satisfaction or we don't want your money. It is sold with the positive understanding your money will be returned by your druggist without quibble or question.

WOMEN'S WOES

Charlevoix Women are Finding Relief at Last.

It does seem that women have more than a fair share of the aches and pains that afflict humanity; they must "keep up," must attend to duties in spite of constantly aching backs, or headaches, dizzy spells, bearing-down pains; they must stoop over when to stoop means torture. They must walk and bend and work with racking pains and many aches from kidney ills. Keeping the kidneys well has spared thousands of women much misery. Read of a remedy for kidneys only that is endorsed by people in this locality.

Mrs. J. Sheridan, 513 Emmet street, Potoskey, Michigan, says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills for distressing backache and other kidney troubles and have been greatly benefited. I was subject to spells of nervousness, accompanied by headaches. Doan's Kidney Pills have given me splendid results. Other members of my family have used this medicine with good results."

"Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Sheridan has. Foster-Milburn Company, Props., Buffalo, N. Y."

Fred Erfourth and his mother went to Horton Bay Saturday afternoon, returning Sunday.

Miss Edna Kane left Friday for Grand Rapids, where she will attend school this winter.

Mrs. Frank Kane returned home on Sunday after spending a few days with Mrs. George Arnold.

Mrs. C. Pant and son took supper at the home of Wesley Howard, south of Charlevoix, last Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Rolla Long and children and Mr. and Mrs. Waters and son visited Mr. and Mrs. Fay Kane Sunday.

Mrs. Bert Gordon returned to her home in Grand Rapids Friday after spending several weeks with her father, Peter Kane.

Louie Roenfelt leaves this morning for Detroit. He is one of the young men who will be greatly missed by the grange, neighbors and all those who have met him.

WILSON

Mrs. Frank Smith, Jr., is on the sick list.

Mrs. A. W. Brown is visiting at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. J. Todd.

Mrs. Maria A. Baker is very ill at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. S. Brintall.

Mrs. John Vrondran, whose arm was broken in a runaway accident, is slowly improving.

The deer hunters from this part have returned, each bringing home a deer. All report a fine time.

COUNTY NORMAL

(Rose Groenink)

Miss Groenink and Miss Thorne are editors this week.

Miss Driggett and Miss Lamiman are housekeepers this week.

Bessie Allen and Lillian Akins visited the Ironton school last Friday.

The normal class had their second observation lesson with the chart class Monday in Miss Jarvis's room.

The members of the normal class who live out of town went home for their Thanksgiving vacation Thursday and Friday.

Fred Gregory was a substitute teacher in the Lincoln school last week Wednesday and last Monday on account of Miss Finucan's absence.

Wednesday afternoon the normal teachers entertained the training room children at a Thanksgiving party. A short program was given and then candy was passed around.

The children in the training room have secured a picture of our nation's flag in the room where our first flag was made by Betsy Ross. The children each paid ten cents toward getting this picture and each child was given a certificate with the same picture on a smaller scale.

C. H. S. NOTES.

Everybody is back in good condition after the Turkey vacation.

A new bulletin board has been placed in the high school assembly room.

The seniors have decided on their class ring, which is of a very novel and neat design.

"Julius Caesar" and "The Vicar of Wakefield" are giving much profit and pleasure to the English 2 and 3 classes.

Harrison Wallace, one of Charlevoix's high school leaders in athletics in 1909, was a visitor to the school as the agent for Qualle & Company, engravers. Mr. Wallace says business is good.

The "Independent" is being used as a textbook for current topics. This practical publication brings the work in history up to date and is of great benefit to the pupils.

Obituary.

(In memory of Mrs. McKee.)

Thou hast travelled the road of life's journey,

Silently gone to thy rest;

We trust thou art peacefully resting

In the beautiful land of the blest.

No more here on earth shall we greet thee

As we pass with a smile on our way;

We trust that ere long we shall meet thee

In the realms of endless day.

Life's fleeting moments are passing;

Silently we pass one by one.

Thou hast gone to the end of the journey;

Thy work here on earth was well done.

SCHOOL OFFICERS MEET

The Annual School Officers' Meetings Have Been Scheduled for This Year.

The county school officers' meetings will be held this year as far as possible throughout the state during December, January and February. During these months there is little pressing work in rural communities and the attendance is consequently the largest. The dates are fixed by the superintendent of public instruction and the calls are sent out by the county school commissioners.

It sometimes happens that because of railroads and train connections school officers are put to considerable expense and inconvenience to attend the meeting in their own county while the meeting place of an adjoining county is easily accessible. In such cases it might be well to note that these officers may attend the meeting in the adjoining county, receiving the same credit and compensation. However, school officers attending meetings outside their own counties should take two certificates of attendance and file one with their school commissioner in order that he may check up and give credit to all districts.

In past years the attendance of school officers has come to be uniformly large. Relatively few boards are not represented. Township clerks, too, are finding the discussions at these meetings helpful to them in their work in connection with the schools. As school officers are now pretty well versed in school law more attention is being directed to lines of school policy, administration, instruction, community work and the vitalizing factors and agencies of the school. This year a cordial invitation is extended to patrons. The meetings should be utilized in the largest possible way to bring together state, county and district in the building up of strong loyal school sentiment that shall increase the support and the efficiency of the school.

HOPE.

Hope is always liberal, and they that trust her promises make little sample of revelling today on the works of tomorrow.—Johnson.

PROLOGUE OF STORY.

A town in the middle west, pinched with poverty, decides that it will have no Christmas, as no one can afford to buy gifts. They perhaps foolishly reckon that the hearthbarnings and the disappointments of the children will be obviated by passing the holiday season over with no observance. How this was found to be simply and wholly impossible, how the Christmas joys and Christmas spirit crept into the little town and into the hearts of its most positive objectors and how Christmas cannot be arbitrated about, make up the basis of a more than ordinarily appealing story. Incidentally it is a little boy who really makes possible a delightful outcome. A thread of romance runs through it all with something of the meaning of Christmas for the individual human being and for the race.

CHAPTER I

Not Keep Christmas at All!

IT was in October that Mary Chavah hurried over the grass of her lawn, and the flame ran free across the place where in spring her wild flower bed was made. Two weeks later she had there a great patch of purple violets. And all Old Trail Town, which takes account of its neighbors' flowers, of the migratory birds, of eclipses, and the like, came to see the wonder.

"Mary Chavah!" said most of the village, "you're the luckiest woman alive. If a miracle was bound to happen, it'd get itself happened to you."

"I don't believe in miracles, though," Mary wrote to Jenny Wing. "These come just natural—only we don't know how."

"That is miracles," Jenny wrote back. "They do come natural—we don't know how."

"At this rate," said Ellen Bourne, one of Mary's neighbors, "you'll be having roses bloom in your yard about Christmas time. For a Christmas present."

"I don't believe in Christmas," Mary said. "I thought you knew that. But I'll take the roses, though, if they come in the winter," she added, with her queer flash of smile.

When it was dusk, or early in the morning, Mary Chavah, with her long shawl over her head, stooped beside the violets and loosened the earth about them with her whole hand, and as if she revered the violets more than finger tips. And she thought:

"Ain't it just as if spring was right over back of the air all the time—and it could come if we knew how to call it? But we don't know."

But, whatever she thought about it, Mary kept in her heart. For it was as if not only spring but new life or some other holy thing were nearer than one thought and had spoken to her, there on the edge of winter.

And Old Trail Town asked itself: "Ain't Mary Chavah the fondest? Look how nice she is about everything—and yet you know she won't never keep Christmas at all. No, sir. She ain't kept a single Christmas in years. I dunno why."

Moving about on his little lawn in the dark, Ebenezer Rule was aware of two deeper shadows before him. They were between him and the leafless lilacs and mulberries that lined the street wall. A moment before he had been looking at that darkness and remembering how once as a little boy he had slept there under the wall and had dreamed that he had a kingdom.

"Who is it?" he asked sharply.

"Hello, Ebenezer," said Simeon Buck. "It's only me and Abel. We're all."

Ebenezer Rule came toward them. It was so dark that they could barely distinguish each other. Their voices had to do it all.

"What you doing out here?" one of the deeper shadows demanded.

"Ob, nothing," said Ebenezer irritably. "Not a thing."

He did not ask them to go in the house, and the three stood awkwardly handling the line like a blind teamster. Then Simeon Buck, who was the Simeon Buck North American Dry Goods Exchange, plunged into what they had come to say.

"Ebenezer," he said with those variations of intonation which mean an effort to be delicate, "is there any likelihood that the factory will open up this fall?"

"No, there ain't," Ebenezer said, like something shutting.

"Nor—nor this winter?" Simeon pursued.

"No, sir," said Ebenezer, like something opening again to shut with a bang.

"Well, if you're sure"—said Simeon. Ebenezer cut him short. "I'm dead sure," he said. "I've turned over my orders to my brother's house in the city. He can handle 'em all and not have to pay his men a cent more wages." And this was as if something had been locked.

"Well," said Simeon, "then, 'Abel, I move we go ahead."

Abel Ames, proprietor of the Granger County Merchandise Emporium ("The A. T. Stewart's of the Middle West," he advertised it), sighed heavily—a vast, triple sigh that seemed to sigh both in and out, as a schoolboy whistles.

"Well," he said, "I hate to do it. But I'll be bluffed if I want to think of paying for a third or so of this town's Christmas presents and carrying them right through the winter. I done that last year, and Fourth of July I had all I could do to keep from wishing most of the crowd Merry Christmas, 'count of their still owing me. I'm a merchant and a citizen, but I ain't no patent adjustable Christmas tree."

"Me neither," Simeon said. "Last year it was no give a alk clonk and a five dollar umbrella and a fur bore and a bushel of kule-knicks to the folks in this town. My name wa'n't on the cards, but it's me that's paid for 'em up to now. I'm sick of it. The storekeepers of this town may make a good thing out of Christmas, but they'd ought to get some of the credit instead of giving it all by Josh."

"What are you going to do?" inquired Ebenezer dryly.

"Well, of course last year was an exceptional year," said Abel, owing. He hesitated to say "owing to the failure of the Ebenezer Rule Factory company," and so stammered with the utmost delicacy, and skipped a tocsure.

"And we thought," Simeon flushed, "that if the factory wasn't going to open up this winter we'd work things so's to have a little or no Christmas in town this year—being so much of the present giving falls on us to carry on our books."

"It ain't only the factory wages of course," Abel interposed. "It's the folks' savings being set up in."

"—the failure," he would have added, but skipped a mere beat instead.

"—and we want to try to give 'em a chance to pay us up for last Christmas before they come on to themselves with another celebration," he added reasonably.

Ebenezer Rule laughed—a descending scale of laughter that seemed to have no organs wherewith to function in the open, and so never got beyond the gutturals.

"How you going to fix it?" he inquired again.

"Why," said Simeon, "everybody in town's talking that they ain't going to give nobody anything for Christmas. Some means it and some don't. Some'll do it and some'll back out. But the churches has decided to omit Christmas exercises altogether this year. Some thought to have speaking pieces, but everybody concluded if they had exercises without oranges and candy the children'd go home disappointed, so they've left the whole thing slide."

"It don't seem just right for 'em not to celebrate the birth of our Lord just because they can't afford the candy," Abel Ames observed mildly, but Simeon hurried on:

"—slide, and my idea and Abel's is to get the town meeting to vote a petition to the same effect asking the town not to try to do anything with their Christmas this year. We heard the factory wasn't going to open, and we thought if we could tell 'em that for sure, it would settle 'em and save him and me and all the rest of 'em. Would—would you be willing for us to tell the town meeting that? It's tough—we're on the way there."

"Sure," said Ebenezer Rule, "tell 'em. And you might point out to 'em," he added, with his spasms of gutturals, "that failure is often salutary measures—Public benefactions. Fixes folks so's they can't spend their money fool."

He walked with them across the lawn, going between them and guiding them among the empty aster beds.

"They think I'm up their savings in the failure," he went on, "when all I done is to bring 'em face to face with the fact that for years they've been over-spending themselves. It takes Christmas to show that up. This whole Christmas business is about worn out, anyhow. Ain't it?"

"That's what," Simeon said, "it's a splendid shun, from edge to edge."

Abel Ames was silent. The three skirted the dower beds and came out on the level sweep of turf before the house that was no house in the darkness, save that they remembered how it looked—a square, smoked thing with a beard of dead creepers and white shades lidded over its never lighted windows, a fit home for this man least liked of the 300 neighbors who made Old Trail Town. He touched the elbow of the other two men as they walked in the dark, but he rarely touched any human being. And now Abel Ames suddenly put his hand down on that of Ebenezer, where it lay in the crook of Abel's elbow.

"What you got there?" he asked.

"Nothing much," Ebenezer answered irritably again. "It's an old glass. I was looking over some rubbish and I found it—over back. It's a field glass."

"What you got a field glass out in the dark for?" Abel demanded.

"I used to fool with it some when I was a little abnver," Ebenezer said. He put the glass in Abel's hand. "On the sky," he added.

Abel lifted the glass and turned it on the heavens. There, above the little

"And he set down on the edge of a chair by the stove."

side lawn, the firmament had unclothed itself of branches and lay in a glorious nakedness to three horizons.

"Thunder," Abel said, "look at 'em look."

Sweeping the field with the lens, Abel spoke meanwhile.

"Seems as if I'd kind of miss all the fuss in the store around Christmas," he said, "the extra rush and the trimming up and all."

"Abel! It miss lavishin' his store with cut paper, I guess," said Simeon. "He dotes on tassels."

"Last year," Abel went on, not lowering the glass, "I had a little kid come in the store Christmas eve that I'd never seen before. He ask me if he could get warm—and he set down on the edge of a chair by the stove, and he took in everything in the place. I ask him his name, and he just smiled. I ask him if he was glad it was Christmas, and he says, 'Was I? I was gold' to give him some cough drops, but when I come back from waiting on somebody he was gone. I never could find out who he was, nor see anybody that saw him. I thought maybe this Christmas he'd come back. Lord, don't it look like a pasture of buttercups up there? Here, Simeon."

Simeon, talking, took the glass and lifted it to the stars.

"Cut paper don't is all very well," he said, "but the worst nightmare of the year to the stores is Christmas. I always think it's come to be 'Peace on earth, good will to men and extravagance of women.' Quile n' nice little till of gold pieces up there in the sky, ain't there? I'd kind o' like to stake a claim up there—eh? Lay it out along about around that bright one down there—by Josh," he broke off, "look at that bright one!"

Simeon kept looking through the glass, and he leaped a little forward to try to see the better.

"What is it?" he repeated, "what's that one? It's the biggest star I ever see!"

The other two looked where he was looking, low in the east. But they saw nothing save hazy, indistinctly moving and a spatter of sparkling points not more bright than those of the upper field.

"You look," Simeon bade the vague presence that was his host; but through the glass Ebenezer still saw nothing that challenged his sight.

"I don't know the name of a star in the sky except the dipper," he grumbled, "but I don't see anything out of the ordinary, nohow."

"It is," Simeon protested. "I tell you, it's the biggest star I ever saw. It's blue and purple and green and yellow."

Abel had the glass now, and he had looked hardly sooner than he had recognized.

"Sore," he said, "I've got it. It is blue and purple and green and yellow, and it's as big as most stars put together. It twinkles—yes, sir, and it swags!" He broke off, laughing at the mystification of the others, and laughed so that he could not go on.

"Is it a comet, do you s'pose?" said Simeon.

"No," said Abel—"no, it's a comet to stay. It's our individual private star. It's the light in front of the town hall you two are looking at."

They moved to where Abel stood, and from there, up the rise of ground to the east, they could see Simeon's star shining softly and throwing long rays. It seemed, almost to where they stood—the lamp that marked the heart of the village.

"Shucks!" said Simeon.

"Said," said Ebenezer.

"Why, I don't know," said Abel. "Kind of like to see it through the glass. It looks like it was a bigger light than we give it credit for."

"THERE'S A FASCINATION ABOUT SAVING"

said one of our savings depositors. It is truly amazing the way the small coins count up in our little home savings bank. The members of my family vie with one another in putting away spare coins, and when I come to the bank on the first of each month to make my deposit I am pleasantly surprised at what we have saved.

You can enjoy a similar pleasure by becoming a savings depositor here and you will have also the additional satisfaction of seeing 4 per cent interest added to your credit.

BEING a real citizen carries with it certain duties and obligations that are often overlooked by a great many people. Some have the idea that everybody who lives in a community is a citizen of that particular place, regardless of the relation they bear to the community in general. It is one thing to be a resident of a place and an entirely different condition to be a citizen. A mere resident is one who believes that his sole duty is to get as much out of the town as possible and give as little as he can in return. The citizen is one who, while conducting his own affairs in an efficient manner, knows that his own prosperity depends upon the general prosperity of the community. He is always willing to give freely of his time and substance for the furthering of projects that have for their object the building up of the town, for he realizes that no town can be any better than the people who make up the population. Instead of complaining because things do not go right he sets to work to make them proceed in the proper direction. The good citizen faces the future and profits by the mistakes of the past, while the ordinary resident cares nothing for the future of the community unless it will directly place money in his own pocket and makes it a point to call attention to the good old days when money and business were abundant. Being a good citizen is good business, for it wins for the one who displays these qualities the respect of the public and a corresponding financial reward. The prosperity of any given place is a sure index to the quality of its citizens. When the town has a well-kept appearance and the business places and residences appear as though they were occupied by people who are trying to get the most out of life it is a sign that the citizenship of the community is of a high grade. Such a town appeals to the stranger and attracts a class of people who will help push the load up the hill of progress.

THE DINNER ECONOMICAL.

DINNER MENU.
Cream of Carrot Soup.
Pot Roast with Brown Potatoes.
Creamed Carrots.
Combination Salad.
Apple Fritters.
Drop Cakes.

POT ROAST may be made with one of the cheaper cuts of meat and allows the housewife to economize now that meat is so high.

Cream of Carrot Soup.—Take two cupsful cut carrots, three cupsful milk, one tablespoonful butter, one tablespoonful finely cut onion, one tablespoonful flour, one-half teaspoonful salt, one-fourth teaspoonful white pepper and one tablespoonful chopped parsley. Wash, scrape and cut the carrots, cover with boiling water, add one-half teaspoonful salt and boil thirty or forty minutes, or until tender. Drain and mash. Put two cupsful milk and one cupful stock (in which the carrots were cooked) on top of double boiler. As soon as it boils add the carrots. Put the butter and onion in frying pan, cook one minute, then add the flour and one cupful milk slowly. Stir until smooth and creamy, then add to the milk. Add the salt and pepper; strain and add the chopped parsley.

Made With Chuck.

Pot Roast Beef With Brown Potatoes.—Take a one and one-half pound chuck roast and wipe with wet cloth. Put into iron boiler or Dutch oven and sear on both sides. If you do not have an iron boiler or Dutch oven sear in frying pan. When seared put into boiler and add one onion, cut small; one tablespoonful salt, one-fourth teaspoonful white pepper and two cupsful boiling water. Boil one and one-half hours; then add one quart potatoes, which have been washed and pared. Boil twenty minutes, or until the potatoes are done, adding water as it is needed. You must have two cupsful of gravy by the time it is done. Mix one tablespoonful flour with cold water and add to the gravy; then add one tablespoonful oatmeal.

Apples Are Cheap.

Apple Fritters.—Take one cupful flour, one teaspoonful baking powder, a little salt and yolks of two eggs, beaten light, with cupful of milk. Grate in three medium sized apples, beat well and fold in stiffly beaten whites of two eggs. Drop by spoonfuls into hot fat and fry until nicely browned. Drain on brown paper and serve with maple syrup.

Drop Cakes.—Take one egg, beat the white separately, add one cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of butter or lard, two cupsful of flour and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat the butter and sugar to a cream. Bake in small pans.

DRAINING EARTH ROADS.

Poor Drainage is a Prevailing Defect That Should Be Remedied.

The importance of earth roads, according to a bulletin of the United States department of agriculture, is indicated by the fact that of the approximate mileage of 2,300,000 in the United States, 2,000,000 miles are classed as earth roads.

The prevailing defect in earth roads is poor drainage, and this defect is the first one which should be remedied. Improved drainage will do more than any other thing for road betterment. Drainage is for two purposes—first, to remove water which reaches the surface of the road by precipitation or otherwise and, second, to remove underground water which reaches the road from adjacent land or through the top surface. Surface drainage is accomplished by securing a reasonably firm crowned traveled roadway and by providing broad, shallow ditches of good alignment and uniform grades and with ample outlets.

Subdrainage to remove water from beneath the road surface or to prevent its presence in the roadbed is accomplished most effectively by so called blind drainage, or French drains, or subside drains. The best side drains consist of a trench three and one-half feet deep, fifteen inches wide at the top, in which is laid an open bell joint glazed tile from four to six inches in diameter, with the hells uphill and the trench back filled with broken stone or coarse gravel. The main purpose of these drains is to intercept ground water. The joints of the pipes should be left open, and the drains should lead into a proper outlet so that the water may go entirely away from the road. One such drain upon the uphill side of a road will frequently remedy the worst conditions due to the presence of water.

To dispose of water collected by this drain a trench should be dug about every fifty feet and back filled with stone. These trenches should lead entirely away from the road, so it is easily seen that this construction is mainly available for roads located either over dills or boggy land or on side hills, where the outlets will, of course, be on the downhill side only. This form of subdrainage should not be undertaken without proper lines and grades furnished by an engineer, as it is expensive, and if properly put in would constitute sufficient drainage for any subsequent improvement of the road by macadamizing or otherwise. In turning to the matter of surface drainage, the earth road should be kept free from rocks by the use of the road drag or otherwise and a crown of one inch to the running foot should be preserved. Water is thus shed toward the sides.

The side ditches are to collect surface water and must be kept free. On heavy grades they will tend to wash and may require paving in the worst cases. The wash may usually be prevented by providing sufficient outlets to reduce the volume of water. A common defect in earth roads is to find that no provision is made for the side drains to discharge water away from the roads, and this item should be the first concern of the road man.

When it becomes necessary that drainage water cross the roads ample culverts must be provided. The worst fault common to culverts is that they rapidly become clogged with leaves or other rubbish. They should, therefore, be of more than sufficient size in the first instance. When less than two feet in diameter a tiled pipe should be covered with at least eighteen inches of compacted soil; otherwise it is liable to become broken. The prevalent defect of earth road construction in the matter of culverts is that they are too small and too near the surface. It will pay even in earth road construction to install more expensive culverts in the first instance than to rip them up for repairs at frequent intervals.

VALUE OF GOOD ROADS.

Institute of Technology Has Established a Course in Highway Engineering.

The extent to which the remarkable increase in the use of motor driven road vehicles has impressed upon every community the importance of good roads is very well illustrated by the recent establishment at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in Boston, of a course in highway engineering. The economic value of good roads has, of course, been known from the earliest times. Home conquered the world not least because the Romans were road builders who built for all time. But that value has too often been lost sight of in newer communities, and certain portions of the great country of ours especially has been ignored even long before the advent of the automobile made a new demand for good roads.

A reawakening to the value of good roads, no matter what the class of vehicle that uses them, is directly traceable to the automobile. The automobile has set a new standard for road building that is bound to make for the benefit of transportation of every kind. A road suited to the weight and speed of an automobile, a road fit to withstand the tremendous strains imposed by a machine weighing 4,000 pounds and moving at a rate of fifty miles an hour, will save the farmer in wear and tear as he plods to market behind his humble horse expense that will go far to reduce the cost of living.

The road-builder of this day of the automobile cannot have too much technical knowledge of chemistry and mineralogy, both of which enter into the construction of the best roads. The need of expert knowledge is also emphasized by the amount of money being expended today in the building of good roads.

CUTTING LUBRICANTS.

Combinations of Ingredients to Use on Various Metals.

Various factories have different ideas regarding the composition of their cutting lubricants for various materials, but while the quantities and proportions of the ingredients used are slightly different the materials used are largely the same, says the Engineering Magazine. In general the following lubricants will be found to give good results:

For turning or boring bar stock or forgings a mixture of lard oil and borax and water may be used or lard oil alone.

For steel castings, malleable iron or bronze the lard oil alone will give excellent results. Forming tools or wide faced tools give smoother cuts when lard oil alone is used, and carbon steel tools have greater life with this lubricant. High speed tools seem to give good results with either fluid.

For aluminum castings a mixture half kerosene and half lard oil makes a very smooth cutting compound, much better than kerosene alone.

The borax compound for steel is made as follows: Take one pound of borax and dissolve it in seven gallons of hot water. Allow the mixture to cool and then add one gallon of lard oil, mixing thoroughly. Only enough borax should be used to make the water and oil mix. The grade of lard oil used will affect the amount of borax to be used, and hard or soft water will also make some difference. The proportions given are, however, safe to start with, although slight variations may be found advisable to suit special cases. A convenient amount of lubricant can be made by using seven pounds of borax to forty gallons of hot water, and this can be readily mixed in a fifty gallon barrel. After the solution has cooled seven gallons of lard oil can be stirred in, after which it is ready for use. Care should be used in the amount of borax, because too much of this has a tendency to cut away the lubricating oil on the sliding surfaces, thus causing excessive wear on the moving parts due to imperfect lubrication. When the borax solution is used there is a tendency to wear away the clearance face of the tool somewhat more rapidly than when the lard oil is used pure, but the cooling action produced by the borax water is much greater.—Engineering Magazine.

WORLD'S IRON SUPPLY.

Enormous Reserves of Low Grade Ores Provide For Indefinite Future.

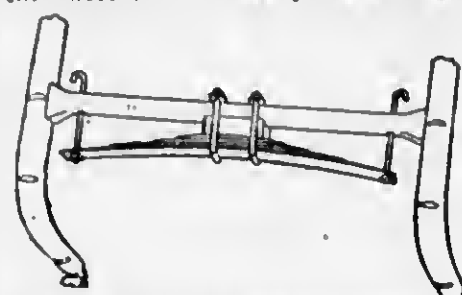

"While within a century the world's supply of proved iron ore of present commercial grade will be exhausted if consumption increases in the future at the rate it has in the past, there will be still available enormous reserves of lower grade ores, and large discoveries are yet to be made of high grade ores, which will supply demands indefinitely in the future." So declares Professor C. K. Leith of the University of Wisconsin geology department, who has studied the iron ore resources of many parts of the world.

"Reserves become available and valuable only by the expenditure of effort and money. Ores are the multiplier and the man the multiplier in the product representing value or availability. Iron ore can be made available when needed almost to any extent, but at highly varying cost and effort. The highest grade ores, requiring minimum expenditure to make them available, are distinctly limited as compared to total reserves."

"Any waste in their utilization will lead more quickly to the use of less available ores at higher cost. One of the significant consequences of the exhaustion of the highest grade reserves will be an increasing draft upon fuel resources necessary for the smelting of lower grade ores. Availability is limited, not by total reserves, but by economic conditions."

Spring Whiffletree.

A whiffletree that will relieve a horse's shoulder of jerks and sudden jars when drawing a load is shown in the sketch. It is easily made of an old wagon spring and is fastened back of the crossbar of the shafts. Two rods, with ends formed into hooks for the traces, are run through holes in the crossbar and made fast to the spring.

The Many Uses of Peat.

It is interesting to consider what can be made from peat. First of all, there are peat fuel and peat charcoal, and in the making of these such byproducts result as naphtha, sulphate of ammonia, acetic acid, tar and paraffin wax. Then there is moss lichen, already an important industry upon the continent; nurture, preservatives and sheep dips, paper, cardboard and mill boards, disinfectants, artificial wool, surgical wool and filtering and absorbing material.

Pumice Product.

The pumice produced in the United States in 1913 amounted to 24,543 short tons, valued at $55,488, a decrease of 2,583 tons in quantity and of $31,279 in value compared with 1912. The material came from six states—California, Kansas, Nebraska, Idaho, South Dakota and Utah.

Capital Letters.

As to the abolition of capital letters, how would a movement fare for the lowering of that assertive pronoun "I"? Our ancestors in the days before print had plenty of choice in the matter, writing of themselves, according to taste and fancy, as: Ik, Ic, Ich, Yk, yche, I. J. I. y and Y. But printing finally established the I. Yet today when one comes across an illiterate person dispensing with the capital to which he does not know he is entitled it offers no difficulty to the reader. And one could write for print in the convenient first person singular more freely if that capital did not somehow increase the egotism of it.—London Chronicle.

of golden bells, each invisible stalk trying on its own account to help forward some spring. As he had said, he did not know one star from another, nor a planet for a planet with a name. It had been years since he had seen the heavens so near. He moved about, looking, and passed the wall of leafless lilacs and mulberries. Stars hung in his thoughts like fruit for the plucking. They patterned patches of sky. He looked away and back, and it was as if the stars repeated themselves, like the chorus of everything.

"You beggars," Ebenezer said, "awful dressed up, ain't you? It must be for something up there—it ain't for anything down here, let me tell you."

He went up to his dark back door from without there he could hear Kate Kerr, his general servant, who had sufficient personality to compel the term "housekeeper," setting sponge for bread with a snapping, hollow sound and a force that implied a frown for every down stroke of the iron spoon.

He knew how she would turn toward the door as he entered, with her way of arching eyebrows, in the manner of one about to rectify the symptoms of a change for the worse—or at best to say "about the same"—to everything in the universe. And when Kate Kerr spoke, she always whispered on the faintest provocation.

A sudden distaste for the entire inside of his house seized Ebenezer. He turned and wandered back down the little dark yard, looking up at the high field of the stars with only his dim eyes.

"There must be quite a little to know about them," he thought, "if anybody was enough interested."

Then he remembered Simeon and Abel and laughed again in his way.

"I done the down a good turn for once, didn't I?" he thought, "I've fixed folks so they can't spend their money fool!"

Two steps from Ebenezer's front gate Simeon and Abel overtook a woman. She had a long shawl over her head and she was humming some faint air of her own making.

"Coming to the meeting, Mary?" Simeon asked as they passed her.

"No," said Mary Chavah, "I started for it. But it's such a nice night I'm going to walk around."

"Things are going to go your way to that meeting, I guess," said Simeon. "Ain't you always found fault with Christmas?"

"They're a lot of nonsense about it," Mary assented. "I don't ever bother myself much with it. Why?"

"I dunno but we'll all come round to your way of thinking tonight," said Simeon.

"For just this year?" Abel Ames called back as they went on.

"You can't do much else, I guess," said Mary. "Everybody dips Christmas up out of their pocketbooks, and if there ain't nothing there, they can't dip."

The men laughed with her and went on down the long street toward the town. Mary followed slowly under the yellowing elms that made great golden shades for the dim post lamps. And high at the far end of the street down which they went hung the blue arc light before the town hall, center to the constellation of the home lights and the shop lights and the street lights, all near neighbors to the stream and sweep of the stars hanging a little higher and shining as by one sun.

CHAPTER II. The Meeting.

It was interesting to see how they took the proposal to drop that Christmas from the calendar there in Old Trail Town. It was so eminently a sensible thing to do, and they all knew it. Oh, every way they looked at it, it was sensible, and they admitted it. Yet, besides Mary Chavah and Ebenezer Rule, probably the only person in the town whose satisfaction in the project could be counted on to be unfeigned was little Tab Winslow. For Tab, as all the town knew, had a turkey brought up by his own hand to be the Winslows' Christmas dinner, but such had become Tab's intimacy with and fondness for the turkey that he was prepared to forego his Christmas if only that dinner were foregone, too.

"Theophobus Thistlebush is such a human turkey," Tab had been heard explaining patiently; "he knows me—and he knows his name. He don't expect us to eat him—why, you can't eat anything that knows its name!"

But every one else was just merely sensible. And they had been discussing Christmas in this sensible strain at the town meeting that night, before Simeon and Abel broached their plan for standardizing their sensible leanings.

Somebody had said that Jenny Wing and Bruce Rule, who was Ebenezer's nephew, were expected home for Christmas and had added that it "ain't look as if there would be much of any Christmas down to the station to meet them." On which Mrs. Mortimer flared and spoke out, philosophically to the point of brutality. Mrs. Bates was little and brown and quick, and her clothes seemed always to curtail her off, so that her figure was no part of her presence.

"I ain't going to do a thing for Christmas this year," she declared, as nearly everybody in the village had intermittently declared—"not a living, breathing thing. I can't, and folks might just as well know it, flat foot. What's the use of buying those and floundering you're eating milk gravy to save butter and using salt sacks for handkerchiefs? I ain't educated up to see it."

Mrs. Jane Moran, who had changed her chair three times to avoid a draft, sat down carefully in her fourth chair, her face twitching a little as if its muscles were connected with her joints.

"Christmas won't be no different from any other day to our house this year," she said. "We'll get up and eat our three meals and sit down and look at each other. We can't even spare a hen—she might lay if we didn't eat her."

Mrs. Abby Winslow, mother of seven under fifteen, looked up from her rocking chair—Mrs. Winslow always sat limp in chairs as if they were reaching out to rest her, and indeed this occasional yielding to the force of gravity was almost her only luxury.

"You ain't thinking of the children, Mrs. Bates," she said, "nor you either, Jane Moran, or you couldn't talk that way. We can't have no real Christmas, of course. But I'll planned some little things made out of what I had in the house—things that wouldn't be anything and yet would seem a little something."

Mrs. Mortimer Bates swept round at her. "Children," she said, "ought to be showed how to do without things. Bennett and Gussie ain't expecting a silver of nothing for Christmas—not a silver."

Mrs. Winslow unexpectedly dared up. "Whether it shows through on the outside or not," she said, "I'll bet you they are."

"My three," Mrs. Emerson Morse put in tactically, "have been kept from popping corn and cracking nuts all fall so they could do both Christmas night, and it would seem like something that was something."

"That ain't the idea," Mrs. Bates insisted; "I want them learnt to do without"—("They'll learn that," Mrs. Abby Winslow said; "they'll learn.") "Happening as it does to most every one of us to have no Christmas, they won't be no distinctions drawn. None of the children can brag—and children is limbs of Satan for bragging," she added. She was remembering a brief conversation overheard that day between Gussie and Pep, the minister's son.

"I've got a doll," said Gussie. "I've got a dollar," said Pep. "My mamma went to a tea party," said Gussie.

"My mamma give me," said Pep. Gussie mustered her forces. "My papa goes to work every morning," she topped it.

"My papa don't have to," said Pep, and closed the incident.

"I can't help who's a limb of Satan," Mrs. Winslow replied doggedly. "I can't seem to sense Christmas time without Christmas."

"It won't be Christmas time if you don't have any Christmas," Mrs. Bates persisted.

"Oh, yes it will," Mrs. Winslow said. "Oh, yes it will. You can't stop that."

It was Mrs. Bates, who, from the high backed plush rocker, rapped with the blue glass paper weight on the red glass lamp and, in the absence of Mr. Bates, called the meeting to order. The Old Trail Town society was organized on a platform of "membership unlimited, dues nothing but taking turns with the entertaining, officers to consist of president, the host of the evening (or wife, if any), and no minutes to bother with." And it was to a meeting so disposed on the subject of Christmas that Simeon Buck rose to present his argument.

"Mr. President," he addressed the chair. "It's Mme. President, you funny goose," corrected Buff Miles, sotto voce.

"It had ought to be Mme. Chairman," objected Mrs. Moran. "She ain't the continuous president."

"Well, for the land sakes, call me Mrs. Bates, formal, and go ahead," said the lady under discussion. "Only I bet you've forgot now what you was going to say."

"Not much I did not," Simeon Buck continued composedly, and, ignoring the interruptions, let his own vocative stand. Then he presented a memorandum of a sum of money. It was not a large sum, but when he quoted it, everybody looked at everybody else, stricken. For it was a sum large enough to have required, in the earning, months of work on the part of an appalling proportion of Old Trail Town.

"From the day after Thanksgiving to the night before Christmas last year," said Simeon, "that is the amount that the 300 souls—in our town—spent in the local stores. Now, bare living expenses aside—which ain't very much for us all, these days—this amount may be assumed to have been spent by the lot of us for Christmas."

Of course there was those, continued Mr. Buck, looking intelligently about him, "who bought most of their Christmas stuff in the city. But those—those economic traitors only make the point of what I say the more so. Without them, the town spent this truly amazing sum in keeping the holidays. Now, I ask you, frank, could the town afford that, or anything like that?"

Buff Miles spoke out of the extremity of his reflections. "That's a funny crack," he said, "for a merchant to make. Why not leave 'em spend and leave 'em pay?"

"Oh, I'll leave 'em pay all right," rejoined Simeon, significantly, and stood silent nod, smiling until there were those in the room who uncomfortably shifted.

Then he told them the word he bore from Ebenezer Rule that as they had feared and half expected, the factory was not to open that winter at all. Hardly a family represented in the rooms was not also representative of a factory's employee, now idle these seven months, as they were periodically idle at the times of "enforced" suspension of the work.

"What I'm getting at is this," Simeon summed it up, "and Abel Ames here backs me up—don't you, Abel—that hadn't we all ought to come to some joint conclusion about our Christmas this year and roust the town up to it, like a town, and not go it blind and either get in up to our necks in debt, same as city folks, or else quit off Christmas, individual, and make hurt folks' feelings? Why not move intelligently, like a town, and all agree out and out to leave Christmas go by this year? And have it understood thorough?"

It was very still in the little rooms when he had finished. There seems to be no established etiquette of revolutions. But something of the nervousness of the enthusiasts was upon Mrs. Mortimer Bates, and she spoke before she knew:

"So's we can be sure everybody else'll know it and not give something either and be disappointed too," she assented. "Well, I'll bet everybody'd be real relieved."

"The churches has sanctioned us doing away with Christmas this year by doing away with it themselves," observed Mrs. Jane Moran. "That'd ought to be enough to go by." "It don't seem to me Christmas is a thing for the churches to decide about," said Simeon, thoughtfully. "It seems to me the matter is up to the merchants and grocers and the family providers. We're the ones most concerned. Us providers have got to scratch gravel to get together any Christmas at all, if any. And speaking for us merchants, I may say we'll lay in the stock if folks'll buy it. But if they can't afford to pay for it we don't want the stock personally."

"I guess we've all had the experience," observed Mrs. Jane Moran. "Of announcing we wasn't going to give any gifts this year and then had somebody send something embroidered by" hand, with a solid month's work on it. But if we all agree to concede from Christmas we can lay down the law to folks so's it'll be understood: No Christmas for nobody."

"Not to children?" said Mrs. Abby Winslow doubtfully.

"My idea is to teach 'em to do entirely without Christmas," harped Mrs. Bates. "We can't afford one. Why not let the children share in the family privation, without trying to fool 'em with makeshift presents and boiled sugar?"

Over to a corner near the window plants, whose dead leaves she had been picking off, sat Ellen Bourne—Mrs. Matthew Bourne she was, but nearly everybody called her Ellen Bourne. There is some law about these things—why instinctively we call some folk by the whole name, some by their first names, some by the last, some by shortening the name, some by a name not their own. Perhaps there is a name for each of us if only we knew where to look, and folk intuitively select the one most like that. Perhaps some of us, by the sort of miracle that is growing every day, got the name that is meant for us. Perhaps some of us struggle along with consonants that spell somebody else. And how did some names get themselves so terribly overused, unless by some strange might, say, a kind of astrological irregularity. Ellen Bourne sat by the window and suddenly looked over her shoulder at the room.

"If we've got the things made," she said, "can't we give 'em? If it's to children?"

"I think if we're going to omit we'd ought to omit," Mrs. Bates held her own; "it just matter to you, Ellen with no children, so?" She caught herself sharply up. Ellen's little boy had died a Christmas or two ago. "No," Ellen said, "I ain't any child, of course. But"

"Well, I think," said Mrs. Jane Moran, "that we're hit on the only way we could have hit on to clink each other up over a hard time."

"And get off delicate ourselves same time," said Buff Miles. From the first Buff had been advocating what he called "an open Christmas," and there were those near him at the meeting to whom he had confided some plan about "church choir Christmas carol serenades," which he was loath to see set at naught.

Not much afterward Simeon Buck put the motion: "Mrs. Chairman," he said, "I move you—and all of us—that the Old Trail Town meeting do and hereby does declare itself in favor of striking Christmas celebrations from its calendar this year. And that we circulate a petition through the town to this effect, headed by our names." And that we all own up that it's for the simple and regretful reason, that not a mother's son or na can afford to buy Christmas presents this year, and what's the use of scratching to keep up appearances?"

For a breath Abel Ames hesitated; then he spoke voluntarily for the first time that evening. "Mr. President, I second the bulk of that," said he slowly, and without looking at anybody, and then sighed his real, triple sigh.

There was apparently nobody to vote against the motion. Mrs. Winslow did not vote at all. Ellen Bourne said "No," but she said it so faintly that nobody heard save those nearest her, and they felt a bit embarrassed for her because she had spoken alone, and they tried to cover up the intonate.

"Carried," said the chair, and slipped out to the kitchen to put on the coffee.

At the meeting there was almost nobody who, in the course of the evening, did not make or reply to some form of observation on one theme. It was:

"Well, I wish Mary Chavah'd been to the meeting. She'd have enjoyed herself."

Or, "Well, won't Mary Chavah be glad of this plan they've got? She's wanted it a good while."

Or, "We all seem to have come to Mary Chavah's way of thinking, don't we? You know, she ain't kept any Christmas for years."

Unless it was Abel Ames. He, in fact, made or replied to almost no observations that evening. He drank his coffee without cream, sugar, or spoon—they are always overlooking somebody's easel in this way, and such is Old Trail Town's shy courtesy that the omission is never mentioned or repaired by the victim—and sighed his triple sigh at intervals, and went home.

"Hetty," he said to his wife, who had not gone to the meeting, "they put it through. We won't have no Christmas creditors this year. We don't dare to furnish charged Christmas presents for nobody."

She looked up from the towel she was feather-stitching—she was a little woman who carried her head back and had large eyes and the long, curved lashes of a child.

"I s'pose you're real relieved, ain't you, Abel?" she answered. "My, yes," said Abel, without expression. "My, yes."

"Not if it were my day."

Some years ago the late Horace Mann, the eminent educator, delivered an address at the opening of some reformatory institution for boys, during which he remarked that if only one boy was saved from ruin it would pay for all the cost and care and labor of establishing such an institution. After the exercises had closed, in private conversation, a gentleman called Mr. Mann upon his statement and said to him:

"Did you not color that a little when you said that all that expense and labor would be repaid if it only saved one boy?"

"Not if it were my boy," was the solemn and convincing reply.

ROLL AFTER HARROWING.

Do not use a heavy roller to settle the land and then leave the land untouched after rolling, as this will hasten the rapidity in evaporation of soil moisture. Water rises to the surface by capillary attraction, and the closer the particles of soil are together the higher it will go. This is plainly and frequently seen as one walks over a field and notices where the horse has placed his foot and settled the soil particles. The ground is usually moist on the surface unless covered snugly with a loose mulch. The same principle applies again in the case of the roller. Therefore follow the roller if needed in preparing the seed bed with the smoothing harrow and keep a mulch on the surface to prevent a loss of water.

Also follow the plow with the harrow immediately for the same purpose. In July and August this moisture will be needed.—American Cultivator.

Jack Hunter's Thanksgiving

How He Dined on Thanksgiving Day

By DELIA ELLISON

Jack Hunter, a sailor boy, having come ashore with some companions on the arrival of his ship after a three years' cruise, following sailor customs, proceeded to blow in all his savings within a few days.

Now, this was sowing the wind to reap the whirlwind, for they had all received permission to go to their homes to spend Thanksgiving, and having spent all his money instead, he had not the wherewithal to pay for a ticket on the railroad to anywhere.

"What'll you do, Jack," asked Joe Baxter, one of his mates—"go back aboard the ship for the ordinary Thanksgiving dinner of salt pork, with plum duff thrown in for Thanksgiving, or walk where you are going?"

"I'll not go to the ship," Jack replied. "I don't like the railroads, any way. They're dangerous. They swing around the curves in a way to make an old salt sick, and if they don't make him sick they scare him to death which is worse. There's no sea room on a railroad, and when two trains are coming together head on on the same track there's no shoving off, and there's no saving of life by jumping into the water, for there's nothin' but hard ground below. No, sir, I want an open sea for my meanderin'. I'm going to walk."

"What you going to do for grub on the way?"

"Reckon I'll fish in the streams."

"Fish! You can't eat the measly little fish that swim in fresh water."

This staggered Jack. He was born on the ocean, his father having been captain of a schooner, and his knowledge of the land was very meager. His parents were both dead, and he had no brothers or sisters; consequently he had no reason for going to where his mother had lived. There was no one he cared to see, no one with whom to eat on Thanksgiving dinner after he got there. He was somewhat discouraged at the information that fresh water fish were not eatable, for he could not think of any way to support himself on a journey except by grub out of the water. He hesitated whether to try it or go back on to the ship.

But there was one attraction that decided him to go on. During one year that he had lived on land he had played with a little girl named Margie. What her other name was he didn't know. Margie was the only being living—if, indeed, she did live—who connected him with the past. He longed to see her just once to ask her if she remembered playing hide and seek in the baycocks with him.

So he started out the morning of Thanksgiving day to walk to the village where he had spent this one year. He didn't remember much about the route, but had been told that he must proceed in a northwesterly direction. Baxter had 25 cents left, which he bestowed upon Jack. After a discussion as to how the money had best be spent it was decided that Jack would need a compass even more than food. So they stepped into a shop, bought a compass, and after a farewell handshake Jack started on his journey.

Jack soon found that he could get on better by inquiring the way than by relying on his compass, for sometimes the compass would take him across a bay, and a man he met told him how he could go by road. About noon, getting hungry, he stepped into a small restaurant and traded his compass for a couple of sandwiches. During the afternoon a glimmering of memory came to him as to the route he passed over, and here and there a house, a clump of trees, a meadow, a bridge, struck him familiarly. About dusk he came to the schoolhouse where he and Margie had learned to spell words of one and two syllables, and played a recess and at game together to their homes after school let out.

After that he didn't need a compass or any other aid to tell him the way that he would not have needed either had it not been for night coming on. He pursued his way, guided rather by distance than sight, and, presently coming to a crossroad, he remembered that Margie used to live down the road to the right for about half a mile. So he turned into it and walked on, though overhanging trees darkened the way.

Jack had proceeded down the crossroad about a quarter of a mile when he came to a house. It couldn't be the house where Margie had lived, for that house, as has been stated, was half a mile from the crossing of the roads. At any rate, it had seemed that distance to Jack sometimes when he triangulated it with his little seven-year-old legs. But what surprised him was that the house looked like the house in which Margie had lived. The only light was one downstairs in the rear. Jack went back where he saw the light and looked in through a window.

The sight he saw excited an appetite already keen. He was looking into a kitchen, and viands were cooking on a stove. There was no sound except the sizzling of the cooking viands. Jack put his hand to the sash and found he could easily raise it. He did so, and the odor of the cooking, mingled with the sound of the sizzling, was delicious to a hungry man. Together they took away every vestige of conscience. He climbed into the window, determined to partake of the refreshment before him.

The first thing he did was to throw open the oven door, and there was a turkey just turning a delicious brown. Jack had served a term in the galley aboard ship, and he instinctively hated the sizzling bird. Then he uncovered a dish on the rear of the stove and from the delicious odor it emitted judged that it was a mince pie being warmed. Other dishes were in process of preparation, but Jack was so entranced with the turkey and the pie that he took little notice of them.

It was hard for him to wait till the turkey was thoroughly cooked, but he held on to himself and waited. Finally he could refrain no longer, and "dishing up," he placed the various viands on the table and sat down to eat.

Jack remembered that his mother used to ask a blessing before each meal. He could not repeat a blessing to save his life, but he was so thankful for the delicious dinner provided for him by Providence that he shut his eyes, bent his head and expressed his thanks in his own peculiar way. Then, straightening up and opening his "hinkers," he sat for a few moments rigid. A young woman stood looking at him from the other end of the room. On her face was an expression of consternation at seeing a man sitting at her table about to eat her Thanksgiving dinner.

"Ship ahoy!" said Jack by way of speaking to this person, who had suddenly appeared on the scene.

"Well, I declare!" was the reply.

"Would you mind tellin' me what port you hail from?"

"Would you mind telling me what you mean by making yourself at home in my house and eating my dinner?"

"Is this your dinner?"

"My dinner! Goodness gracious what impudence!"

Had Jack not been in his sailor tous-douille, the girl would have been frightened out of her senses. As it was, she was simply astonished. Besides, Jack was a good looking chap with an honest eye in his head, and when, realizing the situation, a smile broke out on his comely young face, the owner of the dinner could not help responding in kind. Jack rose and in a few words told her how he had just reached port and had been given leave to go home for Thanksgiving; that he had no home and had been looking for a little girl he used to play with called Margie when hungry as a bear; he had stumbled on a dinner. Then he begged her pardon for proposing to eat what belonged to her and added that he would go on to a quarter of a mile further to where Margie used to live, when he was a boy.

"Why, my name is Margie," said the girl. "I'm Margaret Wharton."

"You can't be my Margie! She was a little bit of a— Anyway, it was farther from the crossroads to her house than this house is."

"Are you Jack Hunter?"

"Of course I am. How did you stumble on that?"

"Why, Jack?"

"What's the matter? Is this a story in a book, or ain't I Jack Hunter, able seaman on tae?"

"You're Jack, and I'm Margie, and you've just come in time to eat a Thanksgiving dinner with me. Sit down."

They talked so fast, each constantly breaking in on what the other was saying without stopping from doing justice to the dinner, that it would be impossible to lay down just what they said, but Margie got in information that her parents were dead, her only brother was somewhere else and she was teaching school in a neighboring city. She had come to the old homestead to spend Thanksgiving by herself and while waiting for the dinner to be cooked had gone to a neighbor's to borrow some articles which she had forgotten to provide.

Well, to make a long story short these two, each being quite alone in the world, decided, as Jack expressed it, to convey each other. Jack concluded not to go back to sea, accepting a position with a bank builder. In this Margie gave up her school, and the couple are now quite contented with their lot and under Margie's able management of their finances slowly accumulating funds as well as a family.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDY ON THE RISEN CHRIST.

Mark 16:1-8; Matthew 28:11-15—Dec. 8. "Why seek ye the living amongst the dead? He is not here, but risen."—Luke 24:5.

THE resurrection of the dead will be the greatest manifestation of Divine Power ever made to angels and to men. The resurrection of Jairus' daughter, of the widow of Nain's son, and of Jesus' friend Lazarus are nowhere styled resurrections of the dead; they were merely awakenings, the last of these being the most wonderful, because Lazarus had been dead four days and putrefaction had set in.

The resurrection promised in the Bible will bring back the personality and the consciousness of billions of humanity who have died under the Divine sentence, "Dying, thou shalt die." "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." There could be no resurrection—no escape from that Divine sentence—except in the way that God has arranged; namely, that our Lord Jesus took the place of the original sinner, Adam, purchasing him and all his race back from the death state.

Fallacious ideas have gone abroad to the effect that it will be merely the body that will be resurrected—that God will collect from the four winds every particle of dust which once composed the body, and will reorganize the race out of the same particles which formerly composed it. The absurdity of this thought grows upon us as we consider that the bodies of the dead have more or less gone into vegetation, etc. The difficulty has been that we lost sight of the Biblical declaration that it is the soul that dies (Ezekiel 18:4, 20). Our bodies are changed every seven years. It is the soul that dies, that has been redeemed and that is to be resurrected.

Our Lord No Longer Human.

Christ, as the Logos, was a living soul, being on a high spirit plane. For man's sake He humbled Himself—"took a bondman's form." (Philippians 2:7, 8). As a human soul, or being, He died—"poured out His soul unto death." "made His soul an offering for sin."—Isaiah 53:10-12.

It was Jesus the soul that died, but He was raised from the dead a soul of a higher order. At that time, as He foretold, He ascended where He was before; that is, He was put to death in flesh, but quickened in spirit. (1 Peter 3:18). He took the human nature merely for the great purpose of giving man's redemption-price; and after He had laid down that ransom-price by giving Himself up to death, the Father raised Him up to glory, honor, immortality—far above angels, principalities, powers.

Because after His resurrection Jesus was so different, we are prepared from this viewpoint to understand why He conducted Himself so differently after His resurrection—He appeared and disappeared, we read. Never before had He done this. After His resurrection He appeared in different bodies, different forms, different clothing. To Mary He appeared as the gardener; to the two walking to Emmaus, He appeared as a stranger. His clothing had been parted amongst the soldiers.

How evidently He was put to death in flesh, but quickened in spirit! It was the Spirit Jesus who showed Himself, assuming different human forms and clothing, as best suited the occasion. This Spirit Being came into the assemblies of the disciples when the doors were fastened for fear of the Jews. He created or materialized a body and clothing in their presence; and after a few minutes He vanished, dissolving the body and the clothing, while He, the Spirit, remained invisible. Thus He was with the disciples for forty days before He ascended; yet they saw Him not, except for a few minutes at a time on seven different occasions.

Those forty days were very necessary to teach two great lessons:

(1) That He was no longer dead, but alive;

(2) That He was no longer a man, but a spirit.—2 Corinthians 5:17.

The Importance of the Resurrection.

These facts are clearly established by St. Paul's narrative of his own experiences. He explains that it was necessary that the twelve Apostles should be able to bear witness to Jesus' resurrection. There could have been no Gospel Message of hope of Divine favor through a dead Saviour. Had Christ not risen, who would establish the blessed Kingdom and call forth from the tomb billions of the dead? All this the Apostle forcibly calls to our minds—1 Cor 15:12-19.

Evidently St. Paul in no way shared the views of those who unscripturally claimed that Jesus while dead was really alive, and that the resurrection of the dead is a mere formality, quite unnecessary to the carrying out of God's Plan. The Divine teaching is that "the dead know not anything," and that the resurrection is absolutely necessary to our future life.

At a meeting of the M. E. BUYING A WORK HORSE.

Points to Observe When Looking Over the Prospective Purchase.

After having found a horse that is satisfactory in general conformation, the next step is to examine him for soundness and take note of his disposition, writes W. F. Purdue in the American Cultivator. There are a number of things that should be noticed while the horse is still in the stable. Never have a horse brought out immediately, but go to his stall and investigate for yourself certain details which it is important to know. If the stall is all kicked to pieces look out for a kicker, an animal that will spoil his own rest at night and that of other horses in the stable; the manager should Among ponies the Shetland is the most popular, although there are several breeds of ponies in Great Britain that are well liked. DRAFT HORSES IN AMERICA.

As Good Stock Can Be Raised Here as Abroad.

(Prepared by United States department of agriculture.)

The best breeds of draft horses are now as well established in the United States that experts of the United States department of agriculture believe that the European war, which has interfered seriously with importations, will not injure breeding in this country. It is, in fact, asserted that the American people will now have an opportunity to see for themselves that as good stock can be raised in this country as any that can be imported.

The leading characteristic of good draft horses is massiveness, for their chief usefulness is the hauling of heavy loads. In consequence power not speed, is desired. To possess this power a horse should be compact, low set, or short legged, and be able to throw a great deal of weight into his collar without losing a secure footing. A draft horse of the best type should therefore weigh at least 1,000 pounds, and in localities where the heaviest breeds are common any animal under this is classed as a light drafter. In good drafters the chest is deep and broad, the girth large and the body broad, deep and comparatively short with wellspring ribs. The muscles of the hind quarters and thighs must be well developed, for it is these that furnish the chief drawing power, the front legs acting largely as weight carriers. Good legs and feet, with clean heavy bone, are very essential. In action the draft horse should walk with a rapid stride of good length, the feet being carried straight forward. This kind of action covers considerable ground in a short time. The ability to trot well is also desirable, but the walk is the draft horse's gait.

Today the Percheron probably our numbers in this country all other breeds combined. In fair condition a mature stallion will weigh from 1,800 to 2,000 pounds, though many exceed this. In height it runs from sixteen to seventeen hands and in color is usually either black or gray. The Percheron stallion has proved very popular for crossing with ordinary mares, and grade Percherons are great favorites in our markets.

Loss of Barnyard Manure.

Pile up the manure of the barnyard with no protection from leaching and other detrimental actions of nature, and more than 20 per cent of the fertilizing strength of the manure is lost. Put down a bed of earth and on this pile the manure, spreading a thin coat of earth occasionally, and finally when the heap is completed, cover it with a thick coat of earth. The result has been that only about 2 per cent of the fertilizing strength of the manure has been lost. Tested in the field, earth preserved manure has been found to yield up a potato crop three times as much as the carelessly kept and unprotected manure.

Soon the cattle will be in the stalls for winter feeding and the time for making the manure heaps will begin. This is a year when conserving every thing that is useful that has been going to waste should command the attention of the farmer.—Home and Farmstead.

SOMETHING ABOUT CATTLE

No farmer who has not tried it should engage in the cattle feeding business on a large scale at the start. He will find, and generally at pretty high cost, that experience and good judgment are needed as much as corn to lay the fat on a bunch of steers at a profit.

The power of production in a cow is inherited. If the cow is a good dairy animal by inheritance and is given good care and feed she will become more productive as she increases in age. The quantity rather than the quality of her milk is influenced by feed.

It costs just so much to put a pound of meat on an animal, and if it is lost during the winter, from low feeding or exposure, it is just that much extracted from the owner's pocket. It is much more profitable and sensible to retain every pound of flesh gained and also if possible to keep each animal improving all through the winter.

Pure bred dairy cattle will often be the keynote to great profit from the farm. What is the use of keeping an inferior, non-producing animal of any description when one that will make a handsome profit will take no more room, no more care and no more feed?

CIRCUIT COURT NOW IN SESSION

December Term Opened Monday Morning with Many Cases to be Heard.

Twelve Seek to be Freed from the Matrimonial Yoke—Other Court News.

The docket for the December term of the circuit court, which opened Monday morning, shows quite a large list of business, the criminal calendar containing nine cases, the most important of these being two cases of burglary and two of desertion. There are nine cases of issues of fact and law, which is not a large list for this circuit. Twelve of a total of thirteen chancery cases are those seeking relief from the bonds of matrimony, the other being a petition for alimony.

Following is the criminal calendar, cases under the head of issues of fact and law and those seeking to be freed from the matrimonial yoke which binds them together:

Criminal.

The People vs. George Banks—Desertion.
The People vs. Otis Flowers—Carrying concealed weapons.
The People vs. Clark R. Glazier—Desertion.
The People vs. Herman A. Portman—Desertion for sentence.
The People vs. Sherman Wildey and Peter Marchinkowski—Larceny.
The People vs. William I. Powell—Desertion.
The People vs. Walter Zoltis—Assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder.
The People vs. Millard Russell—Burglary.
The People vs. Joseph Cady—Burglary.

Issues of Fact and Law.

Morton Freeman vs. East Jordan & Southern R. R. Co.—Trespass on the case.
Thomas R. Locke vs. Wm. C. Walsh—Trespass on the case.

Lillian Betz vs. Harry Betz—Divorce.
Beatrice Wyers vs. James Wyers—Divorce.

Motions.

Harry Kling vs. The Peninsular Life Insurance Co. of Michigan—Motion to stay proceedings.
Several of the cases have been disposed of so far this week and are as follows:

Ceo. Banks plead guilty to the charge of desertion.

The case of Clark R. Glazier for desertion was continued over to the next term of court.

In the case of Sherman Wildey and Peter Marchinkowski, for larceny, both men plead guilty.

Millard Russell plead guilty to the charge of burglary.

Joseph Cady plead guilty to a charge of burglary.

The case of Morton Freeman vs. East Jordan & Southern R. R. Co., trespass on the case, is now on trial.

Three divorces were granted in the cases of Carl Hawley vs. Hazel Hawley, John Stoesser vs. Mada Stoesser, and Beatrice Wyers vs. James Wyers.

BOYS IN TROUBLE

Systematically Robbed Local Drug Stores in Series of Thefts.

For the past five or six weeks two of the local drug stores have been systematically robbed of various sums of money. The Central Drug Store and the Ivy Drug Store were the victims and by the steady watch that was kept by the owners and clerks the boys were finally caught. Last Saturday two boys made an attempt to get more funds from the Ivy Drug Store and were caught in the act of tampering with the safe.

The boys finally admitted that others were in the various thefts and most of them have been caught. Considerable money had been spent in various modes of enjoyment and in this way the officers were able to get the right ones. Just what will be done with the offenders has not been stated. It is hoped that some satisfactory settlement can be made to clear away the cloud cast on the youths by their thoughtless and unlawful act.

Expert at Toy Making.

Mrs. D. C. Nettleton has taken advantage of Germany's trouble and gone into competition with the Teutons in the manufacture of toys. She has exhibited a genius for the work and with paper and wood and a few tools she has made a series of toys that have been approved by dealers. She has already made a shipment to Cincinnati and New York. Mrs. Nettleton started out in this work as a diversion, but became so interested that she unconsciously drifted into an industry.

POPULAR MAIL CARRIER DEAD

E. R. VanLeuven Succumbs to Illness of About Five Months Duration.

Was Member of the Odd Fellows Order and of the Elks—Buried at Milford.

Ellsworth R. VanLeuven, age 37, rural carrier on route four of this city, died at his home on Mason street last Thursday morning. Mr. VanLeuven had been confined to his home most of the time since July 3rd, when he met with an accident while on his route, the result of which caused septic poisoning. Since the injury Mr. VanLeuven had only been on his route five or six times. Death came at 7:05 last Thursday morning, thus ending the sufferings that had lasted nearly five months.

Mr. VanLeuven was born in Brighton, Michigan, November 11, 1877, and came to Charlevoix to locate in 1902. He was married to Hannah Townsend at Vassar in 1902. The widow and one son, Benton, survive, besides his mother, five brothers and two sisters, Mrs. John McFarland of Highland and Mrs. Elmer Permitt of Northville. A brother, Elmer, of Detroit, was here at the time of the death.

Since coming to Charlevoix Mr. VanLeuven had been cook on several boats and camps in this vicinity, as well as at the Belvedere hotel. His ability along this line was always a marked feature to his credit. About five years ago he joined the ranks of the rural carriers of this city, in which capacity he was serving at the time of his demise. He made many friends and the courtesies extended to the patrons on his route will long be remembered.

Mr. VanLeuven was a member of the I. O. O. F. and the B. P. O. E. The Odd Fellows met the body at the train in all towns where transfers were made. Being a young man of jovial disposition, he always made himself a popular citizen and the whole community extends its deepest sympathy to the bereaved family. Many beautiful floral tributes were sent by the many friends, and the family extend their thanks for these tokens of reverence and esteem.

The remains were taken to Milford, Michigan, Friday morning, where interment was held last Sunday.

UNITED STATES WILL PROFIT BY THE GREAT EUROPEAN WAR

So Says George Otis Smith in Address Before American Mining Congress—Betterment of Industrial Conditions Can Come Best
Through Expansion of Manufacturing.

Europe's war finds its echo in America's industry. What contrast could be greater? On one shore of the Atlantic all activity seemingly destructive in purpose; on the other shore every energy directed along constructive lines. Absolute waste of life and property as opposed to production of wealth and betterment of life.

Even though it is at a distance that we view the terrible disaster that threatens the whole continent of Europe, optimism seems a lost art. Yet, sooner or later, this epoch of catastrophe must be followed by a period of repair, and the longer this period is delayed the greater will be the needs involved in the reconstruction and replacement. Where war has torn down at terrific speed peace must build up slowly.

The interruption of international trade stopped our exports of cotton and our imports of dyestuffs and potash, whereby several important industries were well-nigh paralyzed. Yet, startling as has been this disturbance of the whole balance of industry, certain fundamental facts and laws remain for us to build upon and indeed the lower course of foundation stones for optimism has already been laid.

Evidence of business betterment is before us on every hand and the reasons for optimism are many. The United States farmer has harvested a five-billion crop and there is a high-price market for all our surplus foodstuffs; already our grain is pouring across the Atlantic. The millions of men who are fighting are not working, and yet these hordes of soldiers must be clothed and equipped as well as fed. Foreign orders have started factory operation, which at once tends to relieve the stagnation in the steam-coal trade; the steel situation has turned from serious depression to rapid improvement, and the whole mineral industry may soon expect to share in this general business improvement.

To-day the financial horizon is so nearly cloudless that the prophets of had weather have little upon which to base their predictions. The new federal banking system makes the money reserves mobile as never before and the extension of credit is now possible without the veto power remaining in the hands of a small group of big men. Still another reason for belief in business betterment is the recognition, now becoming widespread, of the general interdependence of big business and the general public. On the one side, the people are realizing that they are and have been in reality the silent partner in big business, and now that there has come the promise of some regulation that will in large part prevent monopolistic centralization the people are interested in getting their share of returns that can come only with operation at a profit. On the other hand, the managers of the large corporations, the trustees of the investing public, are beginning to see that a certain financial security goes with public confidence and that the attitude to the public so tersely expressed thirty years ago by a pioneer in railroad financing does not pay dividends to-day.

Of course, optimism is apt to go to extremes. Already we are hearing such expressions as "trade boom," or "opportunity unparalleled in history" and "avalanche of prosperity," and a few hard-headed business men are quoted as thus characterizing the present situation. All this kind of talk indicates that a period of over-stimulation may threaten us, a condition that is somewhat symptomatic of the American temperament. The four months' record, however, can be summarized thus: While European countries have been mobilizing their armies and calling to the field of battle their reserves of soldiers, America has mobilized its credit and begun to send forward to the market place its vast reserves of foodstuffs and mineral products.

Secretary Redfield recognizes three periods of business condition as naturally following the declaration of war on August 1st last—those of shock, stimulation and readjustment. These three must be expected to affect in the same order all branches of American business, though the transition from one period to the next may not be simultaneous in all branches. Thus for several weeks after war was declared the exportation of wheat felt the shock and thousands of curleuls accumulated at eastern ports. With cotton the period of shock has been longer, but stimulation of export has now begun. With copper the resumption of sales to Europe seems slow in coming, but come it must, for in the modern world, whether at war or in peace, the red metal is a necessity of life.

As we look toward the south we find that our commerce with South America for the last four years has been one-sided to the extent of an unfavorable annual trade balance averaging more than $60,000,000. The fact that the balance of trade is against the United States in two of the three "ABC" countries should be taken only as an invitation to export more, and that $60,000,000 suggests the chance for further development of trade relations. We need meat and hides from Argentina, tin ore from Bolivia, rubber and coffee from Brazil and Venezuela, wool from Peru and Uruguay, nitrate from Chile, platinum from Colombia, cacao from Ecuador. What can we export in exchange?

To increase industrial prosperity this country needs to export finished rather than crude products and to import raw materials rather than manufactures. Betterment of industrial conditions can come best through expansion of manufacturing. The increase of the element of labor in the product exported will mean that we are not bartering away our heritage of natural resources, but rather that we are using these resources as a basis simply for the expenditure of labor, which renews itself.

Coming down to bottom facts, the United States will profit by the European war only as the nation makes larger and wider use of its mineral resources. Foreign markets in the main can be won and held only as the quality or quantity of the "Made in America" product rivals that of the goods offered by the other producing nations. The buyer, whether he be in the far east or in South America, wants the most and best for his money. Yet it would seem a safe rule of national conduct that industry should begin at home, and therefore every industrial opportunity in America should be improved. If these opportunities are recognized and grasped everyone of us can indulge in optimism.

MUST BE GIVEN

Stamp Tax Will Not Allow Purchase Price of Land to be Concealed.

It will not be possible any more to keep secret the price paid for real estate by writing in the deed "The sum of $1 and other valuable considerations," for under the new national deficiency tax law assessing land transfers a levy of $1 is to be paid on each $1000 of the actual price and a stamp for that sum must be affixed to the deed before it is recorded. The person giving the deed must not only attach the stamp, but he must cancel it by writing across it, his initials and the date, under a penalty of six months imprisonment.

Probably if a person who sold property for, say, $5.00 wanted to pay tax on $6000 he could do so.

SHOP EARLY

Merchants Urge the Public to Do Christmas Buying Now.

"Now is the time Christmas shoppers can do their buying to the best advantage," said a Charlevoix merchant yesterday. "Most of the local dealers now have holiday goods in stock. Early shopping will benefit not only the merchants but the public as well. Crowding the holiday season's buying into a few days means untold worry and confusion for the clerks, the deliveryman and the merchants. For the shopper who buys early there will be large stocks to pick from, better service on the part of the sales forces and more time to prepare articles for delivery, either in the city or out of it. In fact, early shopping means ease, comfort and satisfaction for shopper, clerk and business man."

CHRISTMAS PARCELS

Patrons of Post Office Urged To Do Their Mailing at an Early Date.

Postmaster Flanagan again urges patrons of the post office to do their Christmas mailing early. He also calls special attention to some of the rules of the department, which if observed will avoid considerable confusion and trouble.

Christmas packages should be—
(1) Mailed early.
(2) Wrapped securely.
(3) Addressed plainly.

Patrons who wish to avail themselves of the privilege of insuring packages mailed during the holiday season will call at the office for the required tags for the purpose instead of waiting until they reach the post office. This method will save a good deal of delay, as the tags can be filled out in detail at home and this will avoid the holiday rush at the post office.

Packages may bear the words "Not to be opened until Christmas" or a similar inscription.

The Citizens' Realty Company of Chicago have made eleven village plats on six different sections, making an aggregate of 3160 lots in all, located in Peaine township, Beaver Island.

The plats are all unrecorded and something like seventy lots have been sold by metes and bounds, all of which have been placed on record in this county. The lots all lie in the woods on the south side of the island.

WANTS TO FIND HIS MOTHER

Milwaukee Man Says He Thinks She is Living Near This City.

Last Seen By Him Over Ten Years Ago—Inquiries
So Far Fail to Locate Her.

Last Monday's mail brought a letter to this office from F. A. Connor of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, who is in search of his mother, whom he has not seen for over ten years. Mr. Connor states that the last time he heard from her she was living about three miles from this city, but later inquiries have failed to find her. Her name is Mrs. Cowell. The letter is given in full below and any information as to her whereabouts can be sent to this office or written direct to Mr. Connor at his Milwaukee address. Following is the letter:

Milwaukee, Dec. 4, 1914.
Editor Charlevoix Courier:
Dear Sir,—Would you be so kind as to help me find my mother? I have not seen her for about ten years and the last I heard from her she was in your city. They told me she lived out in the country about three miles and she goes by the name of Mrs. Cowell. If you will do this you will help a son who longs to hear from his mother.

I shall be very much obliged to you if you will let me know all about this matter.

Yours very truly,
F. A. Connor,

But One Carried.

The constitutional amendment allowing students and traveling men to vote while away from home on election day carried. Official figures obtained from the secretary of state's department show it to have a majority of 13,974 with only Emmet county missing. Wayne county came in with a majority of about 16,000, which placed the amendment beyond doubt of being lost. This is the only amendment which carried.

EVERY FARMER NEEDS FUEL

In All Sections Wood Lot is Usually Neglected.

Should Be Thinned Out and Refuse Burned, as Ashes Make Fine Fertilizer.

Every farmer needs fuel; every farmer needs fertilizer; and every farm lot needs improvement. Why not kill all three birds with one stone? By judiciously planned thinning the condition of the wood lot can be greatly improved; the material removed in the thinning can be burned as firewood; and the wood ashes left are so rich in potash as to make a valuable fertilizer.

The wood lot is, perhaps, the only farm crop to which the farmer has not considered it necessary to devote any care. His grains are sowed on carefully prepared soil; his vegetables are cultivated, and his fruit trees are pruned and sprayed; his forest trees alone are left to look out for themselves. This is the more remarkable when it is taken into consideration that any labor expended on the wood lot not only improves the final crop but ordinarily pays for itself as well. No detailed technical knowledge is required for the work; all that is necessary is the exercise of common sense.

It is obvious that the trees in any wood lot are not all of equal value. Some are taller, straighter, thrifter, and of species which yield more valuable wood than others. It is also obvious that there is a constant fight going on between the trees for light and growing space. The object of thinning is simply to give the best trees the advantage in this struggle by removing the poorer ones which interfere with their development.

First of all, defective trees should be removed. This includes trees attacked by insects or fungi (conks), trees with fire-scarred butts, with tops broken off by wind or lightning, and, in general, all trees which are unthrifty from any cause. Next come the trees of poor form, such as very crooked or very branched ones, which are interfering with the growth of better-formed neighbors. And finally are the trees of less valuable species, such as dogwood, ironwood and hornbeam. These not only take up space that might better be occupied by such species as oak and ash, but also, as a rule, produce seed more abundantly and so reproduce themselves at the expense of more desirable trees.

While the wood removed in the thinning is frequently of no value for other purposes, it can practically always be used to advantage for fuel. In this way the work can be made to pay for itself, particularly when the future use of the wood ashes for fertilizer is kept in mind. The essential point to remember in making such thinning is that the wood lot is a tree society, in which the best trees should be given every chance to attain the greatest possible development by the removal and utilization of the unfit.

You can have that picture taken now and it will be finished in time for Christmas. Don't wait—come in today.—Priest's Studio. Adv. 4912

DONATE FREELY

Newspapers Do the Most for the Least Money of Any Line of Business.

Ex-Governor Francis once said the following of newspapers:

"Each year the local newspaper gives from $500 to $1,000 in free lines to the community in which it is located. No other agency can or will do this. The editor, in proportion to his means, does more for his town than any other ten men, and in all fairness he ought to be supported—not because you like him or admire his writing, but because the local paper is the best advertisement a community can have. It may not be brilliantly edited or crowded with thought, but it is of more benefit to the community than the teacher or the preacher. Understand me, I do not mean morally, and yet on moral questions you will find most of the papers on the right side. To-day the editors of the local papers do the most for the least money of any people on earth."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out of this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever. Since cases of deafness are caused by Catarrh which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Druggists, Everywhere. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

Potato Omelet.—Take a cupful of mashed potatoes, three eggs, with yolks and whites beaten separately, a scant teaspoonful of salt, a dash of white pepper, half a cupful of sweet milk and a heaping teaspoonful of flour. Beat and grease a large saucepan or frying pan and pour the mixture into it. Keep on top of stove at moderate heat till set and browned on the under side. Then set on the rack in the oven to brown on top.

Asparagus Omelet.—Break the yolks and whites of four eggs into separate dishes, beat the yolks till thick, add four tablespoonfuls of milk and salt and pepper. Then fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Melt a little butter in an omelet pan, and when it is hot turn in the eggs. Brown well and then set in the oven one minute. Have asparagus tips cooked and seasoned. Spread on the omelet, fold the letter and turn on a hot platter and garnish with parsley.

A Quick Revenge

Story of the Balkans

By F. A. MITCHEL

The turbulent cause, or at least the pretended cause, of the war between the triple alliance and the triple entente was when a struggle was inaugurated between the Christians and the Turks in the Balkan states. About 1895 the Christians made preparations to throw off the yoke of their Mohammedan masters, who had dominated them for centuries. The condition of the people was terrible.

When this became intolerable the Christians began to organize for revolution. But all must be secret, and to work in secret was extremely difficult, for Turkish soldiers patrolled the country and were always on the watch for some movement on the part of those they were keeping subservient to them. In each town or hamlet was a revolutionary committee, which met, usually, in some loft where it was secure from the enemy's spies.

But these committees must form some sort of union, for so long as they worked separately they could accomplish nothing. The only way such a union could be formed was through secret communications. This developed a number of persons whose business it was to carry messages between the revolutionary committees.

One night one of these messengers was summoned to attend a meeting of a revolutionary committee to be held in the cellar of the dwelling of one of the revolutionaries. The town in which the meeting took place was only a hamlet, and all was dark by 9 o'clock. At the appointed hour the messenger appeared before the house, the door silently opened, and the man passed in.

THREW HIM INTO THE FLAMES.

and was conducted to the cellar. There he found the committee lighted by a single candle. But there were no who were seen through which a ray could be seen from without.

"Hark!"

GOOD SUGGESTION TO CHARLEVOIX PEOPLE

It is surprising the amount of old, foul matter the simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler's, drains from the system. This remedy became famous by curing appendicitis and acts on BOTH the upper and lower bowel so thoroughly that ONE DOSE relieves your stomach, acts on the stomach and constipation almost IMMEDIATELY. We are mighty glad we are Charlevoix agents for Adler's. B. A. Henson, druggist.

taken measures to get rid of a band of Turkish robbers who have made their headquarters at a small village not a dozen miles distant. These men have been absorbing the provisions and animals of our people and carrying off their women. Two days ago when a farmer came in at evening from his work he found his son murdered and his wife and his daughter missing. As soon as he could recover from the shock, mad for revenge, he raised a posse and followed the robbers. Finding them encamped at night in a wood, the posse fired upon them. They fled, leaving the women.

"These Turks are a part of the band who have taken up their quarters in G. in a house that stands by itself, thus permitting them to defend themselves on all sides if attacked. They have barricaded the doors and windows.

"Go to the surrounding towns and tell the committee of each to send what men it can to attack the robbers' stronghold at 2 o'clock on Friday morning. Let all the parties take position without the town of G. to be ready when ordered to advance upon the robbers. Let them have arms and ammunition, but we will provide what may be necessary to unearth the villains provided other means than bullets be required. Go and caution every one to be discreet."

"Who is to command the attack?" asked Boris.

"The committee has chosen me to command."

"Very well; I will see that at the hour appointed at least three parties will be in position to close in on the robbers."

The messenger passed out into the night, and the band committee, Alexander Arkad, gave instructions to two of the men to get ready certain articles that would likely be needed in the attack. Then those present one by one silently left the house.

At 2 o'clock on the appointed morning four parties approached G. from opposite points and stopped a short distance outside the town. That headed by Alexander was the largest and carried, among other articles, a heavy piece of oak timber. Alexander made a circuit around the town to see that the different detachments were in position and returned to his own party. He ordered all to wait fifteen minutes by the watch, then close in about the robbers' stronghold.

It was a perfectly clear night. No moon, but myriads of stars glittered above, brighter for being seen through the clear atmosphere of that mountainous region. The quiet heavens were in contrast with the struggle about the town. The time the men waited seemed interminable, and all were relieved when it was over. Then each body advanced as quietly as possible, covering that part of the house to be attacked as appointed. Last came Alexander and his six men, four of them bearing the heavy timber. Flushing one end at the door of the house, they first swung it back, then drove it forward, and the stillness was broken by a loud thud against the door.

Again the timber was swung back and thrust forward, the contact resounding in the still night. No light appeared in the village. If a face was at any window it could not be seen. Doubtless citizens in their beds soon realized that something was in store for the men who had been terrorizing them and offered a silent prayer that the end of their sufferings was about to come. The women huddled their children to their breasts and abated.

The door was well barred, and it required a dozen blows of the interlocking run to force it open. When the desired result was obtained and there was nothing to obstruct a passage several of the attacking party entered, but they were received by a fire from within and retired.

And now the besieging party began to discover that, though they were very near the house, the robbers found ways of bringing their fire to bear upon them. Several were picked off, when Alexander ordered his men to withdraw behind any article of defense they could find. Then for a time there was a desultory firing between the two forces, with no definite results. At last Alexander directed one of his men who had remained in the rear to bring forward combustibles.

Several men took kindling saturated with kerosene, ran swiftly to a part of the house where it was most difficult for the robbers to shoot them and, crouching on the ground, placed the kindling against the house and ignited it.

The besieged now saw that their doom was sealed. If they remained where they were they would be burned or suffocated; if they surrendered they would receive no quarter. They could only sell their lives as dearly as possible. But there was nothing to shoot at, for the attacking party were all screened. Presently a flame began to crawl up from the kindling, growing brighter and brighter, crawling higher and higher, till it cast a light on the surrounding houses. Then the Turks could better discern the positions of their enemies and recommenced their firing.

And now faces began to appear at the neighboring windows. But the mistice of the Turks, who, since they must die, were ready to kill even women and children, drove away these ineffective persons. Not a shot was fired by the attackers, though the Turks exposed themselves hoping to die, rather than by the bullet than by fire. They had shown no mercy to the Christians whom they had robbed, murdered and tortured, and now their destroyers would not grant them the boon of land instead of fire.

By this time the house was enveloped in flames. A Turk ran out, hoping to be shot. He was killed with bullets, but those who shot him took care that the shot should be struck in a vital part. He fell, and one of his enemies—the man whose wife and daughter had been carried away—picked him up and threw him into the flames.

The cries of these wretches who had long terrorized this region grew less and fainter till at last they ceased altogether. Then and not till then the people of the hamlet came out of their houses, many of them in their night clothes, and, wild with joy, danced around the building, from which still issued fearful fumes. It may seem barbarous to us, living in a land of law and order, but when the oppressed turn against a barbarous oppressor the Christian virtues are not to be expected.

When it was all over the several detachments withdrew each to its own locality, while the older persons of the town went back to bed, leaving the children to dance about the smoking ruins. The struggle for the freedom of the Balkans from Turkish domination grew in magnitude till it became a great war. The Turk was driven to Constantinople, and it looked awhile as if the states would be freed from Turkish rule. But the Balkans are composed of different races, speaking different languages, and having achieved their purpose in getting rid of the Turk, they began to quarrel among themselves. Then their attention was again called back to Constantinople as a source of fear.

But the Turk had the only advantage of their day. More recently the flame of a civil war all over Europe for the possession of these little states that were intended to be in perpetuity neutral, and a reason for the war.

Sweden Has Motor Train.

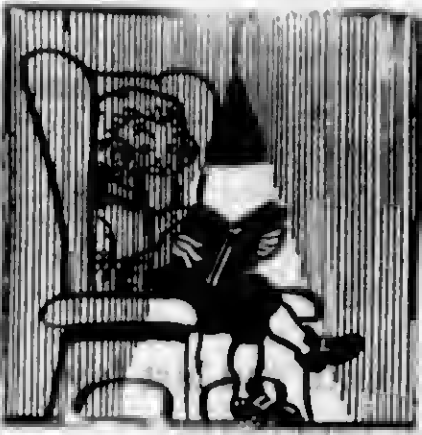

A Diesel electric railway motorcar has been tested on the railways of Sweden. The car is driven by electric motors, which are furnished with current by a generator mounted on the car driven by a Diesel oil engine. The whole equipment was built in Sweden. The motor car accommodates fifty passengers and weighs about 70,000 pounds. The car has run over 2,000 miles on the Swedish railways since the beginning of the year, usually at speeds of twenty to thirty-five miles per hour. The engine burns crude oil distilled from Swedish shale, and the fuel consumption is about nine pounds per mile.—Engineering News.

Manganese Ore.

Though there are many deposits of manganese ore in the United States, most of them are too small to furnish large amounts of ore regularly. Certain classes of high grade ores used in the glass and chemical trades are not known to occur in commercial quantities in the United States. It is a curious fact that the United States, with enormous deposits of iron ore, depends on deposits in foreign countries for most of its supply of the metals used as alloys in the manufacture of steel, such as manganese, nickel, chromium and vanadium.

Weight of Aluminum.

Aluminum is three times as heavy volume for volume as distilled water, and as compared to gold, the heaviest metal, aluminum is about one-eighth its weight. A cubic foot of gold weighs 1,200 pounds, a cubic foot of aluminum 160 pounds and a cubic foot of water 62.5 pounds.

SYNOPSIS

Owing to hard times and the failure of Ebenezer Rule's factory the people of Old Trail Town contemplate buying no presents and having no Christmas.

A town meeting is held, and the decision is reached to have no Christmas, not even for the children.

CHAPTER III. A BARE CHRISTMAS.

THEY all took the news home to different uses. "Matthew," said Ellen Bourne, "the town meeting voted not to have any Christmas this year. That is, to ask the folks not to have any—'emut of expense."

"Sensible move," said Matthew sharpening his ax by the kitchen stove.

"It'll be a relief for most folks not to have the mugs and the clutter," said Ellen's mother.

"Hey, king and country!" said Ellen's old father, whittling a stick. "I ain't done no more'n look on at a Christmas for ten years and more—wih no children around."

"I know," said Ellen Bourne, "I know."

The announcement was greeted by Mortimer Bates with a shup of the knee.

"Goodby, folderol!" he said. "We need a sane Christmas in the world a good sight more'n we need a sane Fourth, most places. Good work."

But Bennett and Gussie Bates burst into walls.

"Hush!" said Miss Bates peremptorily. "You ain't the only ones, remember. It's no Christmas for nobody."

"I thought the rest of 'em would have one an' we could go over to theirs," soothed Gussie.

"I'll rather pretend it's Christmas in other houses—'even if we ain't it!" murmured Bennett.

"He says it's the man and woman," admonished Mrs. Mortimer Bates.

At the Browns' little Emily Moran made an unexpected deduction.

"I won't stay in bed all day Christmas," she gave him.

"Stay in bed!" echoed Miss Moran.

"Why on this earth should you stay in bed?"

"Well, if we get up then it's Christmas, and you can't stop it!" Little Emily triumphed.

When they told Pep, the minister's son, after a long preparation by story and other gradual approach and a Socratic questioning cleverly winning damming adulation from Pep, he looked up to his father's face thoughtfully.

"If they ain't no Christmas birthday this year, is it a lie that Christ was born?" he demanded.

And secretly the children took counsel with one another. Would Buff Miles, the tenor in the church choir, take them out after dark on Christmas eve to sing church choir serenades at folks' gates of would he not? And when they thought that he might not, because this would be considered Christmas celebration and would only make the absence of present giving the more conspicuous, as in the case of the Sunday schools themselves, they needed still another theological quandary.

For if it was true that Christ was born then Christmas was his birthday, and if Christmas was his birthday, wasn't it wicked not to pay any attention?

None of them all little Tab Winslow rejoiced. His brothers and sisters made the time fearful with questionings as to the effect on Santa Claus, and how would they get word to him, and would it be Christmas in the city, and why couldn't they move there and other matters denoting the reversal of this their earth. But Tab slipped out the kitchen door to the corner of the barn, where the great turkey gobbler who had been named held his empire trustingly.

"Oh, Theophilus Thistle-down," said Tab to him, "you're the only one in this town that's going to have a Christmas. You ain't got to be it."

The placid was latched to the Old Trail Town postoffice wall between a summons to join the army and navy of the United States and the reward offered for an escaped convict—all three manifesting something of the stage of society's development.

Owing to the local business depression and to the current private decisions to get up very few home Christmas celebrations this year, and also to the vote of the various lodges, churches, Sunday schools, etc., etc., to forego the usual Christmas presents, the merchants of this town have one and all united with most of the folks to petition the rest to omit all Christmas presents, believing that the Christmas spirit will be kept up best by all agreeing to act alike. All that is willing may substitute it by signing below and notifying others.

THE COMMITTEE.

There were only two folk living in Old Trail Town. Already two-thirds of their signatures were scrawled on the sheets of foolscap tucked beneath the notice.

On the day after her return home, Jenny Wing stood and stared at the notice. Her mother had written to her of the town's talk, but the placard made it seem worse.

"I'll go in on the way home and see what Mary says," she thought, and asked for the letter that lay in Mary Chavah's box, next her own. They gave her the letter without question.

All Old Trail Town asks for its neighbor's mail and reads its neighbor's postmarks and gets to know the different writings and to inquire after them, like persons. "He ain't got so much of a curl to his M today," one will say of a superscription. "Better write right back and chirk 'im up," or "Here's her that don't send her letters good. Tell her about that, why don't you?" Or, "This writing's a stranger in me. I'll just wait a minute to see if birth or death gets out of the envelope."

As she closed Mary's gate and hurried on the walk, in a keen wind blowing with little pricking flakes, Jenny was startled to see both parlor windows open. The white muslin curtains were blowing idly as if there were in the air. Turning as a matter of course to the path that led to the kitchen, she was halted by Mary, who came out the front door with a rug in her hands.

"Step right in this way," said Mary. "This door's unfastened."

"Forevermore!" Jenny said. "Mary Chavah! What you got your house all open for? You ain't moving?"

A gust of wind took Mary's answer. She tossed the rug across the way leading to the house and beckoned Jenny into the house and into the parlor. And when she had greeted Jenny after the months of her absence:

"See," Mary said exultantly, "don't it look grand and empty? Look at it first and then come on in and I'll tell you about it."

The white papered walls of the two rooms were bare of pictures; the floor had been scoured and laid with rugs. The window seats and chairs, the table for the lamp and the long shelves of her grandmother's books—these were all that the room held. A white arch divided the two chambers, like a benign brow whose face had long been dimmed away. It was all exquisitely clean and free of a little snow drifted in through the muslin curtains. The breath of the two women showed.

"What on earth you done that for?" Jenny demanded.

Mary Chavah stood in the empty archway, the satisfaction on her face not veiling its pure austerity. She was not much past thirty-three, but she looked older, for she was gaunt. Her flesh had lost its firmness, her dress making had stooped her, her strong frame moved as if it habitually stilled dored its way in her broad forehead and deep eyes and somewhat in her silent mouth, her read the woman—the rest of her was obscured in her gentle reticence. She had a gray shadow, blue bordered, folded tightly about her head and pinned under her chin, and it wrapped her to her feet.

"I feel like a thing in a new shek," she said. "Come on in where it's warm."

Instead of moving her dining room table to her kitchen, as most of Old Trail Town did in winter, Mary had moved her cooking stove into the dining room, had improvised a calico curtained cupboard for the utensils, and there she lived and sewed. The windows were bare.

"I'll let the parlor have curtains if it wants to," she had said, "but in the room I live in I want every strip of the sun I can get."

There were no plants, though every house in Old Trail Town had a window of green, and slips without number were offered.

"You can have flowers all you want," she said once; "I like 'em too well to box 'em up in the house."

And there were no books.

"I don't read," she admitted; "I ain't ever read a book in my life but I'll grub's Progress and the first four chapters of 'Ben-Hur.' What's the use of pretending when books in such a nuisance to dust? Grandfather's books in the parlor—oh, they ain't books; they're furniture."

But she had a little bookcase whose shelves were filled with her patterns—in her dressmaking she never used a fashion plate.

"I like to make 'em up and cut 'em out," she sometimes told her friends. "I don't care nothing, whatever the dresses when they get done—more fool the women for ornamenting them selves up like lamp shades. I always think 'I just do love to fuss with the paper and make it do like I say. Land, I've got my cupboard full of more patterns than I'll ever get orders for if I lived to be born again!'"

She sat down before the cooking stove and drew off her wooden mittens. She folded a hand on her cheek, forcing the cheek out of drawing by her hand's pressure. There was always about her gestures a curious nakedness—indeed, about her face and hands they were naive, perfectly likely to reveal themselves in their current awkwardness and ugliness of momentary expression which, by its very frankness, made a new law as it broke an old one.

"Don't you tell folks I've been house cleaning," she warned Jenny. "The town would think I was crazy, with the thermometer acting up so. Anyway, I ain't been house cleaning. I just simply got so sick to death of all the truck piled up in this house that I had to get away from it. And this morning it looked so clean and white and smooth outdoors that I felt so cluttered up I couldn't sew. I be gun on this room, and then I kept on with the parlor. I've took out the lambrequins and 'leven pictures and the whatnot and four moth catching rugs and four sofa pillows, and I've packed the whole of 'em into the attic. I've done the same to my bedroom. I've emptied my house out of all the stuff the folks and the folks' folks and their folks—clear back to Grandmother Hackett—had in here. I mean the truck part, not the good. And I guess now I've got some room to live in."

Jenny looked at her admiringly and asked: "How did you ever do it? I can't bear to throw things away; I can't bear to move things from where they've been."

"I didn't use to want to," said Mary. "but lately—I do. The winter's so clean, you kind of have to keep up. What's the news?"

"Here's a letter," Jenny said and handed it. "I didn't look to see who it's from—I guess it's a strange writing, anyway."

Mary glanced indifferently at it. "It's from Lily's boy, out west," she said, and laid the letter on the shelf. "I meant what's the news about you?"

Jenny's eyes widened swiftly. "News about me?" she said. "Who said there was any news about me?"

"Nobody," Mary said evenly. "but you've been gone 'most a year, ain't you?"

"Oh," Jenny said, "yes."

For really, when Old Trail Town stopped to think of it, Jenny Wing was Mrs. Bruce Rule and had been so for a year. But no one thought of calling her that. It always takes Old Trail Town several years to admit its changes. They would graduate first to "Jenny Wing that was," and then to "Jenny Wing What's-name," and then to "Mrs. Rule that was Jenny Wing."

"You tell me some news," Jenny added. "Mother don't ever write much but the necessities."

"That's all there's been," Mary Chavah told her. "We ain't had no luxuries for news in forever."

"But there's that notice in the post-office," cried Jenny. "I come home to spend Christmas, and there's that notice in the postoffice. Mother wrote me that I've brought home some little things I made."

"Oh—Christmas," Mary said. "Yes, they all got together and concluded best not have any. You know, since the failure—"

Mary hesitated—Ebenezer Rule was Bruce Rule's uncle.

"I know," said Jenny. "It's Uncle Ebenezer. I don't know how he's going to tell twice when he comes. To think it's in our family, the reason they can't have any Christmas."

"Nonsense," said Mary, briskly; "no Christmas presents is real sensible, my way of thinking. It's been 'leven years since I've given a Christmas present to anybody. The first Christmas after mother died, I couldn't—I just couldn't. That kind of got me out of the idea, and then I see all the nonsense of it."

"The nonsense?" Jenny repeated.

"If you don't like folks, you don't want to give nothing to them or take nothing from them. And if you do like 'em you don't want to have to wait to Christmas to give 'em things. Ain't that so?" Mary Chavah put it.

"No," said Jenny. "It ain't. Not a bit so." And when Mary laughed, questioned her, pressed her, "It seems perfectly awful to me not to have a Christmas," Jenny could say only, "I feel like the winter didn't have no backbone to it."

"It's a dumb time, winter," Mary asserted. "What's the use of tricking it up with gurgles and pretending it's a live time? Besides, if you ain't got the money, you ain't got the money. And nobody has; this year 'tween they go ahead and buy things anyway, like the city."

I Was Thin and All Run Down

Now Since Using Health-Tone I AM PLUMP HEALTHY AND HAPPY

That is what you will write us soon after reading for the $1 FREE HEALTH-TONE TREATMENT Which we want you to test at our expense.

There is a reason why you are thin. Let "Health-Tone" overcome this reason. Let us tell you your food does not follow you up. "Health-Tone" is a Nervous Tonic and Flesh Producer may well be called the medical marvel of the age. So positive are we that "Health-Tone" will fasten you up, fill out the hollows of face and body, put good solid "stay there" flesh on your bones and the vigor and glow of health in your entire form that we agree to send you our check for five dollars should "Health-Tone" fail to produce the results desired. We want every thin, skinny, sickly person to test this wonderful "Health-Tone" remedy and prove to their own satisfaction that it is no longer necessary to remain in the "skin and bone" class, an object of pity and derision to all. "Health-Tone" is guaranteed to make you flesh up, if it doesn't we will pay you this five dollar forfeit. We simply ask you to test the treatment if you stand in need of it. Cut out this notice now, mail it to the "Health-Tone Co., 99-1st St., Birmingham, N. Y., with 52 cent stamps to help pay postage and distribution expenses and you will receive a regular $1.00 ten day treatment of "Health-Tone" and an iron-clad agreement to send you our check for five dollars should a full "Health-Tone" treatment fail to fasten you up. You are to be the judge. If this $1.00 treatment benefits you pay us for it. If it does not, we owe the money. The not fail however to send for it, now, at once, if you are below normal in weight and health.

CHAPTER IV.
The Little Nephew.

JENNY shook her head. "I got seven Christmas presents relatives and ten Christmas presents friends, and I've only spent $2.80 on 'em all," she said, "for material. But I've made little things for every one of 'em. It don't seem as if that much had ought to hurt any one." Jenny looked past her out the window, somewhere beyond the snow. "They's something else," she added. "It ain't all present giving."

"Nonsense," said Mary Chavah. "Take the present trading away from Christmas and see how long it'll last. I was in the city once for Christmas. I'll never forget it—never. I never see folks work like the folks worked there. The streets was Bedlam. The stores was worse. 'What'll I get him?' 'I've just got to get something for her.' 'It don't seem as if this is nice enough for the city'—"

SAFETY FIRST

Schools are Urged by State Superintendent to Participate in a Safety First Movement.

State Superintendent F. L. Keeler is urging the schools of the state to carry on the work along Safety First lines with renewed vigor this fall. The schools were the means of accomplishing much good through their efforts last year, but the number of accidents due to carelessness is still more than it should be. The greater multiplicity of street cars and automobiles and increasing traffic make the danger greater. The number of children that have been run over by street cars and automobiles is appalling. In some cases the child did not stop to look before crossing the street; in many cases he wanted to show other children how skillful he was in dodging. Officers and ordinances cannot prevent all accidents. Teaching the child the folly of dodging in front of moving vehicles will be far more effective and a campaign of education against careless practices should be carried on. In this day of electric lines and interurbans children—their parents also—should be made to understand the danger of touching broken and fallen wires. The bonfire is a feature of the fall season. Children should be warned against building fires too close to buildings, being careless with matches, playing too near the fire. Boys, more than girls, like to "take a chance." To some it seems cowardly to be careful. The home and the school should co-operate in eradicating this idea. Carefulness and watchfulness should be instilled in the minds of children.

Smith-Green.

News has reached this city of the marriage of Miss Ella Green and Ava Smith Monday morning at the parish of the Holy Name cathedral in Chicago. They left immediately after the ceremony for a three months tour in the west. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are both formerly of this city and their many friends extend their congratulations to the happy couple.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT

Condition of crops throughout the state ending December 1.

The condition of wheat as compared with an average per cent. is 91 in the state, 92 in the southern counties, 95 in the central counties, 96 in the northern counties and 97 in the upper peninsula. One year ago the per cent. was 98 in the state, central and northern counties, 94 in the southern counties and 102 in the upper peninsula.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in November at 85 flour mills is 179,765 and at 93 elevators and to grain dealers 192,367, or a total of 372,133 bushels. Of this amount 253,494 bushels were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties, 108,521 in the central counties and 10,118 in the northern counties and upper peninsula. The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the four months August-November is 5,500,000. Thirty-five mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in November.

Rye—The condition of rye as compared with an average per cent. is 95 in the state, 94 in the southern counties, 96 in the central counties and 97 in the northern counties and upper peninsula. One year ago the per cent. was 96 in the state and central counties, 95 in the southern counties, 97 in the northern counties and 101 in the upper peninsula.

Fall Pasture—The condition of fall pasture as compared with an average per cent. is 92 in the state, 90 in the southern counties, 93 in the central counties, 94 in the northern counties and 98 in the upper peninsula.

Live Stock—The condition of live stock throughout the state is 97 for horses, cattle, sheep and swine.

Mission Circle Meets.

The Mission Circle of the Baptist church met last Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. A. Edwards on May street. About thirty were present and a very profitable afternoon was spent. A potluck supper was served, making the event a most enjoyable one. The meeting occurred on the date of Mrs. Edwards' birthday and she received many congratulations and good wishes.

In Charge of Tug.

The ore barge Lehigh, which went on the shore near Manistique during the latter part of November, went up the lake Sunday night towed by the big wrecking tug Reed. Part of her load of ore was thrown overboard and the balance unloaded at Boyne City. She was badly damaged, two big steam pumps being required to keep her afloat on the trip.

Adds New Members.

North Bay Arbor took in sixteen new members Saturday evening. Quality Arbor degree team did the initiating for them and it was certainly well done. After the meeting chicken pie supper was served.

GOOD ROAD COMMANDMENT.

"The first and last commandment in earth road maintenance is to keep the surface well drained. To insure good drainage the ditches should be kept open, all obstructions removed and a smooth crown maintained. Except for very heavy soil the road machine or scraper may be used very effectively for this work. The machine should be used once or twice a year, and the work should be done when the soil is damp so that it will pack and bake into a hard crust. Wide and shallow side ditches should be maintained with sufficient fall and capacity to dispose of surface water. These ditches can in most places be constructed and repaired with a road machine.—Northwestern Gazette.

MIDDLE WEST BACKWARD.

Charles Dillon Asserts That It Is Slow In Road Building.

With "Roads, Good and Bad," as his topic, Charles Dillon of Topeka, Kan., pointed out the values of good roads in a farming community in an address before the international dry farming congress recently held in Wichita, Kan. He asserted that some of the middle western states are backward in road construction.

"Bad roads and good spirits will never be found together," he said. "Bad roads and tenantry, bad roads and poor churches and schools, bad roads and no social life, bad roads and discontent—these combinations are all ways to be encountered."

"The middle west has been lamentably slow in road building. The farmers are not always to blame for poor highways. I believe that if every dollar of taxes for the purpose were properly expended there is scarcely a county in Kansas or Missouri in which all roads might not be improved in three years and the improvements be maintained.

"BAD ROADS AND GOOD SPIRITS WILL NEVER BE FOUND TOGETHER."

"And this does not mean necessarily that money is stolen in all of these counties, although it has been stolen in a number of them. It means that in competent men under the poorest management have squandered or wasted the people's money."

Mr. Dillon pointed out that Wyoming, with a population of less than 200,000, has nearly 100 miles more improved highways than has Kansas, with its 1,750,000 population.

"In Wyoming 4 per cent of the road mileage is improved," he continued. "In Kansas we have four-tenths of 1 per cent of the mileage improved. Missouri, with its 4,000,000 people, has only four-tenths of 1 per cent more improved highways than has Wyoming."

That the principle of state aid to counties and other local communities is a prime factor in the improved highways of the future was urged by Mr. Dillon.

"At present there are in the United States 20,741 miles of road improved, either wholly or in part, by state aid," he said. "Of the 2,235,812 miles of roads in the United States, 223,774 miles, or about 10 per cent, are classed as improved."

"The value of state aid, however, is not to be measured by figures alone, for the bulk of the money comes, and always must come, from the counties and townships. In the past every county built roads as it chose, and the services of trained engineers were usually out of the question. State aid has changed this. The best engineering skill is available for all works of importance, and there is a co-operation between counties that makes for a stimulus to further improvements."

Finally Mr. Dillon said, "There is no phase of the road problem more important than that of maintenance."

Convict Work In Wisconsin.

Wisconsin has been trying convict labor in road work for some time and with considerable success. During the past summer two camps composed of convicts were established, one near Waupun and the other at Taycheedah. At the Waupun camp two and a half miles of road now is under construction, and when completed will connect Waupun and the village of Chester.

The road is fifteen feet wide and of the best possible macadam construction. The men are under the honor system, wear a neat khaki uniform and live and work exactly like a hired crew, the only guards being two unarmored experts in road building.

"The success attending upon this work points to its fullest development and to the reconstruction of Wisconsin's prison system along the lines suggested in the report made by the national committee on prisons and prison labor," says that organization.

The Humble Librettist.

In the history of the opera there are many curious anomalies, but perhaps the strangest is the role played by the librettist. For the most part obscure and unimportant, his racks have nevertheless been recruited from the ablest and most brilliant men of letters. Among those who have undertaken the part are such unlikely names as Voltaire, Goethe, Wieland, Addison and Fielding, while others of considerable poetic talent, as, for example, Metastasio, Calzabigi, Rimsky, Bolto and Coppee, have tried their hand at libretto writing with assurance, giving to it their best efforts. And yet the successful librettists are few—the merest handful out of a harvest of centuries.

after what she gave me last year. I can hear 'em yet. They spent money wicked. And I said to myself that I was glad from my head to my feet that I was done with Christmas. And I been preaching it ever since. And I'm pleased this town has had to come to it."

"It ain't the way I feel," said Jenny. She got up and wandered to the window and hardly heard while Mary went on with more of the sort. "It seems kind of like going back on the way things are," Jenny said as she turned. Then, as she made ready to go, she broke off and snatched her hands for her. "Oh," she said, "it don't seem as if I could bear it not to have Christmas-not this year."

"You mean your and Bruce's first Christmas," said Mary. "Mark my words, he'll be glad to be rid of the fuss. Men always are. Come on out the front door if you're going," said Mary. "You might as well use it when it's open."

As Jenny passed the open parlor door she looked in again at the bare room.

"Don't you like pictures?" she asked abruptly.

"I like 'em when I like 'em," Mary answered. "I didn't like 'em I had up here—I had a shot stag and a fruit piece and an eagle with a child in its claws. I've bathed 'em for years, but I ain't ever had the heart to throw 'em out till now. They're over behind the coal bin."

Jenny thought, "They're a picture over to mother's," she said, "that she ain't put up because she ain't had the money to frame it. I guess I'll bring it over after supper and see if you don't want it up here, frame or no frame." She looked at Mary and laughed. "If I bring it to you tonight," she said, "it ain't a Christmas present—legal. But if I want to call it a Christmas present inside of me the town can't help that."

"What's the picture?" Mary asked.

"I don't know who it represents," said Jenny. "But it's nice."

When Jenny had gone Mary Clayton stood in the snow shaking the rug she had left outside and looking at the clean, white town.

"It looks like it was waiting for something," she thought.

A door opened and shut. A child shouted. In the northeast a skidding body had come sprawling above the trees. Capella, of the brightness of a hundred of our stars, leaped into the twilight like a little star.

Mary closed the parlor windows and stood for a moment immersed in the quiet and emptiness of the clean rooms.

"This looks like it was waiting for something, too," she thought. "But it ought to know I won't get it," she added whimsically.

Then she went back to the warm room and saw the letter on the shelf. She meant to go in a moment to the stable to make it safe there for the night; so, with the gray snow still blinding her head and falling to her feet, she sat by the stove and read the letter:

"—because she was sick but two days and we never thought of her dying till she was dead. Otherwise we'd have telegraphed. She was buried yesterday, right here, and we'll get some kind of stone. You say how you think it'd ought to be marked. That's about all there is to tell except about Yes. He's six years old now and, Aunt Mary, this ain't a place for him. He's a nice little fellow and I hate for him to get rough and he will if he stays here. I'll do the best I can and earn money to help keep him but I want he should come and live with you—

"I won't have him!" said Mary. Charvah stood.

—he could come along with a tag all right and I could send his things by freight. He ain't got much. You couldn't help but like him and I hate for him to get rough. Please answer and oblige your loving nephew. JOHN BLOOD

Mary kept reading the letter and starting out into the snow. Her sister Lily's boy—they wanted to send him to her. Lily's boy and Adam Blood's—the man whose son she had thought would be her son. It was twenty years ago that he had been coming to the house this same house—and she had thought that he was coming to see her, had never thought of Lily at all till Lily had told her of her own betrothal to him. It hurt yet. It had hurt freshly when he had died, five years ago. Now Lily was dead, and Adam's eldest son, John, wanted to send this little brother to her, to have.

"I won't take him," she said a great many times, and kept reading the letter and starting out into the snow. For Lily she had no tears—she seldom had tears at all. But after a little while she was conscious of a weight through her and in her, aching in her throat, her breast, her body. She rose and went near to the warmth of the fire, then to the freedom of the window against which the snow lay piled, then she sat down in the place where she worked beside her patterns. The gray shawl still bound her head, and it was still in her mind that she must go to the barn and lock it. But she did not go—she sat in the darkening room with all her past crowding it.

That first day with Adam at the Blood's, given at his homecoming. They had met with all that perturbation, really made intimacy which a school friendship of years before had allowed. As she had walked beside him she had known well what he was going to mean to her. She remembered the moment when he had contrived to ask her to wait until the others went, so that he might walk home with her. And when they had reached home there on the porch, where she had just shaken the rugs in the snow, Lily had been sitting, a stool—some of the stools now at length banished to the shed—holding the hurt uncle that had kept her from the picture. Adam had stayed an hour, and they had sat beside Lily. He had come again and again, and they had always sat beside Lily. Mary remembered that those were the days when she was happy in things—the house and the look of the rooms and of the little garden from the porch and of the old red cushioned rocking chairs on the bay "stoop." She had loved her clothes and her little routines, and all these things had seemed desirable and ultimate because they two were sharing them. Then one day Mary had joined Lily and Adam there on the porch, and Lily had been looking up with new eyes, and Mary had searched her face, and then Adam's face, and they had all seemed in a sudden nakedness, and Mary had known that a great place was closed against her.

—Since then house and porch and garden and routines had become like those of other places. She had always been shut outside something, and always she had borne burdens. The death of her parents, families of need, worst of all a curious feeling that the place closed against her was somehow hers. Then, so to say, she and herself had come out and she need to say that to herself, somehow. "There's two of us, and we don't meet—we don't meet."

"And now he wants me to take her boy and Adam's," she kept saying. "I'll never do such a thing—never."

She thought that the news of Lily's death was what gave her the strange, bodily hurt that had seized her—the news that what she was used to was gone; that she had no sister; that the days of their being together and all the tasks of their upbringing were finished. Then she thought that the remembering of those days of her happiness and her pain, and the ache of what ought have been and of what never was, had come to torture her again. But the feeling was rather the weight of some judgment thing, the myopia of something that grew with what it fed on the grasp upon her of something that would not let her go.

She had never seen them after their marriage, and so she had never seen either of the children. Lily had once sent her a picture of John, but she had never sent one of this other little boy. Mary tried to recall what they had ever said of him. She could not even remember his baptismal name but she knew that they had called him "Yes" because it was the first word he had learned to say and because he had said it to everything. "The baby can say 'Yes,'" Lily had written once. "I guess it's all he'll ever be able to say." He says it all day long. And once later: "We've taken to calling the baby 'Yes,' and now he calls himself that. 'Yes' wants it," he says, and 'Take Yes,' and 'Yes is going off now.' His father likes it. He says yes is everything and to is nothing. I don't think that means much, but we call him that for fun." But Mary could not remember what the child's real name was. What difference did it make? As if she could have a child meddling round the house while she was sewing! But, of course, this was not the real reason. The real reason was that she could not bring up a child—did she not know that?

"He's six years old now, and, Aunt Mary, this ain't a place for him. He's a nice little fellow and I hate for him to get rough and he will if he stays here." She tried to think who else could take him. They had no one. Adam, she knew, had no one. Some of the neighbors there by the ranch it was absurd to send him that long journey, so she would think that long journey with all the old doubts. And all the while the weight in her body grew and filled her, and she was strangled with seems of her breath.

"What she was?" she said aloud, and got up to kindle a light. She was amazed to see that it was a clock and long past her supper hour. As she took from the clock shelf the key to the barn, some one rapped at the back door and came through the cold kitchen with friendly familiarity.

Jenny, a school over her head, her face glowing with the cold, and in her mittened hands a hot parcel.

"My hand's just frozen," Jenny said. "I didn't want to roll this thing, so I carried it out, and it blew considerable. It's the picture." "Get yourself warm," Mary bade her. "I'll undo it. Who is it of?" she asked, as the papers came away.

"That's what I don't know," said Jenny. "But I've always liked it around. I thought maybe you'd know. It was a picture which, in those days, had not before come to the Trail Town. The figure was that of a youth, done by a master of the times, the head and shoulders of a youth who seemed to be looking passionately at something outside the picture.

"There it is, anyhow," Jenny added. "If you like it enough to hang it up, hang it up. It's a Christmas present!" Jenny laughed eldishly.

Mary Charvah held the picture out before her.

"I do," she said. "I could take a real fancy to it. I'll have it up on the wall. Much obliged, I'm sure. Set down a minute."

But Jenny could not do this, and Mary, the key to the barn still in her hands, followed her out. They went through the cold kitchen, where the refrigerator and the brooding hen and the clothes bins and all the familiar things stood in the dark. To Mary these were sunk in a great obscurity and insignificance, and even Jenny's lag there was unimportant beside the thing that her letter had brought to think about. They stepped out into the clear, glittering night, with its clean, white world, and its clean, dark sky on which some story was written in stars. Capella was shining almost overhead—and another star was hanging bright in the east as if the east were always a dawdling place for some new star.

"Mary," said Jenny, there in the dark.

"Yes," Mary answered.

"You know I said I just couldn't bear not to have any Christmas—this Christmas?"

"Yes," Mary said.

"Did you know why?"

"I thought because it's your and Bruce's first."

"No," Jenny said. "That isn't all why it's something else."

She slipped her arm within Mary's and stood silent. And Mary still not understanding.

"It's somebody else," Jenny said faintly.

"Why, Jenny?"

"Soon," said Jenny.

The two women stood for a moment, Jenny saying a little Mary quiet.

"I'll be late in December," Jenny finished. "That seems so wonderful to me—so wonderful. Late in December, like?"

"The cold means something about them, and Jenny moved to go. Mary, the shivering figure on the upper step, looked down on the shivering figure below her and deeply spoke.

"It's funny," Mary said. "that you should tell me that now. I haven't told you what's in my letter."

"What was?" asked Jenny.

Mary told her. "They want I should have the little boy," she ended it.

"Oh," Jenny said. "Mary! How wonderful for you! Why, it's almost next us wonderful as mine!"

THE STOCKMAN.

Sheep require less labor during the busiest season of the year than do various other kinds of live stock.

It is best to have flocks come in the early spring.

The cleaner the feed and feeding places, the better the quality of the pork.

In grazing over land sheep add greatly to its fertility.

As a rule the main point to consider in growing hogs for market is, how many pounds can I put on that bag?

Farm horses that are not to be used through the winter should have a roomy paddock in which to exercise every fair day.

SELECTING BROOD SOW AND HERD BOAR

(Prepared by United States department of agriculture.)

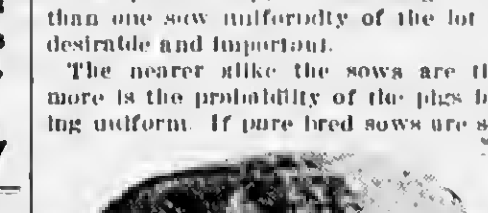

The brood sow is the first animal to select in laying a foundation for a herd. The better she is the greater the chances for success. A good brood sow must possess depth and length of body, a good heart girth, smooth shoulders, well sprung ribs and long, deep, well turned hams. Her sides should be long, deep and straight.

A straight or slightly arched, broad back is much desired, as it is much stronger than a low back. The back should carry its width and the side lines should be straight. She should stand up well on her legs, and have smooth, straight joints with hard, abundant, but not coarse bone, and must have feminine characteristics, which are indicated by a rather small head and ear, a fully developed, even udder and absence of shields on the shoulders.

A brood sow should show early maturing qualities and have sufficient capacity to do the work for which she is intended. A smooth coat of the hair and a broad head with sufficient weight for her age are good indications of early maturity. If selecting more than one sow uniformity of the lot is desirable and important.

The nearer alike the sows are the more is the probability of the pigs being uniform. If pure bred sows are selected breed type should be carefully observed. "Breed type" means the characteristics of a breed.

In selecting the herd boar the same points are essential, except that the animal should show masculinity. A strong, broad head and neck, sufficient

The male foot hog is a comparatively new breed. It got its name from its solid hoof, like that of a horse or mule. The flesh is of remarkably fine flavor, said to be even better than the Berkshire. Like all breeds not distinctly removed from the "wild" ancestor, the male foot hog is very prolific, and this quality, together with its comparative freedom from disease, has served to gain for him a degree of popularity. There is no doubt that if the locations of all the hog houses and hog lots on farms were more carefully chosen, all feeding floors constructed of concrete, sanitary hog wallows provided in the yards, disinfectants used more frequently and freely and the pasture system of maintaining the swine herds during the spring, summer and fall seasons followed, that hog cholera would be greatly reduced.

Light Your House and Barns—Cook Your Meals
With Home-Made Acetylene

And Make Your Acetylene With a
Pilot Lighting Plant

Pilot plants make Acetylene automatically a little at a time as you use it in your gas cooking stove and in your lights distributed throughout your house, your barns and out-buildings. You simply fill the generator with the gas-producing stone "Union Carbide" and water about once a month.

Pilot plants are approved by The National Board of Fire Insurance Underwriters.

All told, over 250,000 country homes are using Acetylene made the Pilot way.

A complete Pilot plant, consisting of generator, pipes—hand-some light fixtures and gas cook stove, can be installed in any country home in a couple of days' time.

Such a plant is a permanent improvement and will furnish you with the cheapest, safest and most practical light and fuel now available for country home requirements.

Write for our illustrated catalogs and descriptive booklets giving all the facts.

lock and knee joints are important. He should show early maturing characteristics and have well developed organs. Shields or thick plates of skin should not show on the sides of the shoulder before he is one year of age.

A strong, slightly arched back, with large heart girth, is essential in a first class boar, for he must have room for the vital organs, namely, heart, lungs, etc. Remember that the boar is at least half of the herd as far as breeding is concerned and he is usually more, so his selection cannot command too much care or patience. Get a good boar, and he will pay you well.

Hogs Need Exercise.

Sows and boars from their earliest days should run out as much as possible and have abundant exercise afforded in winter. They will take it if they have to run for whole cuts sprinkled on a big field and well covered with litter. Instead of stalling them upon corn they should have roots and alfalfa hay and in addition may have slop, of which digester tankage may well form 10 per cent. The slop must not be allowed to sour or decompose. This is especially so when it contains tankage. Sour tankage slop may prove deadly by causing ptomaine poisoning.

UNSINKABLE LIFEBOAT.

Double Hulled Steel Craft That is Propelled by a Motor.

In the effort to evolve the "unsinkable" boat an English naval engineer has produced a craft which has successfully resisted every attempt to sink it. It is built of steel, thirty feet long, six feet deep and ten feet wide. The craft is really two boats, one inside the other, the inner one being only five feet wide, although nearly as deep as the outer one. A tight deck covers the open space between the two hulls, and this space is divided into a number of water tight compartments.

Tesla in which a majority of the compartments were filled with water failed either to sink the boat, capsize it or render its propeller inoperative. It is contended by its inventor that a full size ship could probably be built on the same general plan, much of the space in the compartments being utilized for cargo, and that such a vessel could not be sunk by any collision with rocks, icebergs or other vessels.

Oldest Anthracite Mine.
What was originally known as the Room (Rhume) Run tunnel at the No. 1 tunnel of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company, Nesquehoning, Pa., is undoubtedly the oldest anthracite mine tunnel in operation. The exact date of opening is not positively known, but is presumed to be 1830. The Room Run tunnel, built to carry the coal from this tunnel to Coalport, was constructed in 1831, and the tunnel had unquestionably cut some of the veins prior to this date. This tunnel has been in continuous operation since its opening, the present daily output being about 1,300 tons. Coal will likely be brought out through the tunnel for a period thirty years longer.—Coal Age.

IMPROVED ROADS IN MODERN WAR

Part Played by Highways an Important One.

MOTORS POTENT FACTORS.

In the Mobilization of Armies the Country With the Best Roadways Has a Decided Advantage—Automobiles Used in Almost Every Conceivable Manner.

Since the outbreak of the war which has now involved most of the principal European powers news of the operations of the forces engaged has been lacking in detail, says the Good Roads magazine. While annoying to those in this country and elsewhere who wish to follow events from day to day, the rigid censorship that is responsible is doubtless a military necessity.

In time, however, when the urgent need for secrecy no longer exists, accurate detailed accounts of the fighting will be published, and when they appear it will be interesting to learn what part Europe's improved roads have played in the war.

The mobility of fighting forces is universally regarded by military experts as a most potent factor in war fare. Mobility depends upon the transportation facilities of the country where the campaigns are conducted and upon generalship capable of utilizing ing those facilities to the best possible advantage. Highways and railroads are the chief avenues of travel, and the importance of the highways as compared with that of the railroads is probably greater in war than in peace. for in campaigning both troops and supplies must be continually moved through country where railroad facilities are not to be had.

Roads also have an added value in the present war because of the very great use which is being made of motor driven vehicles of one kind and another. According to reports, automobiles are being used in almost every conceivable manner. Trucks are employed to transport commissary and other supplies, automobile ambulances are used to remove the wounded, motorcars of all descriptions carry officers and sometimes considerable bodies of troops from place to place, and it is reported that automobiles carrying rapid firing guns are employed in actual fighting.

All this means that full advantage is being taken of the different highway systems of the countries in which the war is being waged, for while it is possible for infantry, cavalry, artillery and even wagon trains to move cross country, motor trucks and automobiles—except in certain kinds of country—must be driven over roads.

The possession of a first class system of good roads could hardly be a deciding factor in a modern war, yet under the conditions obtaining in the struggle now in progress good roads must be of truly as much importance as they have been in any war recently waged. It is evident that when once a country is invaded its good roads are of as great advantage to the enemy as to the defenders, but in the mobilization of armies before the outbreak of hostilities the country with the best roads has a very decided advantage.

American writers as a class have been prone to dwell upon and perhaps to overestimate the excellence of European roads as contrasted to those of this country, and advocates of the participation of the United States government in road building have frequently urged military considerations as arguments for such action. For these reasons added interest will attach to future estimates of how much military operations of the present war were facilitated by good roads.

Good Roads Congress.

A magnificent boulevard, twenty feet wide and more than 400 feet long, extending around the arena in the great international amphitheater, will form one of the unique features of the coming good roads congress in Chicago. The boulevard will be divided into sections, each section being constructed of different materials and by different methods. Virtually every known type of standard modern road and pavement will be represented.

The good roads show, which is an integral part of the convention and congress, is already assured of being the largest and most interesting ever given. While there are more than 100,000 square feet of floor space in the great amphitheater, the demands of exhibitors have been such that it may be difficult to provide for the latest applicants. Already more space has been applied for than the entire area available at the Philadelphia good roads show last year, and more applications are constantly being received.

The fifth American good roads congress, which is also the eleventh annual convention of the American Road Builders' association and the sixth annual good roads show, will be held at the international amphitheater, Chicago, Dec. 14 to 18, inclusive. The purpose of the congress and show is to combine all modern intelligence on the subjects of the organization, construction and maintenance of streets and highways.

STERILIZING WATER.

Advantages of Electricity Over Treatment With Chemicals.

The electrical method of purifying water will probably be welcomed, as the introduction of chemicals for the same purpose has several objections. If hypochloride of lime is used in too large quantities some odor and perhaps some taste will be noticed in the water so treated.

For the most effective treatment of water with ultra violet rays produced by electricity a mercury vapor lamp should be submerged entirely in the water to be sterilized, at the same time protecting it from direct contact with the water. If the particles suspended in turbid water are themselves polluted with microbes it is probable that the process will not kill them. Very turbid water should be filtered before being sterilized.

Probably the use of hypochloride of lime is cheaper than the electric ultra violet light method, but more intelligent labor is needed with the chemical method. With electricity figured at 1 cent per kilowatt hour it is believed that sterilization of water with ultra violet rays will cost about 60 cents per 1,000,000 gallons. However, the question should not be settled on the basis of dollars and cents, for the question of pure water supply is vastly important.

At the present time there is a large unit in Lunerville, France, sterilizing the city water supply, with one in New York for the purification of the water in a swimming pool. The smallest lamp used operates at 110 volts, taking two amperes; the largest at 500 volts, taking 25 amperes. In such case the energy consumption is between 50 kilowatt hour and 130 kilowatt hour per 1,000,000 gallons of water. Electrical World.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON THE CHURCH'S ORDINATION.
Matthew 28:16-20; Luke 24:36-49
Dec. 13.

"Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28:20.

TODAY'S Study relates to the commission, or authorization of service, which Jesus appointed to His Church during the forty days subsequent to His resurrection. First, we have His words in the upper room at Jerusalem, and then a part of the general commission given just before His ascension.

The Evangelist sums up in a few words a Scriptural exposition which probably occupied at least an hour. Probably our Lord explained to them the significance of the Passover—that He was the Antitype of the lamb killed at that time; and that the firstborn, subsequently represented in the tribe of Levi, typified the Church of the Firstborn, whose names are written in Heaven. All the saints of all lower of Jesus will eventually be either of the Royal Priesthood or of the antitypical Levites, their servants, in the work of the world's blessing during Messiah's Kingdom.

Doubtless the Master also gave suggestions respecting the antitypical Atonement Day and the better sacrifices—that He Himself began these sacrifices, which would be continued in His disciples; and that after these sacrifices were finished, the Atonement blessings would go forth from the High Priest to all mankind.

Whatever features of the Divine Plan the Master unfolded, we have the assurance that His auditors were deeply interested. They saw heights, depths, lengths and breadths of which they had never dreamed. They saw that Jesus' death was necessary for the carrying out of the hopes inspired by God's promises; and that they themselves were privileged, not only to suffer with Him, but also to be glorified.

The Holy Spirit Promised.

The Master's concluding words on that occasion were, "Behold, I send the promise of My Father upon you." In various types the Father had promised that the Church would receive the Holy Spirit from Jesus, their Head.

This was typified in the holy oil which, poured upon Aaron's head, flowed down upon his body. This evoked the appearance of the Holy Spirit, the presence of the Divine acceptance was all-important. Without it the disciples would have had no commission and could not be ambassadors for God.

Jesus indeed had sent out the Twelve and afterward the Seventy, but they were His representatives, and He had given them of His own spirit or power, by which they had worked miracles, etc. But they never had been recognized of the Father. They must wait for the begetting and anointing of the Spirit, which alone could qualify them to be God's representatives.

"Lo, I Am With You Always."

St. Matthew's account of our Lord's commissioning of His disciples to declare His Message is full of interest. By appointment the Eleven met Him in a mountain in Galilee. For a few moments only did He appear to them. They worshipped, some fully convinced, others wavering. It was to convince such wavering that Jesus remained during the forty days. We are sure that He fully accomplished His work of convincing the Eleven, for they were all of one heart and mind when they waited in the upper room for the Pentecostal blessing.

Jesus declared that full authority had been given Him in respect to both heavenly and earthly things. Unless they realized this, it would be impossible for them properly to represent Him before the world. During His earthly ministry He did not have this authority. He was then on trial to demonstrate His loyalty. Having been faithful even unto the death of the cross, He was raised from the dead by the Father. He now wished His disciples to know that He was no longer under human limitations or those of the Death Covenant. He had finished His work and had entered into the reward. He had experienced His change and had all power.

Primarily His commission that the disciples go and teach belonged only to the Eleven, but subsequently it included St. Paul, who took the place of Judas. The Apostles alone are authorized as mouthpieces of the Lord Jesus Christ and His Church. To them was given the great work of inaugurating the Church.

The Lord has arranged, however, that each member of the Church should be His representative, and have a share in proclaiming the Gospel Message in proportion to his opportunity and ability. Whoever receives the begetting and anointing of the Holy Spirit is included in the statement of Paul in 1:3 as a member of the Body of Christ.

Thus we see our commission as respects all who have an ear to hear our Message. We are to make them disciples, to instruct them in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, and to teach them to observe all things whatsoever Jesus commanded. This is the extent of our authority and which the Lord

DAIRY and CREAMERY.

PAYS TO GRIND GRAIN.

Comparative Values of Ground and Un-ground Feed For Cows.

Many years ago I was employed as superintendent of a dairy herd of sixty-five cows. writes a correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman. When I took charge they were feeding whole or unground grain, consisting of corn, oats, barley and rye, and roughage consisting of corn fodder, clover hay, oat and barley straw. The man preceding me in charge was a splendid milker, a liberal feeder and a hard worker, but he kept no tab on the herd as to what cows were "star boarders" and what cows were paying the bills.

Immediately on taking charge I instituted a system of measuring, weighing and feeding, and to the owner's utter astonishment we found that at least one-half of the herd was not pay-

The great advance in dairy knowledge that has come in recent years is largely due to the efforts of the experienced students and agricultural colleges supplemented by the work of the dairy division of the United States agricultural department and has been of immense value to the farmers of this country. Young men are taught dairying from a scientific standpoint, and the knowledge gained is a national benefit. The illustration shows a group of students judging a dairy bull at the Delaware Agricultural college.

ing for its feed. I proposed to him that we continue our keeping of records and install a machine to grind the feed. This was done, and in a few days after beginning to feed ground grain we noted quite an increase in the milk flow of every cow in the herd. However, despite all the care we could give them, twenty-one of the cows failed to pay for their feed and fifteen barely did so. We disposed of these cows and purchased twenty-eight others.

In testing out the advantages of ground feed I selected eight of the best cows in the herd, all with practically the same average production. Four of these were kept on unground feed for twenty days, the other four I put on ground feed for the same length of time. The four on unground feed maintained their ordinary milk flow, but the four that were put on ground feed produced at the end of twenty days an increase of from four to five pounds per day to each cow. We then reversed the experiment, and the cows that had been on ground feed decreased in milk flow from four to six pounds a day.

I then selected two cows that bore every mark of good milkers. If a fair chance were given them. They were each producing twenty-one pounds daily on unground feed, but after feeding them ground grain for thirty days I had one of them giving twenty-seven pounds daily, the other thirty pounds daily. Just think of what that means in a herd of from fifty to sixty cows—a gain of nearly 300 gallons per year to a cow. Does it pay to grind feed? It surely did in this case.

LEAKS IN THE DAIRY.

Cows That Are Dry More Than Six Weeks a Year Are Losers.

A good cow needs a month or six weeks of rest each year between lactation periods. Such rest is earned by the good worker, says the Kansas Farmer. While resting her strength and flesh will be recuperated so that she will begin another milking period with renewed vigor. There are many cows which cannot be safely forced to take this vacation. In these the milk-producing organs are so active that the cow cannot be safely dried. This is not a bad fault either, but a short vacation is, we believe, to be desired.

However, the cow which will take two months or more of vacation is a loser. She is not the kind of cow of which profitable milking herds are maintained. One of the big leaks in most farm dairies is that which comes through having cows dry too long and too many dry cows throughout the year. We believe in the cows being so handled that they will take their vacations at the same time—say from the middle of July to Sept. 1. At about this time is the busiest season of the year on the farm. It is also the most difficult period in which to produce milk. But aside from this period there should be in the well regulated dairy no dry cows. When the milking period is on it should be in full blast and every cow doing her share of the work.

THE POULTRYMAN.

The man who has a good laying strain of pure bred poultry is going to get enough eggs this winter to pay his feed and labor bills and net him a nice profit.

Pure bred poultry cannot be purchased at the price of barnyard fowls.

Don't keep a lot of drones or deadbeats or a lot of old hens that have outlived their usefulness.

The hens that are laying these days are the hens that more than pay for their board, and they ought to have an extra good feed occasionally.

Do not keep many breeds. It is a mistake to try to breed more than one type at a time.

Careful culling is the only means of keeping the flock up to a high standard.

THE PREVENTION OF POULTRY TROUBLES

The great points to be emphasized in raising poultry are cleanliness, sunlight, fresh air and good food. Where these are insisted upon difficulties in raising poultry so far as disease is concerned are reduced to a minimum. It is rarely necessary to use any remedies where they are maintained.

People who do not supply such conditions seek to avoid difficulties by other kinds of preventive measures. Among the best of these is permanent use of potash. This is a chemical which destroys certain kinds of poisons and kills bacteria with which it comes in contact. The most convenient way in which to handle it is to dissolve in cents worth in a pint of water and keep the solution tightly corked in a bottle, preferably kept in a dark closet. A tablespoonful of this solution to a gallon of water makes a sufficiently strong mixture for the fowls to drink without danger to themselves. Even if twice as much is used no damage need be looked for.

This solution has been recommended by the Maryland Agricultural col-

The open front fresh air poultry house herewith illustrated is a fair sample of the popular penhouse. On stormy days and nights the heavy muslin curtain is dropped and buckled at the sides, the air circulating through and the shadows giving light. The roost is closed with a drop curtain when the weather makes it necessary, but both day and night the fowls have plenty of new, pure air.

lege as having special value in the raising of chicks, since its action destroys bacteria which cause white diarrhoea and other bowel troubles. It desired the crystals of the chemical may be dropped in the drinking water without having been previously dissolved, as suggested above. This, however, is not as good a plan because some of the crystals may not dissolve and some parts of the solution may thus be weaker than others. Where it is thought desirable to follow this latter plan a safe guide is to use no more crystals in each gallon of water than will pile up on a ten cent piece.

Fattening Fowls in Coops.

There are various good formulas for fattening fowls in crates or small yards, such feeds as are at hand being usually used, says Rural New Yorker. Two parts of finely ground oats, two parts of finely ground buckwheat and one part of finely ground corn mixed with sour milk to the consistency of batter has been recommended by the Ontario Agricultural college as a very desirable fattening ration. Equal parts of cornmeal, middlings and buckwheat meal likewise mixed with milk is also a very good ration. Grit should be given the fowls at least once a week. The more ground the grains used the better the results, and it has also been found desirable to mix the grains with the milk twelve hours before feeding. Where milk is not available beef scrap or meat meal may be substituted in the proportion of not more than 15 per cent of the whole food-water used to wet the mash, but milk gives better results.

Depends on the Judge.

Anyone wishing to shoot migratory birds may do so if he follows them to Jonesboro, Arkansas. But he must not do it in Sioux Falls, South Dakota. The federal bird law is unconstitutional in the Arkansas district, but constitutional in South Dakota—same law, same birds, same constitution—but different judges. Other districts will decide the matter for themselves. In 1916 the supreme court will hand down a decision that will clear up all the old doubts and make a lot of new ones. Meanwhile a bird in South Dakota is worth two in Arkansas.

BABY BURNED TO A CRISP

Mother Leaves Child in Charge of Little Brother to Visit Home of Neighbor.

On Return Finds Child On Fire and Almost Burned to a Crisp—Died Next Day.

One of the saddest accidents which has happened in this vicinity for some time occurred last Wednesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John O'Rourke, South State street, when Lucy, their eleven months old daughter, received burns, the effects from which she died the following evening.

The accident occurred in the forenoon. Mrs. O'Rourke was busily engaged in her household duties, when she found it necessary to step to the house of a neighbor to use the telephone. Before leaving the house she wrapped the little one in a blanket and placed it in a chair near the stove. Undoubtedly she cautioned her little son to take good care of his little sister during her absence and also to keep away from the stove and not touch the fire.

Mrs. O'Rourke then hurried to the home of Mrs. George Trimble to use the telephone. She had been there less than fifteen minutes when the little brother left at home appeared at the door in his bare feet, excitedly informing his mother that baby sister was burning up. Accompanied by Mrs. Trimble she hurried back to her home to find the little one still in the chair but enveloped in a mass of flames. By wrapping a blanket around the little form the flames were extinguished, but not before the child was almost burned to a crisp about the lower limbs and back.

The child was taken to the home of Mrs. Trimble and medical assistance summoned. The cause of the fire was at once investigated and it was found that the little brother had picked up a newspaper, opened the stove door and put it in the stove, but before he could close the door the paper caught fire, the flames from which ignited the quilt in which the baby was wrapped.

Shortly after the child was taken to the home of Mrs. Trimble it went to sleep and remained in a semi-unconscious condition until death relieved it from its suffering about eleven o'clock Thursday evening.

The remains of the little one were taken to Gaylord, the former home of the parents, Friday, where interment took place Sunday.

JOE LEWIS DEAD

Well Known Charlevoix County Resident Passes Away at Phoenix, Arizona.

Word reached this city Saturday of the death of Joseph Lewis, which occurred at Phoenix, Arizona, Tuesday of last week.

Mr. Lewis was widely known as "The Blind Broom Maker of Northern Michigan" and for forty years had traveled over this section selling his hand-made brooms. For many years he was a resident of Hayes township and about five years ago moved to Petoskey.

About five weeks ago Mr. and Mrs. Lewis went to Phoenix to visit a son and while there, Mr. Lewis suffered a stroke of paralysis, which resulted in his death. The body was interred in Phoenix. He is survived by his wife, several children, and other relatives living in this vicinity.

Friends Surprised Her.

Mrs. George Trimble was surprised by about sixteen of her friends last Wednesday afternoon at her home on South State street. The afternoon was spent visiting and a fine potluck supper was served before their departure.

FINE SHOWING OF HOLIDAY STOCK

Charlevoix Stores Now Reflect the Near Approach of Christmas.

Many Attractive Show Windows are to be Seen—Deserve Your Patronage.

With Christmas but nine days away, Charlevoix stores are now decked out with their holiday goods, and the store windows have all taken on the usual holiday appearance. Many of the show windows are very attractive.

Since the first of the month the merchants have been selling holiday goods, but the great rush is on now, as the greater part of the public makes for the holiday counters at the last moment.

Look over the advertisements in this issue of the Courier. Among its sixteen pages of holiday advertising you can obtain an idea of what you want to give. The leading merchants of the city are represented. They are the live wires of the city who are after your business and deserve it. If you are a mail order house customer and carry the idea that you can buy cheaper outside, our advice would be to read the advertisements of our home merchants, call at their stores and ask their prices and nine times out of ten you will be able to buy as cheap at home as out of town. Trade with the home merchants—especially those who advertise.

New Chief of Police.

At Monday evening's session of the common council Charles Jefferies was appointed chief of police in the place of Art Alcock, who, as a holdover, has held the office since last year. It is hoped now that all criticism regarding the police department will cease and that the law will be rigidly enforced.

Remain Closed All Days.

The following merchants have agreed to close their places of business for the entire day on Christmas and New Years:

C. Danto & Son.
H. R. Fowler.

CHARLEVOIX BIRDS WINNERS

Made a Very Creditable Showing at the Poultry Show Last Week.

Charlevoix birds in the Barred Rock class made an exceptionally good showing at the Emmet County Poultry Show held at Petoskey last week.

In the Barred Rock class there were over eighty entries, among which were some of the best in the state. Two exhibitors from this city had birds entered and walked away with a place for nearly every bird exhibited. E. J. Hiller and Dr. J. A. Auld were those who exhibited from Charlevoix, in this class and they received the following places:

E. J. Hiller, three birds exhibited—1st, 3rd and 4th cockerel.
Dr. J. A. Auld, twelve birds exhibited—2nd cock, 1st, 2nd and 3rd hen, 1st and second pullet, 3rd pen.

Over 600 birds were on exhibition and the show is considered the best ever held in Northern Michigan. Charlevoix breeders have always been especially strong in the Barred Rock class, as the result of this year's exhibit shows.

FARM HOME BURNS TO GROUND

Fine Farm Residence of Joseph Clark Completely Destroyed By Flames.

Spark From Burning Chimney the Cause—Household Goods and Clothing Total Loss.

Fire completely destroyed the beautiful farm of Joseph Clark, some five miles south and west of this city, Monday evening. The loss is complete, including practically all household goods and clothing.

About noon on Monday the chimney was discovered to be burning out and all precautions were taken against a serious fire. Many times during the day some member of the family visited the attic and upper rooms in search of any possible spark which might have lodged about the chimney.

About 6:30 in the evening Mrs. Clark went to the chamber with her little grand-child, with the intentions of putting her to bed. Upon entering the room she discovered that the fire had started and had burned a small hole through the side wall near the chimney. The alarm was immediately given and the assistance of neighbors summoned, but in a few minutes the entire attic and second floor of the house was in a mass of flames.

Fanned by the high wind that was blowing, the whole structure soon became a seething furnace. Every effort was made to save as much of the furniture as possible but they were soon driven away by the extreme heat. The piano and a few pieces of furniture were saved. The members of the family lost practically all their clothing except that which they were wearing.

Today all there is remaining of one of the best farm homes in this section of the county is a few charred pieces of the frame and the cellar walls. The house was heated by the furnace, and was modern in every respect.

The loss, which will reach near $4,000, covered by insurance to the amount of $1,000 on the house and $1,000 on contents, is a severe one to Mr. Clark. The family were sheltered by neighbors and every kindness shown them. The house will probably be rebuilt in the spring.

Myrtle Young & Son carried the insurance on the house and contents, which will be paid to the full amount of the policy. Is your home insured? Better take care of it at once and be protected against a heavy loss.—Adv. 601.

Bad Fire Averted.

Smokes issuing from the basement of the L. O. O. F. hall on Monday evening was discovered by members of the Moose, who were having a game supper on the second floor. Investigation revealed a small blaze near the furnace which was put out without damage. Had the fire stated at a later hour it would have proved a serious one.

Fire creeps in like a thief in the night. Are you fully insured? Better see Myrtle Young & Son at once.

Fish Tug of Booth Fisheries Company
Now Lying on Reef.

Was After Load of Spawns When Accident Occurred—Loses Propeller.

The gasoline fish tug Arbutus, owned by the Booth Fisheries Co. of this city, is lying ashore off Antrim City, where she drifted Saturday, when in some manner she lost her propeller.

The boat left Charlevoix on Saturday morning for Antrim City to bring back S. M. Rose, who is in the employ of the government fish hatcheries, and a load of spawn which was ready for shipment. The boat was in charge of Harry Glosinger as captain and Amos Webster as engineer. The cargo had been placed on board and the signal for departure given, when it was discovered that they had lost the propeller. The anchor was immediately put out, but on account of the rocky nature of the beach in this section, would not hold and the boat soon drifted on a reef, where it now lies about 500 feet from the shore inside the harbor.

The news of the accident was sent to this city and the sister ship Castanet, towing the Charlevoix life-saving crew, immediately started for the scene of trouble. The tug Parmelee was also summoned, but none were able to do anything toward pulling the boat off on account of the high seas and hidden reefs which are in the harbor.

When it was found that nothing could be done to pull the boat off she was filled with water and is now lying where she went on the rocks.

According to a statement made by Mr. Nordrum, the heavy wind of the past few days has not injured the boat and she will be pulled off the rocks practically uninjured as soon as the weather will permit.

FIRST TERM CLOSES FRIDAY

Holiday Vacation in the Public Schools
During Next Two Weeks.

Past Three Months Have Brought Banner Odes in Annals of Local High School.

The first term of the local schools for the present year closes Friday of this week for the holiday vacation. In point of scholarship, attendance and regularity the past three months are banner ones in the annals of the local high school. Many plans have materialized and organizations completed that bear emphatically upon a good rounded-out high school education and add greatly to the pleasure and satisfaction of school life. Charlevoix high school "the best ever" is our slogan.

Undoubtedly the most important move that has been made during the past term is the organization in the high school of systematic literary work outside of the regular English department. The plan in vogue at present is commonly called the group system. The entire student body has been divided into groups of about thirty each. Each group has its own organization with a faculty member ex-officio. The groups meet every two weeks and a literary program is given. Occasionally it is planned that a general program will be given in the high room.

The advantage of this plan stands out predominately. It gives every student in the school a chance to reap some benefit. Every ambitious high school student nowadays sees the advantage in such work. While occasionally there may be one or two failing to grasp the opportunity of literary activity, the adopted plan accomplishes more than the literary club, which only includes the most enthusiastic students and leaves those out who might enjoy the work but for timidity and, perhaps, bashfulness. All the groups are hard at work and the reception given the new plan already spells success with a capital.

With the idea of affording a greater opportunity for the student to specialize several courses that have never been placed permanently on the curriculum of the high school will be offered the second semester. It has not been finally decided as yet, but undoubtedly a course in higher mathematics and one in economics adapted to the high school student will be offered.

The high school orchestra, which we have been hearing so much about during the term, made its first appearance last Friday before a very critical audience and were received with enthusiastic applause. The orchestra, which is the first Charlevoix high has ever had, made good in other words. The good work will continue next Friday before the high school. Dewey Jones of Bay Shore is leader and is doing some fine work. The boys are to be complimented upon their success.

The fall term will close this week Friday. Appropriate exercises are being arranged. Rev. Quinton Walker has accepted an invitation to talk before the students and faculty. The public is extended a cordial welcome.

During the term about to close very few of the citizens have paid us a visit. There is plenty of time yet before the school year is up.—By Harold Usher, sophomore.

BROKE HER ANKLE

Mrs. Elmer Ingalls Painfully Injured When Horse Ran Away.

Mrs. Elmer Ingalls was painfully injured Friday evening, when the horse she was driving became frightened and ran away.

Mr. and Mrs. Ingalls were on their way to attend a meeting of the Gloamers, when a part of the harness broke, frightening the horse, who started to run and kick. While attempting to get out of the buggy Mrs. Ingalls was thrown to the ground, breaking her ankle and otherwise injuring her. She was given medical attendance at once, but will be confined to the house for some time. Mr. Ingalls escaped without injury.

O. Santa, can't you come again?
Just see the dolly that you gave!
She's gone and slipped out of my hands—
Her head is all that I can save!

My daddy says that you can't come
Until another year has passed.
But years are very, very long—
Just think how long a year can last!

I loved my dolly—oh, so much!
My heart most broke when down she fell.
But, Santa—let me whisper it—
Another doll might do as well.

HEED THE WARNING

Many Charlevoix People Have Done So.

When the kidneys are weak they give unmistakable warnings that should not be ignored. By examining the urine and treating the kidneys upon the first sign of disorder many days of suffering may be saved. Weak kidneys usually expell a dark, ill-smelling urine full of "brickdust", sediment and painful in passage. Sluggish kidneys often cause a dull pain in the small of the back, headache, dizzy spells, tired, languid feelings and frequent rheumatic twinges.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys only. There is no better recommended remedy.
Charlevoix people endorse Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. R. M. McKeel, 214 Mason St., Charlevoix, says: "I had been troubled for several months by kidney disease. My body bloated quite badly and I had weak back and severe pains in my kidneys. My rest was broken at night. I finally got Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug Store and they gave me relief in every way."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. McKeel had. Foster-Milburn Company, Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

CHRISTMAS SONG.

By EDMUND HAMILTON SEARS.

Calm on the listening ear of night
Come heaven's melodious strains
Where wild Judea stretches far
Her silver mantled plains;
Celestial choirs from courts above
Shed sacred glories there,
And angels with their sparkling tyres
Make music on the air.

The answering hills of Palestine
Send back the glad reply
And greet from all their holy heights
The day spring from on high.
O'er the blue depths of Galilee
There comes a holier calm,
And Sharon waves in solemn praise
Her silent groves of palm.

"Glory to God!" The lofty strain
The realm of ether fills.
How sweeps the song of solemn joy
O'er Judah's sacred hills!
"Glory to God!" The sounding skies
Loud with their anthems ring.
"Peace on the earth, good will to men,
From heaven's eternal King!"

Light on thy hills, Jerusalem!
The Saviour now is born.
More bright on Bethlehem's joyous plains
Breaks the first Christmas morn,
And brighter on Moriah's brow,
Crowned with her temple spires,
Which first proclaim the newborn light,
Clothed with its orient fires.

This day shall Christian lips be mute
And Christian hearts be cold?
Oh, catch the anthem that from heaven
O'er Judah's mountains rolled
When nightly burst from seraph herps
The high and solemn lay,
"Glory to God; on earth be peace; Salvation comes today!"

Daily Christmas Hint

A Charming Gift for the College Girl

The girl who goes back to college after the Christmas vacation will be happy if in her bag she can pack away one of these charming "really" Japanese kimono. This kimono was made of pale blue, embroidered in iris. The wonderful shades of mauve in the iris and a very effective background in the pale blue.

But if you desire to make a useful gift for the college girl and do not wish to make a kimono of such expensive material the shops are filled with lovely goods. Crapes, cotton and silk, Japanese silk, with flowers rioting over it for all the world like on old fashioned garden; silks of every quality and hue are piled upon the shopkeep ers' shelves ready to be bought and fashioned by nimble fingers into kimono

But cotton crape will hold its own for these occasions so long as kimono are worn. It is not so fragile as silk, the colors have staying qualities which recommend it, and it is less expensive.

The fact that cotton crape will stand well is an important item to the college girl who would much prefer to be immaculate in cotton crape than to be shabbily gaudy in soiled silk. The cleaning expenses mount to an alarming budget in the course of a college year, and of course these handsome kimono of embroidered silk must visit the cleaner when soiled, as no kimono would undertake to clean them. However, the girl who is given one of these exquisite silk, hand embroidered kimono will be glad, doubtless, to undertake the cleaning bills.

THE BLAZING YULE LOG.

It Holds Precedence Over the Christmas Tree in England.

The Christmas tree was rarely seen in England until made popular by the German husband of Queen Victoria and, while it is universal there at the present time, it is the Yule log and the mistletoe that hold the center of attraction. Long before England became a Christian country the Yule log was burned in honor of a pagan deity in the winter solstice, and the infectious spirit of cheer and good will which prevailed at that time survived when Christianity spread abroad.

The festivities in England begin with the lighting of the Yule log on Christmas eve. In many parts of the country the whole family, including servants, gather about the hearth and "beguile the long evening with riddles, games, legendary jokes and old folk Christmas tales." One of the oldest customs observed in England is the singing of Christmas carols from house to house by Christmas carolers. Some of the carols sung today are at least 400 years old.

Christmas A Story by Zona Gale

SYNOPSIS

Owing to hard times and the failure of Ebenezer Rile's factory the people of Old Trail Town contemplate buying no presents and having no Christmas.

A town meeting is held, and the decision is reached to have no Christmas, not even for the children.

A notice to this effect is signed by nearly every one. Mary Chavon receives a letter from her sister Lily's boy.

This boy asks her to take his six-year-old brother, son of Adam Blood, a lover who killed Mary for her sister Lily.

CHAPTER V.

Coming.

MARY hesitated for breath. But she was profoundly stirred by what Jenny had told her—the first time, so far as she could recall, that news like this had ever come to her directly, as a secret and a marvel. News of the village births usually came in gossip, in conversation, in suspicion. Falling on this confidence in a time when she was reliving her old hope, when Adam's boy stood outside her threshold, the moment quite suddenly put on its real significance.

"We can plan together," Jenny was saying. "Ain't it wonderful?"

"Ain't it?" Mary said then, sleepily, and kissed Jenny, when Jenny came and kissed her. Then Jenny went away. Mary went on to the barn and opened the door and listened. She had brought no lantern, but the soft stillness within needed no vigilance. The bay smell from the loft and the mangers, the even breath of the cows, the quiet safety of the place, met her. She was wondering of herself, but she was struggling not at all. It was as if concern for the little boy something had decided her to let her own. She had committed herself to Jenny almost without will, but Mary felt no exultation, and the weight within her did not lift.

"I really couldn't do anything else but take him, I s'pose," she thought. "I wonder what'll come on me next?"

All the while she was conscious of the raw smell of the clover in the hay of the mangers, as if something of summer were there in the cold.

Mary hadn't sent her letter of home directions concerning her sister's household and the few belongings when her sister had wished her to have the best of the letter were about the boy.

"Send the little one along. I am not the one, but I don't know what else to tell you to do with him. Let me know when to expect him and put his name in with his things. I can't remember his right name."

When the answer came from John Blood a fortnight later it said that a young fellow of those parts was starting back home shortly to spend Christmas and would take charge of the child as far as the city and there put him on his train for Old Trail Town. She would be notified just what day to expect him, and John knew how kind his mother would have been and his father, too, and he was her grateful nephew. P. S.—He would send some money every month "to ward him."

The night after she received this letter Mary lay long awake, facing what it was going to mean to have him there in her little room.

She recalled what she had heard other women say about it—stray utterances, made with the burdened look that had a secret complicity, a kind of pained friendliness in a universal way.

ready to start half the time, but I can't help it, with the children's books and trucks.

"Never would have another house built without a coat closet. The children's clothes and caps and rubbers litter up everything."

"Every one of their knees out and their underclothes outgrown and their washes soiled the whole time. And I do try so hard."

Now with all these bewilderments she was to have to do. She wondered if she would know how to dress him. Once she had watched Miss Winslow dress a child and she remembered what unexpected places Miss Winslow had buttoned—buttonholes that went up and down in the skirt bands and so on. Armholes might be too small and garters too tight, and now was one ever to know? If it were a little girl now, but a little boy. What would she talk to him about while they ate together?

She lay in the dark and planned—without pleasure, but merely because she always planned everything, her dress, her baking, what she would say to this one and that. She would put up a stove in the back parlor and give him the room "off." She was glad that the parlor was empty and clean "no knock-knocks for a boy to knock around," she found herself thinking. And a child would like the bedroom wall paper, with the owl border. When summer came he could have the room over the dining room, with the kitchen roof sloping away from it where he could dry his hazelnuts—she had thought of the pasture hazelnuts first thing. There were a good many things a boy would like about the place—the bird house where the martins always built, the hens, the big hollow tree, the pasture and hill. She would have to find out the things he liked to eat.

She would have to help him with his lessons; she could do that for only a little while until he would be too old to need her. Then maybe there would come the time when he would ask her things that she would not know.

She fell asleep wondering how he would look. Already, not from any impatience to have this done, but because that was the way in which she worked, she had his room in order, and her picture of his father was by the altar, the young face of his father something faded but been written in the picture, and this she had pulled lovingly rubbed away before she set the picture in its place. Next day while she was working on Miss June Moran's head basket, that was to be cut over and turned, she laid it aside and cut out a jacket pattern and a plaid waist pattern just to see if she could. These she rolled up impatiently and stuffed away in her pattern book case.

"I knew how to do them all the while, and I never knew I knew," she thought with amused surprise. "I s'pose I'll waste a lot of time pottering over him."

It was so that she spent the weeks until the letter came telling her what day the child would start. On the afternoon of the day the letter came she went down town to the Adam Bloods' to buy a wash basin and pitcher for the room she meant to give him to have. She stood looking at a basin with a row of brown dots around the rim when over her shoulder Miss Abby Winslow spoke.

"You ain't buying a Christmas present for anybody, are you?" she asked warily.

Mary started guiltily and denied it. "Well, what in time do you want with down on the basin?" Miss Winslow demanded.

Almost against her own wish Mary told her. Miss Winslow was one of those whose faces are invariably fore-runners of the sort of thing they are going to say. With eyebrows, eyes, forehead, head and voice she took the news.

"He's! Forever and ever more. When he's going to get here?"

"Week after next," Mary said listlessly. "It's a awful responsibility, ain't it—taking a child so?"

Miss Winslow's face abruptly rejected its own anxious lines and let the eyes speak for her when she said: "I always think children in the air," she said; "you never realize how hard they're pressing down on you, but you do know you can't live without them."

Mary looked at her, her own face not lighting.

"I'd rather go along like I am," she said; "I'm used to myself the way I am."

"Mary Chavon," said Miss Winslow sharply, "a vegetable sprouts can't you? Is there anything made so they won't rot?" she inquired capably of Abel Ames. "These are real good ones, Mary," she added kindly. "Better surprise the little thing with one of these. A red one."

Mary counted over a money, and bought the red stock up and the bush with the papples, then she went into the street. The sense of oppression, of striving that had come her since that night in the stable made the day a thing to be borne, to be breathed. The air was thick with snow, and in the whiteness the dreary familiarity of the drug store, the meat market, the postoffice, the Simeon Back Dry Goods Exchange, smote her with a passion to escape from them all, to meet new familiarities, to get free of the thing that she had said she would do.

"And I could," she thought; "I could telegraph to John not to send him. But Jenny—she can't. I don't see how she stands it."

The thought may have been why instead of going home, she went to see Jenny. A neighbor was in the sitting room with Mrs. Wing. Jenny met Mary at the kitchen door and stood against a background of clothes drying on lines stretched indoors.

"Don't you want to come upstairs?" Jenny said. "There ain't a fire up there, but I can show you the things."

She had put them all in the bottom drawer, as women always do, and as women always do, had laid them so that all the lace and embroidery and pink ribbons possible showed in a flutter when the drawer was opened. Jenny took the things out, one at a time, unfolded, displayed, compared, with all the tireless zeal of a robin with a straw in its mouth or of a tree blossoming.

"Smell of them," Jenny had her. "Honestly, wouldn't you know by the smell who they are for?" "I dunno but you would," Mary admitted awkwardly and marveled dumbly at the new news Jenny was feeling in that which, after all, was not new.

When these things were all out a little tissue paper parcel was left lying in the drawer.

"There's one more," Mary said. Jenny flushed, hesitated, lifted it. "That's nothing," she said; "before I came I made some little things for its Christmas. I thought maybe it would come first, and we'd have the Christmas in my room and I made some things—just for fun, you know. But it won't be fair to do it now, with the whole town so set against our having any Christmas. Mary, it just seems as though I had to have a Christmas this year."

"Oh, well," said Mary, "the baby'll be your Christmas. The town can't help that, I guess."

"I know," Jenny dashed back brightly. "You and I have got the best of them, haven't we? We've each got one present coming, anyway."

"I s'pose we have," Mary said. She looked at Jenny's Christmas things—a ribbon rattle, a crocheted cap, a first picture book, a cascade of colored rings—and then in grim humor at Jenny.

"It'll never miss its Christmas," she said drily.

"Don't you think so?" said Jenny soberly. "I dunno. It seems as if it'd be kind of lonesome to get born around Christmas and not find any going on."

She put the things away and closed the drawer. For no appreciable reason she kept it locked and the key under the bureau cover.

"Do you know yet when yours is coming?" Jenny asked as she rose.

"Week after next," Mary repeated, "two weeks from last night," she confessed. "If he comes straight through."

"I think," said Jenny, "I think mine will be here—before then."

When they reached the foot of the stairs Mary unexpectedly refused to go in the sitting room.

"No," she said, "I must be getting home. I just come out for a minute anyway. I'm—I'm much obliged for what you showed me," she added and hesitated. "I've got his room fixed up real nice. There's ovals on the wall paper and papples on the wash basin," she said. "Come in when you can and see it."

CHAPTER VI.

Old Accounts.

IT was almost dusk when Mary reached home. While she was passing the billboard at the corner—a daze of yellow letters, as if color and the alphabet had united to breed a monster—she heard children shouting. A block away and across the street, coming home from Rolleson's hill, where they had been coasting, were Benoit and Gussie Bates, little Emily, Tab Winslow and Pep. Nearly every day of snow they passed her house. She always heard them talking, and usually she heard across at the corner the click of the penny in the slot machine, which no child seemed able to pass without pulling. To night as she heard them coming Mary fumbled in her purse. Three, four, five pennies she found and ran across the street and dropped them in the slot machine and gained her own door before the children came. She stood at her dark threshold and listened. She had not reckoned in vain. One of the children pushed down on the rod in the child's eternal hope of magic, and when magic came and three, four, five chocolate drops obediently in their hands Mary listened to what they said. It was not much, and it was not very coherent, but it was wholly intelligible.

"Look at!" shrieked Benoit, who had made the magic.

"Did it?" cried Gussie and repeated the operation.

"It—it it never!" said Tab Winslow at the third.

"Make it again; make it again!" cried little Emily and they did.

"Gussie!" observed Pep in ecstasy. "When it would give no more they divided with the other children and ran on their feet outside of mother's lamplight in the snow. Mary stood staring after them for a moment; then she turned back to her room.

"I won't," she made up her mind, "I won't let them make me do that."

Ebenezer Rile had meant to go to the city before cold weather came. He had there a small and decent steam warmed flat, where he bottled his own eggs and made his own coffee, read his newspapers and kept his combs, descending nightly to the ground floor cafe to dine on ambrosious dishes at tables of other bank swallows who nested in the same cliff. But as the days went by he found himself staying on in Old Trail Town, with this excuse and that, offered by himself to himself. As, for example, that in the factory there were old account books that he must go through. And having put What's the Matter with U. S. A.?

"What is the matter with the United States?"

As I have been residing in London since the beginning of the war, I have been hearing this question asked on all sides. I never heard any satisfactory answer. No one seems to know.

Why are the American factories not running day and night? Why are the railroads not opening up new territories and getting ready for the millions of immigrants who have already made up their minds to leave Europe as soon as the war is over?

Why are there not fifty American drummers in London right now trying to sell $200,000,000 worth of American goods in place of the goods that were bought last year from Germany and Austria?

Why have advertisers become quitters just at the time when their advertisements were most needed and most effective in cheering on the business forces of the United States?

From the European point of view the United States is a haven of peace and security and prosperity. It has no troubles that it dare mention to Russia or Belgium or Austria or Germany or Serbia or France or Great Britain.

Every tenth Briton has enlisted.

Every tenth Frenchman is at the front.

Every tenth Belgian is dead. What does the United States know of trouble?

If I could afford it I would charter the Mauretania and the Lusitania and convey a party of 5000 American advertisers to Europe for a trip of education.

I would give them a week in London, a week in Paris and a week in Antwerp.

I would let them look at the United States from the scene of war. I would give them a look at real trouble. I would let them see trains ten at a time, five minutes apart, packed with the maimed and the dying.

I would let them hear, from fragmentary survivors, the incredible story of battlefields 150 miles wide and armies that are greater than the entire population of Texas.

I would let them see graves 100 yards long and full, and Belgium, the country that is nothing but 12,000 square miles of wreckage.

Then, when they began to understand to some slight extent the magnitude and awfulness of this war, I would say to them:

"Now go back and appreciate the United States. Realize your opportunities. Don't fall down when you have not been hit. Don't be blind to the most glorious chance you have ever had in your life.

"Go back and advertise. Get ready for the most tremendous business boom that any nation ever had. Build your factories bigger. Train more salesmen.
Borrow more money. Go ahead, and thank God that you are alive and that your family is alive, and that you are living in a land that is at peace at a time when nearly the whole world is at war."—Associated Advertising for November.

Grange Column

Wilson Grange No. 719.

The regular meeting of Wilson grange met Saturday evening, December 12, with twenty-seven members present. During the business part of the meeting the following officers were elected:

Master—Frank Smith.
Overseer—Luther Brintnall.
Lecturer—Esther Shepard.
Steward—Arthur O'Dell.
Ass't. Steward—Wm. Vrondran.
Chaplain—Mabelle Holland.
Treasurer—E. S. Brintnall.
Secretary—Leon Frost.
Gate Keeper—Geo. Burley.
Pomona—Elsie O'Dell.
Flora—Irene Frost.
Ceres—Glennie Vrondran.
L. A. Steward—Ethel Brintnall.

The grange decided to join with the public school and Sunday School and have a Christmas tree and entertain at the hall Christmas eve.

After a short program grange was dismissed.

Charlevoix Grange.

Charlevoix Grange will meet at the home of Mrs. A. J. Usher Friday evening, December 18th. All members are requested to be present, as there is important business that must be transacted. Sister Jennie Black will be present to give a report of the State Grange, to which she was a delegate from Charlevoix county.

Barnard Grange.

Barnard Grange will meet in regular session, Tuesday evening, December 22.
On account of the Christmas tree, the regular meeting will be held a day earlier. The regular election of officers will occur, and a good attendance is desired.

MEETING WELL ATTENDED

W. C. T. U. Entertainment at Home of Mrs. Geiken
Had Fine Program.

The meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union which was held with Mrs. Geiken on Friday afternoon was one to be remembered with pleasure.
It was largely attended, twenty-four members being present. The meeting opened with singing "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow," prayer by Mrs. Lewis and minutes of previous meeting, after which followed the reading by Miss Agnes Rodgers of a communication from W. C. T. U. headquarters concerning national prohibition, asking that attention be called in the churches and Sabbath schools and action be taken regarding it, as the time is near at hand for final action in the matter, and that the number of those favoring the proposed amendment be reported to our congressman at Washington by a night letter.

A very interesting letter to the union from Mrs. A. M. Burdick, now in California, was read by Miss Rodger.

The program, in charge of Miss Himes, was very good indeed. The high school orchestra of eight pieces was on hand and rendered a fine selection. They were heartily encored and responded with another selection. A rising vote of thanks was given the boys for their effort.

A piano solo by Margaret Saunders was much enjoyed, as also the song by the county normal, "Speed the Day," as sung by the Flying Squadron.

"The Effects of Alcohol and Efforts to Check Its Use" was discussed by four members of the normal class—
Ruby Hooker, Etta Thayer, Gladys Waterman and Ward Genett—and they handled the topic nicely. We are glad that scientific temperance is being so thoroughly taught in the schools. The text-book used is Davidson's "Physiology" with supplementary texts.

Mrs. Geiken had prepared home-made candy, which was passed around and enjoyed. A rising vote of thanks was given the normal class, also our hostess, for the good program rendered and the hospitality enjoyed. A song by the normal class, "The Nation's Geling Dry," closed the program.

TRAIN MAKES FIRST TRIP

Over Extension of Line to Atlanta—Given Big Reception by Citizens.

The first train over the lately completed road to Atlanta went over the
B. C. & G. line Monday. It left Boyne City at 5 p. m. with Conductor Zimmerman in charge and about twenty business men on board. The run to Gaylord was made on schedule time regardless of the fact that at Headquarters a little time was taken by a big demonstration. About a hundred people were at the track to see the first through train in and they awoke the entire section with horns, pans and every conceivable noise-making instrument.

Atlanta was reached but a few minutes behind schedule. At the depot were over two hundred to welcome the business men. They were taken to the hotel, where they were served an excellent supper and later furnished rooms and in the morning breakfast.

The town was fully covered in the morning and the men returned with many compliments for the thriving little place.

The train is now an every day event.
The express contract has been signed and about the first of January the mail contract will be signed. The roadbed is in excellent condition and everyone is well pleased with this new steel artery running into a rich land.—Boyne Citizen.

A Story by Zona Gale

place for buying and selling, and the little shops were to him not ways of providing the town with life, but ways of providing their keepers with a livelihood. Beyond these was a familiar setting, arranged that day with white backgrounds and heaped roofs and laden boughs, the houses standing side by side like human beings. There they were, like the chorus to the thing he was thinking about. They were all thinking about it too. Every one of them knew what he knew. Yet he never saw the bond, but he thought they were only the places where men lived who had been his factory bonds and would be so yet if he had not cut them away. Ben Torrey, shoveling off his front walk with his boy swooping behind him; August Mair, giving his little girl a ride on the snow shovel; Nettie Hatch, clearing the ice out of her mail box, while her sister the lame one—watched from her chair by the window interested as in a rent event. Ebenezer spoke to them from some outposts of consciousness which his thought did not pass. The little street was not there, as it was never there for him as an entity. It was merely a street. And the little town was not an entity. It was merely where he lived. He went behind Buff Mitten and the snowplow—an he always went—as if space had been created for folk to live in one at a time and as if this were his own town.

When he reached the bend from the Old Trail to the road where the factory was he understood at last that he had been hearing a song sung over a great many times:

One for the way it all begun,
Two for the way it all has run,
What three'll be for I do forget,
But what's to be has not been yet.
So holy and mistletoe,
So holy and mistletoe,
Over and over and over, oh.

Buff, who was singing it, looked over his shoulder, and nodded.

"They said you can't have no Christmas on Christmas day," he observed, grinning, "but I ain't heard nothing to prevent singing Christmas carols right up to the day that is the day."

Ebenezer halted.

"How old are you?" he abruptly demanded of Buff, whom he had known from Buff's boyhood.

"Thirty-three," said Buff, "damn it."

"You and Bruce about the same age, ain't you?" said Ebenezer.

Buff nodded.

"Well," said Ebenezer, "well"—and stood looking at him. Malcolm would have been his age, too.

"Going down to the factory, are you?" Buff said. "Wait a bit. I'll hike on down ahead of you."

He turned the snowplow down the factory road as if he were making a triumphal progress, fashioning the snow borders with all the freedom of some sculpturing wind on adobe clouds.

One for the way it all begun,
Two for the way it all has run,

he sang to the soft push and thud and clunk of his going. He swept a circle in front of the little house that was the factory office, as if he had prepared the setting for a great event; and Ebenezer, following in the long, bright path, stepped into the hall of the house.

For thirty years he had been accustomed to enter the little house with his mind ready to receive its interior of desks and shelves and safes and files. Today, quite unexpectedly, as he opened the door the thing that was in his mind was a hall stair with a red carpet and a parlor adorning with figured stuff at the windows and a coal fire in the stove. And thirty-five years ago it had been that way, when he and his wife and child had lived in the little house where his business was then just starting at a machine set out in the woodshed. As his project had grown and his factory had arisen in the neighborhood, the family had moved farther up in the town. Remembrance had been divorced from this place for decades. Today, without warning, it wanted for him on the threshold.

He had asked his bookkeeper to meet him there, but the man had not yet arrived. So Ebenezer himself kindled the fire in the rusty office stove in the room where the figured curtains had been. The old account books that he wanted were not here on the shelves nor in the cupboards of the cold adjoining rooms. They dated so far back that they had been filed away upstairs. He had not been upstairs in years, and his first impulse was to send his bookkeeper when he should appear. But this, after all, was not Ebenezer's way, and he went up the stairs himself.

Each upper room was like some one unconscious in slumber or death and still as distinct in personality as if in some silent activity. There was the shelf he had put up in their room, the burned place on the floor where he had tipped over a lamp, tattered shreds of the paper she had hung to surprise him, the little storehouse which they had cleared out for Malcolm when he was old enough and whose door had had to be kept closed because innumerable uncaged birds lived there.

When he had gone through the piles of account books in a closet and those he sought were not found among them he remembered the trunkful up in the tiny loft. He let down from the passage ceiling the ladder he had once hung there and climbed up to the little roof recess.

Light entered through four broken panes of skylight. It fell in a faint ring on the dusty floor. The roof sloped sharply and the trunks and boxes had been pressed back to the rim of the place. Ebenezer put his hands out, groping. They touched an edge of something that averted. He laid hold of it and drew it out and set down on the faint rug of light a small wooden hobbyhorse.

He stood staring at it, remembering it as clearly as if some one had set before him the old white gate which he strode in his own boyhood. It was Malcolm's hobbyhorse, dappled gray, the tall and the mane missing and the paint worn off—and tenderly licked off—his nose. When they had moved to the other house he had bought the boy a pony, and this horse had been left behind. Something else stirred in his memory, the name by which Malcolm had used to call his hobbyhorse, some ringing name—but he had forgotten. He thrust the thing back where it had been and went on with his search for the account books.

It Was Malcolm's Hobbyhorse, Dappled Gray.

By the time he had found them and had got down again in the office the bookkeeper was there, keeping up the fire and uttering, with some acquiescence, on the obvious aspects of the weather, of the climate, of the visible universe. The bookkeeper was a young man, very ready to agree with Ebenezer for the sake of future favor, but with the wisdom of all industrial machines constructed by men from human potentialities. Also he had a cough and thin hands and a little fawny and no job.

"Get to work on this book," Ebenezer bade him. "It's the one that began the business."

"I don't think it seems"—the man began dubitantly.

"Well, don't think," said Ebenezer sharply, "that's not needful. Read the first entries."

The bookkeeper read:

Picking tops (four days) $1.00

Sewing (Miss Shavkelt)50

Egg money (3 1/2 dozen)75

Winning puzzle 2.00

Cash on hand—25 cents $1.25

Disbursed:

Kitchen roller $.50

Coffee mill50

Shoes for M 1.25

Water colors for M25

Suit for M 2.00

Gloves—line40

Cash on hand—25 cents $1.25

The bookkeeper paused again. Ebenezer, frowning, reached for the book in his wife's fine faded writing were her accounts after the 25 cents was a funny little face with which she had been wont to illustrate her letters. Ebenezer stared, grunted, turned to the last page of the book. There in bold figures, the other way of the text, was his own accounting. He remembered now he had kept his first books in the back of the account book that she had used for the house.

Ebenezer glanced sharply at his bookkeeper. To his annoyance the man was smiling with perfect comprehension and sympathy. Ebenezer averted his eyes, and the bookkeeper felt dimly that he had been guilty of no infidelity toward his employer.

"Family life does cling to a man, Mr.," he said.

"Do you find it so?" said Ebenezer drily. "Read, please."

At noon Ebenezer walked home alone through the melting snow. And the thought that he did not think, but that spoke to him without his knowing, said:

"Winning a puzzle—$2.50. She never told me she tried to earn a little something that way."

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

Christmas Trees in England.

The Christmas tree has not the vogue in England that it enjoys on the west side of the sea, but it is not exactly unknown. The poor and the middle classes go in for trees to only a trifling extent, but the great folks of the west end and the big country places all at once have got to be in for a tree.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

"WHERE HE WAS BEFORE"

Luke 24:50-53; Acts 1:11-12—Dec. 20.

"What and if ye shall see the Son of Man coming up where He was before"—John 4:34.

TODAY'S lesson relates especially to Jesus' ascension, which took place near Bethany. Apparently He met with His followers in the Holy City, and led them out to Bethany, talking the while, explaining the things of which they would need to be thoroughly convinced before He would leave them, and before they would be in a proper attitude of faith to be prepared for the blessing He would send.

St. Luke, who also wrote the Book of Acts, tells us that the essence of Jesus' teaching during the forty days after His resurrection was regarding the Kingdom of God. Still they understood not; indeed, they could not fully understand until they would receive the begetting of the Holy Spirit. It was to this point, therefore, that Jesus directed their attention, saying that they should not depart from Jerusalem nor engage in any work of preaching, but simply wait for the promise of the Father, of which He had previously told them—the gift of the Holy Spirit. He explained that John the Baptist had indeed intended His followers to receive a superior baptism and qualification: the baptism of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost.

Messiah's Kingdom Still Future.

The disciples had gotten their hearing to such an extent that they asked the very significant question, "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore the Kingdom to Israel?" The Kingdom had been taken from Israel away back in the days of Zedekiah, when God said that He would overturn it until Messiah would come—"until He comes whose right it is, and I will give it to him."—Ezekiel 21:25-27.

The disciples considered Jesus to be Messiah, and thought that the Father's time had come for giving him the Kingdom. But they had been witnesses to the contrary—that the Kingdom of Heaven had suffered violence at the hands of the rulers, that the rightful King had been slain and that He had risen from the dead. Now they were inquiring whether it would be at that time or at some future coming that the Kingdom would be established.

The Master's answer was significant. He had already intimated that at the appointed time they would know the times and seasons; but it was not due for them to understand these things then. They must wait patiently. The development of patience would do them good, would strengthen both their faith and their character in general.

For the Father to have made known the long interval of nineteen hundred years before Messiah's Kingdom would be established would not have been wise for His people would have been discouraged. Therefore the Master merely indicated that they must not expect to understand God's Program until after they received the anointing of the Holy Spirit. Then they would be fully qualified to be God's representatives and to speak the Message.

Manner of Our Lord's Departure.

During the forty days in which our Lord manifested Himself to His disciples, the world did not see Him as He had said (John 14:19). The actual demonstration so helpful to His disciples culminated with His actual ascension into the air in the body in which He had just been with them. Because they were not yet spirit-begotten, they doubtless needed such a manifestation to lead them to understand that they would see Him no more until He would come in power and great glory to assembles all His saints to Himself and to bless the world.

As Jesus parted from His disciples into the clouds out of their sight, we assume that the body in which He had just appeared was dissolved, or dematerialized. The use of it was merely to help to establish the disciples' faith and to be a means of instruction, an assurance that they need not expect to see Him in any kind of manifestation.

One of the evangelists recounts that after Jesus had disappeared, angels materialized and addressed the disciples. (Acts 1:11.) Their statement has led some to believe that at His Second Advent our Lord will materialize and appear in the flesh; but to our understanding they are laboring under a grave misapprehension. The world will see Him no more; and the Church is to see Him only with the eye of faith until they shall experience their change in the end of the Age. Then we shall see Him as He is not as He was.—1 John 3:2.

Our Lord went quietly, secretly, unobserved to the world. He is to return as a thief in the night; and none will know of His return except those whose eyes of understanding are opened to discern the signs of His presence.

A Christmas Eve Warning

"Now, keep as quiet, pussy, as you can be, because If we make just a bit of noise we won't see Santa Claus."

The Message of Christmas

By CARDINAL GIBBONS.

TODAY the whole Christian world prostrates itself in adoration around the crib of Bethlehem and rehearses in accents of love a history which precedes all time and will endure throughout eternity. If asked to explain the rapid influence which controls us we have no other words than the evangel of joy which the angel gave unto earth: "For this day is born unto you a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord." The blessings resulting from our Christian civilization are poured out so regularly and abundantly on the intellectual, moral and social world, like the sunlight and the air of heaven and the fruits of the earth, that they have ceased to excite any surprise, except to those who visit lands where the religion of Christ is little known. Before the advent of Christ the whole world, with the exception of the secluded Roman province of Palestine was huddled in idolatry. Men worshiped the sun and moon and stars of heaven. They worshiped everything except God only, to whom alone divine homage is due. Christ, the Light of the World, proclaimed unto all men in its fulness the truth which had hitherto been hidden in Judea. He taught mankind to know the one true God, a God existing from eternity unto eternity, a God who created all things by his power, who governs all things by his wisdom and whose superintending providence watches over the affairs of nations as well as of men, "without whom not even a sparrow falls to the ground."

The message of Christmas day is in tended for all men, for all times, for all conditions of existence. Only by stern adhesion to the principles therein contained can individuals and nations hope to share in that peace which has been promised to men of good will. To violate them is to reverse the order established by God, and disorder is the synonym for sin and strife.

The Greatest Gift. Christmas stands for one thing—our Father's wondrous love to us, his erring and unworthy children, in sending his only begotten Son into this world to die for our sins and to rise again to be our Deliverer each day from sin and selfishness.

Jesus Christ himself is the great Christmas gift. The only true way to keep Christmas is by first of all accepting for ourselves this wondrous gift of our Heavenly Father and then to show our appreciation of this wondrous gift by giving ourselves and all that we have for others.

It is a true instinct that leads us to give to others Christmas presents, but too often in following out this instinct we give these Christmas gifts to the wrong persons. We give to those who already have too much and forget those who have not enough.

God gave his great gift to the needy, to those who had nothing to return for his gift. Let us follow him. Let us find the needy and give to them out of our abundance. Every one who is in comfortable circumstances should find some family that is really in need some family where there will be little Christmas brightness unless others come to their help and give to this family a real Christmas, including a good Christmas dinner and some appropriate gift to every member of the family down to the youngest child. Don't do it through some society. What is most needed is living and sympathetic personal contact between rich and poor. Do this and you will have as merry a Christmas as you ever knew.—Rev. H. A. Torrey.

TAD'S CHRISTMAS THEATER.

How President Lincoln Came to Grant Son's Unique Request.

Tad Lincoln wanted a Christmas gift such as perhaps no other president's son ever wanted before or since.

"Father," said Tad, "there is some thing I'd like for Christmas. If you'll give it to me."

As the son asked the question his father looked at the boy over the rim of his spectacles in a grave way and asked:

"What is that, my son?"

"I want a theater," said Tad. "Well, my boy, I don't know that I have any objection," said the president. "There are plenty of them. I suppose, in the toy shops."

"Oh, but I don't want a toy theater," protested the youngster. "I want a real one. There isn't any reason why we shouldn't have a theater to the White House."

Mr. Lincoln was not at first disposed to take the suggestion favorably, but Tad, who was his favorite child and at that time eleven years old, was persistent, and at length the indulgent parent yielded. This was just before the Christmas of 1863—too late to have the theater ready for the holidays, many preparations being required. But it is a matter of history, though known to few, that not long after the following New Year's day the boy's ambition was realized, a room on the second floor of the executive mansion being set aside for the purpose and a stage erected, with gas footlights and simple scenery.

HOLLY FOR THE PRESIDENT.

Southern Belles and Beaux Brought it by Stagecoach.

Before railways coaches changed horses at Alexandria and at the capital, and loads of young belles and beaux went to the Christmas parties in Washington, carrying to the president and his family holly and trailing pine from their southern homes.

President Buchanan, with Miss Lane, "the golden beauty of the White House," gave grand fetes to the young people of the capital in 1858-9 on Christmas eve. The maidens wore simple gowns and high coiffs. To each guest Miss Lane gave a sprig of holly berries as a souvenir.

Perhaps the most attractive event of President Johnson's administration was the Christmas party for children given to please his nephews and nieces and their friends. A platform stood in the center of the east room, on which sat the Marine band. Overhead were festooned silken flags, and flowers bloomed everywhere. It was a fairy land of butterfly, coloring—gold and scarlet sashes, stockings and pretty slippers.

The Heaviest Rainfall. The heaviest rainfall known upon the earth occurs upon the mountain slopes beyond the head of the bay of Bengal and amounts on the average to 610 inches, or nearly fifty one feet, a year.

Christmas In Ye Olden Days

GIFT LADEN PINATAS.

Unique Holiday Frolics Which Delight
Children of Mexico.

About ten days before Christmas in the City of Mexico the pinatas in the Calle de San Diego begin to grow festive with evergreens, flowers, bright berries and other greens brought in from the mountains by the paisanos to delight the eye and tempt the purses of the promenaders. In the booths of the neighboring Calle de San Juan are displayed fruits, nuts and candles, and still others offer angels, shepherds, sheep, mules, oxen and other objects suggestive of the Saviour's birth.

Probably the greatest attraction for the Mexican children are the pinatas. Peddlers may be seen sauntering along the streets carrying long poles which are strung with varicolored pinatas of every description, draped with tinsel. These represent flowers, fruits, males and even men and women, in each contains a jar filled with goodies. They range in price from 25 centavos to several dollars, according to their degree of elaborateness. The pinata is suspended from the ceiling or hung in the courtyard. All the family gather around it. A child is blindfolded, turned around several times, then given a stick and told to find and break the pinata. If he fails after three trials to locate it he surrenders to the next in turn, and so on until a lucky blow shatters the pinata and the contents fall, to be scrambled for.

Christmas Sentiments.
The real spirit of Christmas is giving, not getting.
As you would that men do unto you do ye even so to them.
The world is full of the people who talk so much of what they can do and what they are going to do that they never have time to begin. Christmas tide is a splendid opportunity for action.

Smiles For Christmas.
"December's days are the shortest in the year," said Mrs. Jones to Johnny. "I think they're the very longest. It takes so long for Christmas to come."

"It is snowing. Hurrah!"
"I don't think Santa will come, then, 'cause papa said he uses reindeers only to pull his sleigh."

"I bet Santa was a good boy in school."
"Yes; he always was a 'gifted' scholar."

"Me Too."
The time is short for Christmas shopping. And women make the money fly. Now, when I think, it makes me hopping. The time is short, and so am I!

A CHRISTMAS GIFT.

By LANNIE HAYNES MARTIN.
[Copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.]

There's not a creature living
Who hath not some gift worth giving.

If he look into that chest
Labeled "Everybody's Best"
He will find in cashet there
Many treasures rich and rare,
Maybe just a loving word,
Made to fit a heart that's stirred
With deep grief or loneliness,
Or a hand clasp that will bless,
Or perhaps that diadem
We call "smile," a priceless gem

Which can send a radiant glow,
Oft dispelling human woe.
If there love he cannot find,
Smiles nor words nor wishes
Kind,

If in his "chest" such dearth be,

Such unheard of poverty,
Let him cut this little screed
From the page he now doth read.

Give this verse that I have writ
And my love along with it!

"PEPPER NUTS."

Three Recipes For Making the Famous German Christmas Cookies.

Wherever German people congregate their famous Christmas cookies, known as "Pfefferkuesen" ("pepper nuts") are prime favorites. Here are three recipes for making the cakes:

Pfefferkuesen (white).—Four whole eggs, four yolks, one pound sugar. Beat three quarters of an hour and add one half pound almonds (blanched and grated), two ounces citron (cut fine), two ounces orange peel (cut fine), one teaspoonful cinnamon (powdered), one teaspoonful cloves (powdered), one pound flour. Mix well, cut out piece-size of a walnut and bake on a buttered and flour dusted pan in medium oven.

Pfefferkuesen (brown).—One pint white sirup, seven ounces sugar, seven ounces butter. Boil together, stirring continually. Skin and put aside to cool. Mix two pounds flour, two ten spoonfuls baking powder, one table spoonful Jamaica (if there is no objection to its use), three eggs, one dram powdered cloves, one dram powdered cardamom, add the sirup mix well, dust with flour and let stand fourteen days, roll out one-third inch thickness, cut off small balls. Bake on buttered tin in medium oven fifteen to twenty minutes.

Pfefferkuesen.—One-half pound flour, one-half pound sugar, grated rind of one lemon, two drams powdered cinnamon, one dram powdered ginger, one dram powdered white pepper, three eggs (beaten). Mix well, roll out one-third inch thick, cut out small cakes and bake in medium oven.

When Pullets Lay.

Pullets hatched in January and February are likely to lay in August and molt in November. Pullets hatched in April or May, if properly matured, will lay in the latter part of August or in the early part of September and will continue to lay throughout the winter months. Pullets hatched the first of June and later are not likely to lay until the following spring. There may, however, be a few exceptions to this rule.

Christmas Sermon In Words of One Syllable.

An innovation in sermons was the one delivered by the Rev. A. Smythe Palmer, M. A., D. D., vicar of Holy Trinity church, Wansstead, England, on the birth of Christ. This sermon is entirely in words of one syllable.

He speaks the mind of God who tells us and would have us know what God thinks, for if it were not for him we could not know at all. "We love the world to keep. All men can say: 'To us this child is born; to us God gave this son of his love. I have my share in it.' And so we are all God of heart and make our church gay with plants and flowers and sing our hymns of joy and keep the feast with gifts and good fare. It is the birth day of all our hopes. Now, it was good news of great joy that the host from on high brought to the herds who kept watch on their sheep in the fields. And it is still so. For us, as much as for them, was born in that small town one strong to save. 'Which is Christ the Lord.'"

The texts take our thoughts back to the birth of this day. It is a birthday for the whole world to keep. All men can say: "To us this child is born; to us God gave this son of his love. I have my share in it." And so we are all God of heart and make our church gay with plants and flowers and sing our hymns of joy and keep the feast with gifts and good fare. It is the birth day of all our hopes. Now, it was good news of great joy that the host from on high brought to the herds who kept watch on their sheep in the fields. And it is still so. For us, as much as for them, was born in that small town one strong to save. "Which is Christ the Lord."

It is old news now, and I fear it falls on our dull, cold hearts like some old tale of long past time which has lost its charm. Oh, let us not shut our ears to it as some of these first men did. When he came to his own his own would not take him in. They said: "There is no room for him here." No room in the inn when he came to it. It was not an inn, you must know, like one of ours, but a mere bare court where those on the road might rest. "Khan," they call it in the east.

Does it not seem to us a sad and a strange sight that a young babe should be shut out in the cold night—God in want of house room? A poor place, at best, as rude and rough as we can well think, and such as it was, quite full with the crowd who had come first. The host of the inn sends them off. He tells them there is a cave at the back of the inn where the beasts are kept; they may find rest there, if they will. That cave, where the birth of all time took place, is still shown in the rock. A great church built there marks the spot. Then, poor, mean and cold, it was the best place he could find to lay his head.

"The fox has his hole and the bird of the air her nest, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." So, in that cave in the rock, the stall of the ox and the ass, in the crib out of which they ate their hay, the newborn babe was laid. Just think what all this means—God made flesh, God born as man in this world of ours, that he might find a way to bring back man to God. He hid his night, and men hid their face from him. None but the herds who kept their sheep—saw, or knew of it till they fell to the ground in a great blaze of light, and a host of bright ones in the sky sang such a song as no choir on earth has sung which gave praise to God on high "and on earth peace, good will to men." Those herds had faith to go and seek the child of whom they were told. They found him in the crib, and they saw more than their eyes could see. They knew that in that weak child was the power of God to save. And so these good men, when they had bowed down and went back to their flock, struck with awe, and "gave praise to God for all they had heard and seen."

Shall we do less? Shall we not, too, go home and give thanks on our part with joy for what we have heard? And in all our joy let us find room for the one guest who should not be left out, room in our hearts for him whose word is life.

CHRISTMAS WAITS AT PUBLIC CHRISTMAS TREE.

Popular Old English Custom Growing in Favor in America.

Christmas "waits," those bands of singers familiar in England for several centuries, have been less numerous in recent years, but the custom, with certain variations, is gaining ground in the United States. The municipal Christmas trees which will mark the great holiday in many towns and cities this year will have the singing of Christmas carols and anthems as a part of the exercises in connection with the trees.

The town of Burlington, N. J., has kept up the custom of the waits since colonial days. Each Christmas eve a band of vocalists, recruited from the choir of St. Mary's Episcopal church, start out an hour or so before midnight and sing carols and anthems in various sections of the city. They visit the homes of the rector, the curate and members of the vestry and sing before their doors. As these homes are situated in widely separated sections of the city, the singing is heard by practically all of the residents.

Children of the town who may have retired early are usually aroused by the singing and windows in upper floors are thrown open. As the singers move away after finishing the caron the listeners yell greetings to their neighbors, close their windows and return to their cozy beds.

In many of the houses before which the singers render concerts the occupants are expecting them, and they are invited in to partake of refreshments. They can linger but a little time, for they must cover their arranged route before the chiming of the church bells ashera in a new Christmas.

A Christmas Booth For a Fair.

Have the booth all in white, with tufts of cotton scattered about for snow. Isinglass sprinkled around represents frost nicely. Icicles varied in size and depending from the top of the booth are very effective. They may be made as follows:

Roll strips of paper as you would for lamp lighters and cover them with drippings from a tallow candle. If the tallow is allowed to harden in the raised places a perfect imitation of a real icicle is the result.

In place of the usual "grab bag" have a Christmas tree burdened with little gifts tied in colored tissue paper. Santa Claus, of course, has charge of the tree.

Christmas Bells.
I heard the bells on Christmas day
Their old, familiar carols play
And, wild and sweet,
The words repeat
Of peace on earth, good will to men!
—Longfellow

The Madonna of the Grotto

IN religious symbolism from very early times red and blue were sacred to the Mother of Christ. Red expressed heavenly love and aspiration; blue, truth, constancy, purity. In pictures representing the Assumption the Virgin is clad in white. In pictures termed the Immaculate Conception she is arrayed in white. This subject was not treated in early art.

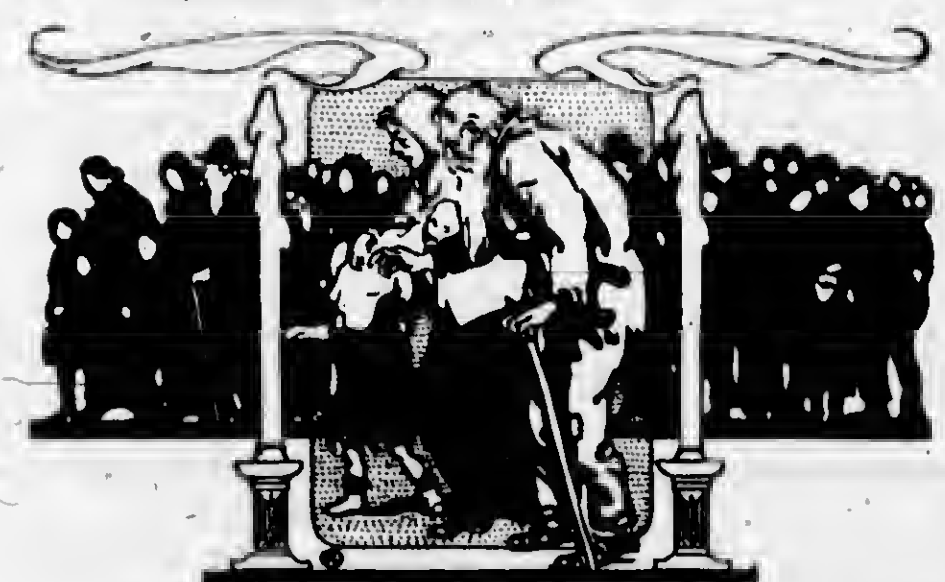

The earth has grown old with its burden of care,
But at Christmas it always is young.
The heart of the jewel burns lustrous and fair,
And its soul full of music breaks forth on the air
When the song of the angels is sung.

It is coming, Old Earth, it is coming tonight!
On the snowflakes which cover the sod
The feet of the Christ Child fall gentle and white,
And the voice of the Christ Child tells out with delight
That mankind are the children of God.

On the sad and the lonely, the wretched and poor,
That voice of the Christ Child shall fall
And to every blind wanderer opens the door
Of a hope that he dared not to dream of before,
With a sunning of welcome for all.

The feet of the humblest may walk in the field
Where the feet of the holiest have trod.
This, this is the marvel to mortals revealed
When the silver trumpets of Christmas have pealed,
That mankind are the children of God.

A Prayer for Christmas.
Almighty God, we give thee thanks for the mighty yearning of the human heart for the coming of a Saviour and the constant promise of thy word that he was to come. In our own souls we repeat the humble sighs and panting aspirations of ancient men and ages and own that our souls are in darkness and infirmity without faith in him who comes to bring God to man and man to God. We bless thee for the tribute that we can pay to him from our sense of need and dependence and that our own hearts can so answer from their wilderness the cry, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." In us the rough places are to be made smooth, the crooked straight, the mountains of pride brought low and the valleys of despondency lifted up.
O God, prepare thou the way in us now, and may we welcome anew thy holy child! Hosanna! Blessed be he who cometh in the name of the Lord.
Amen.—Disgood.

The Three Kings.

By HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

Three kings came riding from far away—
Melchior and Gaspar and Balthasar.
Three wise men out of the east were they,
And they traveled by night and they slept by day.
For their guide was a beautiful, wonderful star.

The star was so beautiful, large and clear
That all the other stars of the sky
Became a white mist in the atmosphere.
And by this they knew that the coming was near.
Of the Prince foretold in the prophecy.

Three caskets they bore on their saddle-bows.
Three caskets of gold with golden keys Their robes were of crimson silk with rows
Of bells and pomegranates and furbelows
Their turbans like blossoming almond trees.

And so the three kings rode into the west
Through the dusk of night, over hill and dell,
And sometimes they nodded with beard on breast
And sometimes talked as they paused to rest
With the people they met at some wayside well.

"Of the child that is born," said Balthasar,
"Good people, I pray you tell us the news.
For we in the east have seen his star
And have ridden fast and have ridden far
To find and worship the King of the Jews."

And the people answered, "You ask us vainly:
We know of no king but Herod the Great."
They thought the wise men were men in ease
As they spurred their horses across the plain
Like riders in haste who cannot wait.

And when they came to Jerusalem Herod the Great, who had heard this thing,
Sent for the wise men and questioned them.
And said, "Go down unto Bethlehem
And bring tidings of this new King."

SENT FOR THE WISE MEN AND QUESTIONED THEM.

So they rode away, and the star stood still.
The only one in the gray of morning,
Yea, it stood still of its own free will
Right over Bethlehem on the hill.
The city of David, where Christ was born.

And the three kings rode through the gate and the guard,
Through the silent street till their horses turned
And neighed as they entered the great inn yard.

But the windows were closed, and the doors were barred,
And only a light in the stable burned
And cradled there in the scented hay,
In the air made sweet by the breath of kine,
The little child in the manger lay.

The child that would be king some day,
Of a kingdom not human, but divine.
His mother, Mary of Nazareth,
Sat watching beside his place of rest
Watching the even flow of his breath,
For the joy of life and the terror of death
Were mingled together in her breast.

They laid their offerings at his feet.
The gold was their tribute to a king,
The frankincense, with its odor sweet,
Was for the priest; the paraclete,
The myrror for the body's burying.

And the mother wondered and bowed her head
And sat as still as a statue of stone.
Her heart was troubled, yet comforted,
Remembering what the angel had said
Of an endless reign and of David's throne.

Then the kings rode out of the city gate
With a clatter of hoofs, in proud array.
But they went not back to Herod the Great.
For they knew his malice and feared his hate.
And returned to their homes by another way.

At the battle of Magenta in 1859, during the Italian war, the French and Sardinians defeated the Austrians at a loss to the latter of 10,000 in killed and 7,000 in prisoners, while the allies only lost 4,000. For this victory the French marshal, MacMahon, was created Duke of Magenta by the Emperor Louis Napoleon.

profit allure thee, no ambition corrupt thee, no example sway thee, no permission move thee to do anything which thou knowest to be evil; so shalt thou always live joyfully, for a mas.—Poor Richard's Almanac.

HOW CHRISTMAS CAME

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

(Copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.)

JAMES LONG stirred on his narrow cot and looked through the snow-frosted window out upon the limitless expanse of prairie. It was the day before Christmas.

"Eve," he murmured to his little wife, who was covertly watching him with anxious eyes, "I'm afraid it will not seem like Christmas to you out here, away from all your family and your friends."

Eve's soft hand closed his lips. "Just we two together out here on the plains—all alone—make Christmas for me," she whispered. "What do I care if the blizzard has delayed the trains—if we cannot receive any Christmas packages and never a Christmas greeting comes from the outside world? What care I if the Peterson stage cannot bring us the provisions I ordered? We have enough supplies to last us a week. There, your beef tea is ready!"

Jim smiled at her as she darted busily here and there preparing his midday meal. And luck had followed the young ranchers ever since they had come to the western grain country eighteen months ago. The end of the year found the Longs marooned upon their little ranch, ten miles from their nearest neighbor and the base of supplies, with Jim in bed with rheumatic fever. There was nothing left save a hundred chickens in the pen. These Eve fed twice a day, having shovelled a path through the mighty snowdrifts to reach the fowls.

Jim drank his broth from Eve's loving hands and went off to sleep murmuring a blessing on her fair head. Then Eve's mask of cheerfulness dropped for a little while. Her lips quivered. It wasn't a bit like Christmas after all.

Last Christmas—their first one on the ranch—had been brightened by express packages from the east, numerous able letters and Christmas greetings from distant friends. Now the blizzard had isolated them from Christmas.

All that long Christmas eve Jim never suspected that his wife's heart was heavy. She made a delightful mystery of something she had been knitting for him, and she talked cheerfully about the opening of the new ranch about bordered their southern range. The owner of the new ranch was reputed to be very rich, and in the indulgence of this latest whim he was said to be buying up all the surrounding property.

"I wish he would buy this white elephant," murmured Jim from his corner. "We could go back east and buy a chicken ranch."

"I'm afraid he doesn't want this," sighed Eve. "He would have been here long ago. Dave Wilkins says Mr. Carson went back to New York three weeks ago. Still," she added gayly, "for all we know, dearie, Mr. Carson may be on his way back to the ranch this very moment."

Christmas morning! Eve Long said "Merry Christmas!" to her husband, and Jim laughed back the greeting and then tugged her when she wrapped him in a warm gray sweater minus one sleeve.

"My turn now," Jim said, so you will have to do with only one sleeve until the mails get through," laughed Eve. "Now I've got to go and rope a chicken for dinner."

Jim smiled at her feeble joke and asked her to open the door and let some of the cold frosty air into the room. Wrapped up to his nose in bed quilts, Jim looked out of the door at the snowy world.

Suddenly he rubbed his eyes. Something black—a long line of black specks—dotted the snow. They grew larger and became people struggling through the heavy drifts toward the house on the prairie. Jim lifted his voice and called Eve.

"Oh, what is it?" she asked. "Look!" he pointed.

"People! Why, who can they be?" marveled Eve, going on to the porch the better to see them. "Why, Jim, there are eight of them, five men and three women, and all strangers. I'm going to put the coffee out. They will be exhausted."

Fifteen minutes later Eve stood on the wide porch and welcomed eight weary men and women.

"We were wishing some one would come and spend Christmas day with us," was Eve's greeting as she drew in bring cups of steaming coffee.

"This is rather an invasion," said the largest man, a tall, commanding person with iron gray hair and piercing blue eyes. "My name is Carson, and my companions were my fellow passengers on the Eagle Top express, which is stuck in a snowdrift ten miles from here. There is no hope of getting through to Eagle Top until tomorrow, so I called for volunteers to tramp to the nearest ranch house and beg for something to eat. The dining car was stieracked at Minton Pass, and two hours later we ran into the snow drift."

While the women rested and talked to Jim in the living room Carson and his three companions helped Eve prepare dinner. Young Mr. Dinwiddie took the hatchet and valiantly slew three chickens and prepared them for frying.

The little house did not lack for merriment that Christmas day. There were much fun and jollity, and when the Christmas dinner was over the women of the party fell to and cleared it away, making their weary little hostess sit in the living room with Jim and Mr. Carson—the great Mr. Carson, owner of the new ranch, and you—and then and there was completed the transaction for the sale of the Long ranch to the eastern magnate.

And, as if all that was not happiness enough for one day, late in the afternoon came the sound of sleighbells, and the doctor appeared to pay a Christmas visit as well as to bring in innumerable packages that had accumulated at the railroad station for them, as well as a mass of mail matter.

THE DOCTOR APPEARED TO PAY A CHRISTMAS VISIT.

Before night there came a heavy sledge for the passengers from the train which was ready to break through to Eagle Top, and Eve found herself the possessor of eight new friends when she bade them farewell.

"This is the best Christmas I ever had!" sighed Eve when they were alone once more and had reviewed the happy day.

Mr. Glumm on Christmas. My old friend Mr. Glumm declares that holidays are all a sell. They interfere with our affairs. And cost a lot of cash as well. And yet his words cannot provoke my envy for his hoarded sum. I'd rather find myself dead broke. Than view the world like Mr. Glumm.

He vows that festive events are but rehearsals for ill health. He tastes no pleasant condiments. Unless, perchance, 'tis done by stealth. But even dyspepsia cannot make my view of life to his accurate. I'd rather have a stomach ache. Than nurse a grouch like Mr. Glumm.

NOW HOLDS WORLD'S RECORD

State of Michigan in the Lead for Attendance at Boys' Conference.

William Jennings Bryan Asks Boys to Sign Pledge With Him—Conference Notes.

At the twelfth annual state boys' conference William Jennings Bryan said to the boys: "I want to sign a pledge with just as many of you as will sign it. I am going to ask those in charge of this meeting to give you a chance to sign a pledge when you get home. I would like to sign with you and then I would like to have you go home and get as many signers as it is possible. If we could get men to sign the pledge and keep it we would not have the disgraceful spectacle that we have in this country to-day with four times as much spent for liquor as for education and ten times as much as is spent for religion. And if you, the young men of this state, will bind yourselves together in agreement not to drink, it will soon be easy to solve the liquor question and drive its evils from our midst." This week the boys of the state are securing signatures to the pledge which Mr. Bryan has already signed and are in hopes that they will find it possible to get 50,000 signers. When the pledge sheets are all in the hands of the State Y. M. C. A. committee, they will be bound and the book forwarded to Mr. Bryan.

Michigan now holds the world's record of the biggest and best boys' conference ever held.

"I never have seen a gathering that could rise to such heights of vision as that conference of 2100 older boys of Michigan Saturday night under the influence of Secretary of State Bryan," said Fred B. Smith. "They rose to heights of impression such as I have rarely seen. It was wonderful. Throughout that tremendous appeal of an hour and three-quarters they sat enthralled.

"The boys' conference must be sustained. The state committee of the Young Men's Christian Association must be furnished with all the sinews of war to carry out such a program. I truly believe that it is the most wonderful thing that has come on the religious map in a century."

CLOSING 1915 CONTRACTS

Beet Growers of Charlevoix County Will Get More Money Next Season.

Last week the weighing station for sugar beets raised for the Holland Sugar Company closed after a most successful and profitable season for the beet growers of this section.

The station was open for eight weeks and during that time 1645 tons of beets were weighed and shipped to the factory. These 1645 tons made 52 carloads. Three men were employed at the station—W. F. Johnson, weigh master; Sam Brown, tare man, and W. E. Byers, car man.

Acres for the 1915 planting to be taken in this section will undoubtedly close this week with almost double the acreage taken. During the season just passed the grower received $5 per ton for beets delivered at the weighing station. For the 1915 season the price will be raised to $6 per ton. Outside reports state that the advance in price has not materially increased the amount of acreage taken and that only the normal acreage will be taken by the various companies of the state and that the tonnage capacity of none of the plants will be increased to take advantage of more beets.

The sugar beet crop in Northern Michigan has reached the stage where it is a stable proposition and in the last year or so there has been no trouble in securing all the acreage wanted by the sugar companies.

CHARLEVOIX HONORED

Delegate to the State Grange Elected to Office of Pomona.

In recognition of being one of the strongest, if not the strongest, grange counties in the state, Charlevoix was rewarded this year by having one of her delegates to the State Grange, held at Battle Creek last week, selected to the office of Pomona. Miss Jennie Black—for a number of years a prominent member of Marion Center Grange, but at present a member of Charlevoix Grange—was the delegate selected for this important office. That she will fill the office in the best possible manner goes without saying.

Other members elected state officers were:

Master—John C. Ketcham.
Overseer—O. C. Bramble.
Lecturer—Dora Stockman.
Chaplain—Mrs. O. J. C. Woodman.
Treasurer—F. C. Coward.
Secretary—Miss Jennie Buell.
Steward—T. E. Niles.
Flora—Mrs. C. H. Anderson.
Ceres—Mrs. Lucy Corlies.

EASTPORT TO HAVE RAILROAD

G. R. & I. Company Plans to Extend Line Through to Charlevoix.

The G. R. & I. Railroad Company is planning to extend a line of their road through this section in such a way that it will pass directly through Eastport.

It is thought that the proposed line will run from Rapid City westward and continue along the bay shore to Charlevoix.

Communications have been made with some of the Eastport residents as to the attitude of that village toward the project.

Nothing very definite can be obtained concerning the plans and, as there have been rumors off and on for years concerning a railroad through Eastport, some are inclined to doubt the authenticity of the reports. But it seems very likely that the plans will be carried out this time, as the G. R. & I. has long wanted a line into Charlevoix and their actions seem to indicate business.

Eastport is enthusiastic, as it would naturally mean a great boom for that village.—Central Lake Torch.

Daily Christmas Hint

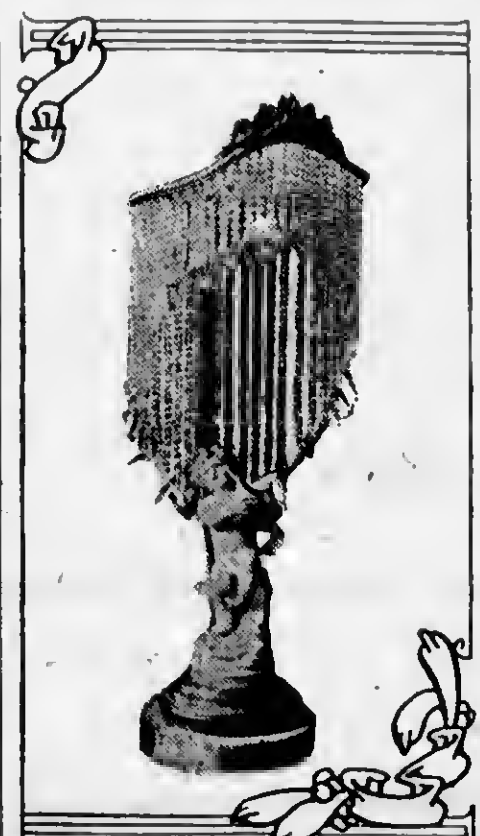

A Gift For the Literary Woman

The charming lamp illustrated here would be much appreciated by the woman of literary tendencies as a desk lamp in her boudoir. The base is a daintily modeled cupid, which supports a canopy of crystal iridescent beads, which show very effectively when the electric bulb is turned on.

Or the lamp would go charmingly upon a lady's dressing table with its array of silver and crystal.

An electric lamp with all the other desk appurtenances to match would be a useful present for the literary woman.

There is quite likely to be a dearth of imported articles for Christmas gifts.

on account of the terrible war in the European countries, whence our most exquisite gewgaws are imported.

Another hint. Colonial articles, either real or imitation, are always in demand, and doubtless this dearth of imported novelties will have stimulated home manufactures and the home for colonial novelties in a manner which has never yet been known in this country.

A desk lamp in brass, with inkwell, trays, blotter corners and small clock would also be charming gifts for the woman who burns the midnight oil.

WE WISH YOU ALL A MERRY CHRISTMAS

Sensible Gifts for Every Man and Boy

Something that really adds to their personal comfort—that's what brings a heartfelt "Thank You" from a real man or boy. Along gifts of this nature
WE SUGGEST TWO THINGS

A Big, Warm Sweater Fur-lined or Cloth-lined Coat

Think how the boy would appreciate the gift—a nice warm Sweater when he starts out for school on some cold, windy morning—how thankful the husband or brother would be for the Fur-lined or Cloth-lined Coat when he starts out for a long drive. These are the kind of gifts that will be appreciated. Thoughtful gift givers are to be given a chance to make presents of this character at almost cost prices. We find ourselves overstocked on Sweaters, Fur-lined and Cloth-lined Coats and will sell at COST PRICE to close them out. Note these prices:

These are "Closing Out Prices" for the Holiday Trade

Boys' and Men's Sweaters $1.00, $2.00, $3.50, $5.00

HOW TO DRAW A CHICKEN

Timely Advice to Housewives From Poultry-Dressing Specialists.

May Be of Great Help When Preparing Fowl for That Big Christmas Dinner.

Following are the directions given by the poultry-dressing specialists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture for drawing a chicken at home:

1. Hold the chicken by the legs and run it quickly over the flame from a loosely-twisted lighted newspaper, which, for safety, may be laid in a coal bucket or ash tray. This will remove the fine hairs. Remove any pin feathers with the aid of a small knife blade. The charred hair may be washed off later.

2. Cut the legs off well below the knee joint. If the legs are cut above the knee joint the flesh on the drumstick will be pulled back from the end.

3. Cut the head off, leaving as much of the neck as possible; then push the skin of the neck back and cut the neck off quite close to the body. The envelops of the remaining skin gives the dressed bird a neater appearance. The neck bones with the adhering meat make a valuable addition to the giblets. The gullet and windpipe are, of course, on the neck and must be pulled away.

4. To remove the entrails make an incision about 2½ inches in length across the abdomen and as close to the vent as possible. In making this incision be careful not to penetrate the intestine. Slip the fingers in first and gradually insert the whole hand through the slit into the body cavity. Work the viscera loose from its attachments by sliding the fingers over the inner surface of the body walls. In this way, after a little practice, the viscera can be removed quickly and easily. The lungs will almost invariably tear, leaving shreds sticking to the back. These and the kidneys of the chicken, which are two long, dark red bodies lying each side of the backbone and firmly fastened, should be removed in pieces. The rest of the viscera, including the crop, which lies far front and just under the skin of the breast, when loosened will come out in a mass through the incision. The intestine is still attached to the bird at the vent. To separate it clearly the tube should be picked up just as close to the vent as possible and its contents pushed well back from the vent. Then cut closely around the vent, holding the intestine tightly between the fingers to insure cleanliness. Run a stream of water through the slit into the body in such way that it flows out through the vent and cleans the short piece of intestine still remaining. Then cut both vent and intestine away, leaving a neat round hole no larger than is necessary.

To prepare the giblets detach the heart, gizzard and liver, taking great care not to break the little green gall bladder attached to the liver, which contains a very bitter liquid which, if allowed to escape, will give a bitter flavor to the giblets and gravy. This gall bladder is so close to the liver that some liver tissue must be cut away to be on the safe side. The color of a healthy chicken liver may vary from yellow to dark red. To prepare the gizzard hold it with the thin edge toward the palm of the hand and make an incision the whole length along the thick side, being careful merely to cut through the muscle, but not into the inner sack. Then open the gizzard as you would a pocketbook and remove the inner sac, which is full of gravel, if possible without breaking it.

Finally, wash the chicken and giblets in clean, cold water, but do not let the chicken soak in the water, because the finest flavors of the meat and much nutritive material are dissolved in the water.

Once the chicken is dressed and washed put it at once in the coldest place available and keep it there until it is to be put on the fire. The best way is to dress it just in time to go into the stove.

PHYSICAL TRAINING

State Superintendent Has Published Course to be followed in City Schools.

A course in physical training for city schools, prepared by the executive committee of the physical training section of the state teachers association, has been published by Fred L. Koeler, state superintendent, and distributed to the city schools of the state. It will be valuable to cities where no supervisor of physical training is employed. It will also enable cities required by law to include this subject to have practically uniform courses. The law is very explicit concerning cities having a population of over 10,000. Act 40 of the Public Acts of 1911 states:

Physical training shall be included in the branches to be regularly taught in public schools in city school districts having a population of more than 10,000 and in the state normal schools, subject to such rules and regulations as the superintendent of public instruction may prescribe, and it shall be the duty of the boards of education in such city school districts and of the state board of education to make provisions in the schools and institutions under their jurisdiction for the introduction of a systematic and educational course of physical training; to engage competent instructors; to provide the necessary equipment; to establish and conduct same; and to adopt such methods as shall adapt the same to the capacity of the pupils in the various grades therein; and other boards may make such provisions. The curriculum in all normal schools of this state shall contain a regular teacher's course on physical education under competent jurisdiction.

The bulletin includes work for grades and high school, work with materials and without, work to be carried on both in the building and out-of-doors. This phase of school work should be of special interest to parents. The educational value is evident. The need for training in habits of good positions of sitting and standing, and the hygienic value of correct breathing and other drills given in the course, cannot be questioned. A glimpse into almost any schoolroom in the state is proof of this.

WASHINGTON IRVING THE "FATHER" OF AMERICA'S CHRISTMAS.

Although the nature of our celebrations may vary, Christmas itself will always be for Americans the great holiday of the year. Our love for it is deeply implanted. It is the season for the expression of our best selves and love for our fellow men, our happiness and contentment with our lot. It is our American temperament to run to extremes, and our celebration of Christmas is no exception to the rule, but these excesses, such as our too lavish making of gifts, will be reformed naturally without in any sense taking the best of our Christmas from us.

How many of us realize that it was Washington Irving who gave us our Christmas as we celebrate it today? Dickens did a great deal, but Irving came first. Christmas is, of course, a Dutch holiday, with its trees and lights and toys, and who has taught us so well how to love and understand them as has Irving? Lately the celebration has assumed a more characteristic American character. We celebrate the day after our own fashion, but we should never forget that much of the charm of this season is an unconscious inheritance from Irving.—Professor Brander Matthews.

Daily Christmas Hint

For the Girl or Woman Who Sews

A nice gift, one that will be greatly appreciated by the girl or woman who has been vexed by losing her sewing things, is the little bag illustrated here—scissors, thread, needles, pins, darning cotton, thimble, measuring tape and all the other things you can think of are contained therein

Red Cross Christmas Seals.

WHAT ARE THEY? Messengers of good health.

HOW MUCH ARE THEY? One cent each.

WHAT IS THE MONEY USED FOR? To stamp out tuberculosis in Michigan.

HOW ARE THEY USED? On the backs of letters, packages and wherever they will stick.

WHO USE THEM? Everyone during December.

WHERE ARE THEY SOLD? Everywhere—or should be.

APPLES TOO LARGE

Another Problem for Western Michigan Growers to Solve.

The apple growers of Western Michigan are face to face with a new problem. It is that of keeping their apples from getting too big. It has been supposed for years that the larger the apple the better, but with the Western Michigan fertile soil, with the wonderful climate and the nursing which the fruit trees are now getting, they are producing apples that are too large for dessert purposes and the fruit growers are facing the task of finding a way of limiting the size of the apples or else of introducing varieties which grow apples of the right size. They dislike the thought of having to set new orchards and wait until the same come into bearing. They are thinking about grafting a portion of their trees to varieties that are in constant demand in the consuming markets.

A big apple is not desirable for table purposes, as only now and then a person wishes such a quantity at one time as is represented by the larger apples that are now common in the Western Michigan territory. However, the growers will solve this problem as they have many former ones.

VOL. 32. NUMBER 51

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1914

PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

RECOMMENDS STAR ROUTE SYSTEM

Postmaster General Burleson Deals a Body Blow to R. F. D. Carriers.

Claimed That Carriers Receive Less Pay for Work Done Than Any Other Branch of Service.

Postmaster General Albert S. Burleson recently submitted his annual report to President Wilson and in that report are several items that may be of special interest to readers of the Courier.

It records enormous growth in the department's business because of the parcel post and postal savings bank divisions and recommends a program of postal legislation to increase the scope of the department's activities.

Mr. Burleson features his report with an estimate that a surplus of $3,669,645—the second of his administration—will be shown for the fiscal year of 1914 when all claims and charges have been met. On that showing he bases his declaration that the department "has been securely placed on a self-sustaining basis."

Among the legislation advocated by Mr. Burleson is to be found the substitution of the contract "star route" system for the salaried rural carrier service to eliminate the $40,000,000 annual loss on rural delivery. This substitution is meeting with earnest opposition from the R. F. D. News, the official rural delivery service publication issued weekly from Washington.

The News contends that the R. F. D. carriers are by no means overpaid and gives a typical example as follows:

"A striking case of long hours on a 22-mile rural route recently came under the personal observation of the News. That route is a paradox on all the time and weight theories the department could formulate in a century. It is located in the tidewater section along the Chesapeake Bay, where the rural population raise a little truck in the spring and catch fish and oysters in the summer and autumn. It is a fairly prosperous tidewater locality, but does not compare with the rich agricultural sections farther inland. As a consequence it has been neglected so far as rural service is concerned both by its representative in congress and the department. There are about five or six routes in the county, the first having been established about four years ago. Richer localities of about the same population about one hundred miles inland boast of perhaps ten or a dozen routes. Tidewater sections in the east don't amount too much in the opinion of federal officials."

"But to the route in question: The carrier was formerly an oyster tonger and fisherman. He took the examination four or five months ago because, as he said, he was 'looking for something easy.' He was duly appointed and began work."

"The route describes more or less a big semicircle. The roads are never less than ankle-deep in sand and sometimes worse—in places there are everlasting puddles of murky mud from stagnant salt water. The first trip—with a horse and small mail wagon—required ten hours. Experience is a fine teacher, and this time was reduced fifteen minutes, then thirty minutes and finally to a full hour. There were 270 odd boxes to serve and the average count has been about 6700 pieces a month. The best time the carrier has made was a little over 24 hours and the worst an even dozen of them. The first horse is on the toboggan and the services of a second had to be secured; the third is a near prospective. The carrier is paid on a 22-mile basis."

"I was looking for something easy," he said recently. "I am still looking for it, and that's why I am thinking of letting the other gent have this work at the end of my six months probation; that is if he will shoulder the debts I have accumulated getting this equipment. Oyster tonging and 'northern' are hard enough, but they are not soul-killing. Now you've got it. Rural mail carrying may be a cinch for some people, but it isn't for me at the money they are paying."

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage licenses issued by County Clerk Lewis during the past two weeks: Raymond Pearl, age 20, and Althea Ackert, age 21, both of Charlevoix; Jas. A. Hoffer, age 22, of Boyne City, and Laura LaValley, age 21, of Antrim county; Floyd Sparks, age 20, of Hoyne City, and Ruth E. Nowland, age 18, of Pellston.

WAKE UP, IT'S CHRISTMAS MORNING!

VETERAN OF CIVIL WAR

Henry Burr Took Part in Over Fifty Engagements While a Soldier.

Stricken by Death Saturday at the Home of His Daughter, Mrs. A. L. Coulter.

The death of Henry Burr, a veteran of the Civil War, occurred Saturday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. L. Coulter. Some weeks ago he had a stroke of paralysis, from which he was on the rapid road to recovery when taken by heart failure, which was the direct cause of his death.

Henry Burr was born at Plymouth, Michigan, August 31, 1837, and was 77 years of age at the time of his death. In 1861 he enlisted in the army and served in the cavalry during the entire war. During this time he took part in fifty engagements and was wounded four times, but each time recovered and was able to re-join his company and serve during the entire period.

On February 19, 1866, he was united in marriage to Miss Alice D. Jones. To this union was born two daughters—Mrs. A. L. Coulter, at whose home his death took place, and Mrs. E. E. Hapner, who also resides in this city. He is also survived by his aged wife and two brothers—E. J. Burr of Plymouth, Michigan, and Eugene Burr of Bay City.

Mr. and Mrs. Burr moved to Charlevoix last June from Ypsilanti and made their home with their daughter until the completion of their home which is now under construction.

Funeral services were held from the Coulter home Tuesday forenoon at ten o'clock. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

WILL BE A TREAT

Concert to be Given at M. E. Church Next Tuesday Evening.

The Albion College Combination Concert Company will give a concert in the M. E. church Tuesday, December 29th. Preston Reed won many friends who will be glad to hear him again. Miss Lou Byram is one of the best violinists in the United States. Prof. Hyding is head of the piano department of the college and is an artist in his line. This trio is one of the best on the road.

A Correction.

In the notice of the wedding of Miss Althea Ackert published in the Courier last week we were misinformed as to the name of the groom, which should have been Raymond Pearl instead of Guy. The reporter was misinformed by the person who gave the information.

PLACED ON HONOR ROLL

Eighteen Members of Michigan Life-Saving Service Given Recognition for Bravery.

Many tales of heroism on the Great Lakes are related in the report of the commissioner of lighthouses just made public. In no less than a dozen cases life and property were saved through the heroism of employees of the service. The roll of honor of the eleventh and twelfth districts, which include all the Michigan stations, contains the names of eighteen men. Among these eighteen were:

R. W. Johnson, keeper; Nels Nelson and Martin Larsen of the North Manitou light station rendered assistance to two men, carrying mail who had been caught in the ice and would have perished. The tender Shumach, of which Charles H. Hubbard is master, Harry Maynard first officer and George K. Brown second officer, performed valuable service in going to the aid of the dredge Marion and the tug Erie. The dredge sunk in a dreadful gale and the officers and crew of the tender rescued nine men. Many other instances where great bravery was shown were also mentioned in the report.

DEATH OF JOHN M. HALL

Founder of Bay View Assembly Dies at Home in Detroit.

Passes Away Quite Suddenly Last Sunday—Death a Shock to Thousands of Friends.

John M. Hall, founder of the Bay View assembly and the real maker of Bay View, widely known all over the United States and in foreign lands, died Sunday in Detroit from typhoid fever. He had been ill for about two weeks, but his death was not expected. He was about sixty-five years of age.

Mr. Hall was a graduate from Albion College with the class of 1874. He took up his work as president of the Bay View assembly about thirty years ago, being the founder of the institution which is now known all over the country.

Everyone in this region knows of his Bay View work. He made Bay View and Bay View made him. None but those who worked with him and came in close contact with him knew of his capacity for work. He was a member of the board of trustees of the Bay View Camping Ground Association, chairman of the committee on education, founder and publisher of the now widely known Bay View Magazine. It was Mr. Hall who made the handsome cottages at Bay View possible, who was responsible for the beautiful swimming pool and bowling alleys, who became through his work there known as the most persistent advertiser in the country, and who gave to Bay View the handsome auditorium just completed. The last beautiful gift (it cost him more than $40,000) will stand now as a memorial to John M. Hall, the philanthropist.

The funeral of this man, loved so much by thousands of persons with whom he came in contact at Bay View, was held from his Detroit home Wednesday forenoon.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

Splendid Program Given at the Methodist Church Sunday Evening.

One of the largest audiences in the history of the church gathered at the Methodist church last Sunday night to hear the Christmas cantata given by the choir. Every seat in the building was filled, and in the rendering of the program it was shown that considerable hard work had been done by the leaders. At the conclusion of the exercises handsome floral gifts were presented to Mrs. S. A. Bush, first soprano, and Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, leader, by the members of the choir.

WILL AID IN RELIEF WORK

Belgium-Holland Refugees to Receive Aid from Charlevoix.

Committee of Twenty-One to Take Charge of Work—Headquarters at See's Furniture Store.

The Committee of Twenty-One held a special meeting at the council rooms at four o'clock Tuesday afternoon for the purpose of taking action regarding local contributions toward the relief of the Belgium-Holland refugees.

Some ten days ago George W. Welsh, a member of the Grand Rapids Belgium-Holland Relief Committee, was in the city in the interests of the project and urged the citizens of Charlevoix to cooperate with them in the work.

A committee of four—Charles E. See, A. F. Bridge, Dr. A. M. Wilkinson and O. L. Nordrum—was named to take charge of the work in Charlevoix. Citizens wishing to contribute are urged to leave all they wish to give at the vacant store in the See building, which has been designated as Belgium-Holland relief headquarters in this city. This committee will supervise and direct the collection of money, clothing and food supplies, and under its direction the supplies will be assembled for shipment, loaded in cars and promptly forwarded to destination. Railroads and interurban lines throughout the state have generously donated their freight services and will make no charge on shipments over their lines.

All supplies collected here will be shipped to Grand Rapids, where the committee of that city will take charge of them and forward them, with contributions from other cities, to their destination.

Contributions of money will be spent in Michigan for foodstuffs. All kinds of clothing, secondhand and new, for children of all ages and men and women and food supplies of non-perishable nature will be accepted.

The committee appeals to you to contribute according to your means to relieve the appalling destitution and misery of the Belgium-Holland refugees. It is scarcely possible to exaggerate the calamity which has fallen upon these peaceful non-combatants. Contributions will be received at any time from now on. It is also the intention of the committee to aid the poor and needy in the city and vicinity from the contributions thus received.

Baths.

Dry Hot Air Baths, Electric Light Baths, Electric Water Baths, Tub and Spray Baths, Mechanical Vibration, Leucodermic Light Treatment, Shock Glows, Massage.—Mrs. Ada M. Shockey, 105 State street. 4914

SALARIES REDUCED

Axe Falls Upon the Heads of Postmasters Throughout the Country.

Nearly all the postoffices in the larger cities of Michigan received for a Christmas present to their postmasters a cut in their salaries. The postmasters' salaries are based upon the gross business of their offices, and this period of great Democratic prosperity is reflected in the fall-off of postoffice receipts.

The effect of the slash will be felt more keenly by postmasters formerly drawing from $2000 to $3100. The majority of those formerly drawing between $2100 and $2500 have been reduced to $2000; between $2600 and $3000, to $2500. Postmaster Finucan of this city and Lewis, of Boyne City are both to be reduced from $2300 to $2000, a cut of $300.

FOTCHMAN BLOCK BURNS

Huge Brick Structure on Howard Street Practically a Total Loss.

Fire late Monday evening practically destroyed the Henry Fotchman building on Howard street in Petoskey, causing a loss of from $35,000 to $40,000. It started in the basement and from appearance had smoldered a long time before breaking out.

Other buildings in the immediate vicinity which were damaged were the Schilling building, Petewich building, Smith & Lake's grocery and the Corawall Reef Company, whose losses will run from $1,000 up.

The Fotchman block carried but little insurance, while other losers were nearly all well insured.

ISSUE FINE XMAS NUMBERS

County Papers Throughout State Issue Beautiful Christmas Editions.

Gratiot County Herald Sets Record With Thirty-two Pages—Other Fine Numbers.

Among the many beautiful Christmas numbers issued by various newspapers throughout the state which have been received at this office, during the past week, several deserve special mention, especially that of the Gratiot County Herald, which issued 32 pages for its edition of 5,800 papers. This edition contains 62 columns of reading matter and 102 columns of advertising. It required a roll of paper 70 inches wide and 16 miles long, valued at $75, for the one issue. The Herald is printed at Ithaca, Gratiot county, a town of less than 2000 inhabitants, but the advertising comes from practically every town in the county. It is the largest edition ever printed by a weekly paper in the state. Messrs. McCall & McCall are the publishers and are to be congratulated on the wonderful showing they have made.

Another deserving considerable praise is the 16-page Christmas edition of the Otsego County Advance, printed at Gaylord. The edition is brim full of advertising and splendidly selected reading matter, and shows that the merchants of that thriving little town are firm believers that money spent in printers' ink is well worth while and the only method by which to attract the attention of customers and dispose of goods.

The Mt. Pleasant Times also issues a 16-page Christmas number, which is a credit to its publishers.

The 68-page edition of the Soo Evening News is a hammer. Practically every branch of business in that bustling city is represented in its advertising columns.

SYNOPSIS

Owing to hard times and the failure of Ebenezer Rule's factory the people of Old Trail Town contemplate buying no presents and having no Christmas.

A town meeting is held, and the decision is reached to have no Christmas, not even for the children.

A notice to this effect is signed by nearly every one. Mary Chavah receives a letter from her sister Lily.

This boy asks her to take his six-year-old brother, son of Adam Blood, a lover who killed Mary for her sister Lily.

Mary prepares to welcome him. Despite their resolutions many people find it difficult to cut out Christmas altogether.

Ebenezer Rule, grieving for his dead son, Malcolm, and his dead wife, finds the boy's hobbyhorse in an unused attic.

Boys and girls are unhappy because there will be no Christmas. Women regret that Mary's boy will find none awaiting him.

CHAPTER VIII.

"About" Mary Chavah.

"If we took the day before Christmas as 'about' for Christmas," observed Tab Winslow, "would that hurt?"

"Not your oatmeal," said Mrs. Winslow in the immemorial manner of adults.

"Would it, would it, would it?" persisted Tab in the immemorial manner of youth.

"And have Theophilus Thistlewood for dinner that day instead?" Mrs. Winslow suggested with diplomacy. On which Tab ate his oatmeal in silence.

But, like adults immemorially, Mrs. Winslow bore far more the adult manner than the child. After breakfast she stood staring out the pantry window at the sparrows on the bird box.

"It looks like Mary Chavah was going to be the only one in Trail Town to have any Christmas after all," she thought, "that little boy coming to her."

He was coming week after next, Mary had said, said Mrs. Winslow had heard no word about it from anybody else. When "the biggest of the work" of the forenoon was finished Mrs. Winslow ran down the road to Ellen Bourne's. In Old Trail Town they always speak of it as running down, or in, or over, in the morning with an unconscious sulking of terms to formalities.

Ellen was cleaning her silver. She had "six of each"—six knives, six forks, six spoons, all plated and seldom used, pewter with black handles serving for every day. The silver was cleaned often, though it was never on the table, save for company, and there never had been any company since Ellen had lost her little boy from fever. Having no articulateness and having no other outlet for emotion she fed her grief by small attentions—no guests, no diversions, no snatches of song about her work. Yet she was sane enough and normal, only in death of sane and normal outlets for emotion, for energy, for personality she had taken these strange directions for yet unbarrenness forced.

"Mercy," observed Mrs. Winslow, warning her hands at the cooking stove, "you got more energy?"

"—than family, I guess you mean," Ellen Bourne finished. Ellen was little and fair, with slightly drooping head, and eyebrows curved to a childlike reflectiveness.

"Well, I got considerable more family than I got energy," said Mrs. Winslow, "so I guess we even it up. Seven under fifteen eats up energy like so much air."

"Hey, king and country!" said Ellen's old father, whistling by the fire, "you got family enough, Ellen. You got your hands full of us." He rubbed his hands through his thin upstanding silver hair on his little pluk head, and his due, pluk face took on the look of father which rarely intruded, now, on his settled look of old man.

"I dunno what she'd do," said Ellen's mother, "with any more around here to pick up after. We're cluttered up enough as it is." She was an old lady of whose midlife you took notice before your attention lay further upon her—nugled waist, chin, lips, forehead put on her a succession of zigzags. But her eyes were awake, and it was to be seen that she did not mean what she said and that she was looking anxiously at Ellen in the hope of having delivered her daughter. Ellen smiled at her brightly, and was not deceived.

"I keep pretty busy," she said.

Mrs. Abby Winslow, who was not deceived either, hastened to the subject of Mary.

"I don't think Mary Chavah had enough to do, too," she said, "but she's going to make Lily's little boy. That's about it."

"No, Ellen said, and stopped shuffling silver polish.

"This coming in two weeks," Mrs.

Winslow impurred. "She told me so herself. She's got his room fixed up with ovals on the wall paper. She's bought him a wash basin with a rim of puppies and a red stocking cap. I saw her."

"How old is he?" Ellen asked and worked again.

"I never thought to ask her," Mrs. Winslow confessed. "He must be quite a little fellow. But he's coming alone from some place out west."

"Hey, king and country!" Ellen's father said; "I'd hate to have a boy come here with my head the way it is."

"And keeping the house all upset," Ellen's mother said, and asked Mrs. Winslow some question about Mary; and when she turned to Ellen again, "Why, Ellen Bourne," she said, "you're shaved up every bit of that cleaning polish, and we're most done cleaning."

Ellen was looking at Mrs. Winslow. "If you see her," Ellen said, "you ask her if I can't do anything to help."

Later in the day, happening to at Mrs. Mortimer Bates, Mrs. Winslow found Mrs. Moran there before her and asked what they had heard "about Mary Chavah." Something in that word "about" pricks curiously its sharp.

"Have you heard about Mary Chavah?" "It's too bad about Mary Chavah," "Isn't it queer about Mary Chavah?" Each of these is like setting flame to an edge of tissue. Omit "about" from the language, and you shave most gossip. At Mrs. Winslow's phrase both women's eyebrows curved to another arc.

Mrs. Winslow told them. "Ain't that nice?" said Mrs. Moran whole heartedly. "I couldn't bring up another, not with my back. But I'm glad Mary's going to know what it is."

Mrs. Mortimer Bates was glad, too, but being by nature a nonconformist, she took exception.

"It's an awful undertaking for a single handed woman," she observed. But this sort of thing she said almost unconsciously, and the other two women regarded it with no more alarm than any other reflex.

"It's no worse starting single handed than being left single handed," offered Mrs. Winslow somewhat ambiguously. "Lots does that's thrifty."

"See us as if we could do a little something to help her get ready, soon's we can," Mrs. Moran suggested; "I dunno what."

"I thought I'd slip over after supper and ask her," Mrs. Winslow said; "maybe I'd best go now—saw come back and tell you what she says."

Mrs. Winslow found Mary Chavah sitting by her pattern bookcase cutting out a pattern. Mary's face was flushed and her eyes were bright, and she went on with her pattern, thrilled by it as by any other creating.

"I just thought of this," Mary explained, looking vaguely at her visitor. "It come to me like a flash when I was working on Mrs. Bates' basque. Will you wait just a minute, and then I'll explain it out to you."

Without invitation, Mrs. Winslow laid aside her coat and waited, watching Mary curiously. She was cutting and folding and planning her issue paper, oblivious of any presence. Alarm, suspense, doubt, relation, triumph, came and went, and neither woman was conscious that the flame of emotion burned and breathed in the room as truly as if the product were to be acknowledged.

"There!" Mary cried at last. "See it—can't you see it—in gray wool?"

It was the pattern for a boy's topcoat, cunningly cut in new lines of seam and reverse, with a pocket, a bit of braid, a line of buttons laid in as delicately as the factors in any other good composition. Mrs. Winslow inevitably recognized its utility, exclaimed and wondered.

"Mary Chavah, how did you know how to do things for children?" "How did you know how?" Mary inquired coolly.

"Why, I've had 'em," Mrs. Winslow offered simply.

"Do you honestly think that makes any difference?" Mary asked.

Mrs. Winslow gasped in the immemorial belief that the physical basis of motherhood is the guarantee of both spiritual and physical equipment.

"Could you have cut out that coat?" Mary asked.

Mrs. Winslow shook her head. She was of those whose genius lay for cutting over.

"Well," said Mary. "I could. It ain't having 'em that teaches you how to do for 'em. You either know how or you don't know how. That's all."

Mrs. Winslow reflected that she could never make Mary understand, though any mother, she thought complacently, would know in a minute. The cutting of the coat did give her pause, but then she smoothed it up, coat included. "Mary was queer," and let it go at that.

thing, you're got to allow. Maybe I could tell you something now and then. Or if we could do anything to help you get ready for him."

"Oh," said Mary in swift penitence. "Thank you, Mrs. Winslow. After he comes maybe. But these things now I don't mind doing. The real nuisance, it come afterward, I s'pose."

Mrs. Winslow smiled in soft triumph. "Nonsense!" she said. "That's what I meant comes to you by having 'em. You don't think so much of the nuisance part as you did before."

"Then you don't look the thing in the face," said Mary calmly. "That's all about that."

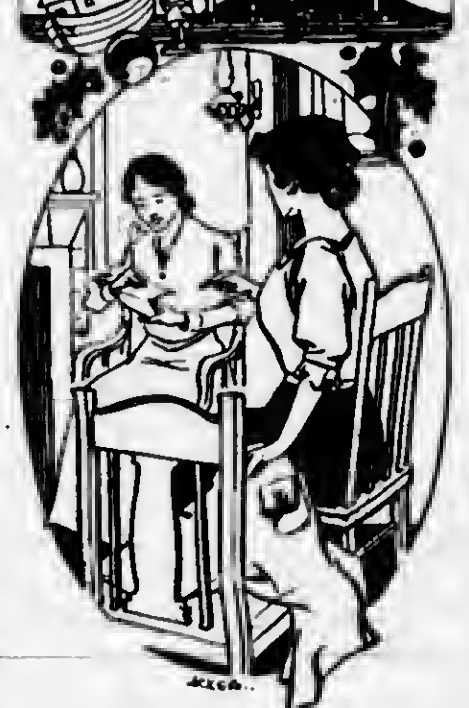

"Well," Mrs. Winslow said pacifically, "when's he coming?"

"A week from Tuesday; a week from tomorrow," Mary told her.

Mrs. Winslow looked at her intently with the light of calculation in her narrowed eyes.

"A week from Tuesday," she said. "A week from Tuesday," she repeated. "A week from Tuesday!" she exclaimed. "Why, Mary Chavah, that's Christmas eve."

It was some matter of recipes that was absorbing Mrs. Bates and Mrs. Moran when Mrs. Winslow breathlessly returned to them. They were deep in tradition and in method, its buttonhole relation. During the weary period when nutrition has been one of the two great problems the tremendous impulse that has nourished the world was alive in the faces of the two women, a kind of creative fire, such as had burned in Mary at the cutting of her pattern. Asparagus asparagus with toast crumbs and butter was for the moment symbol of all humanity's will to keep alive.

"Ladies," said Mrs. Winslow, with no other preface, "what do you think? Mary Chavah's little boy is coming from Idaho with a tag on, and when do you suppose he's going to get here? Christmas eve?"

"Christmas eve," repeated Mrs. Bates, whose mind never lightly forgot old ways or embraced a contretemps, "what a funny time to travel."

"Likely catch the croup and be down sick on Mary's hands the first thing," said Mrs. Moran. "It's a pity it ain't the spring of the year."

Mrs. Winslow looked at them searchingly to see if her thought too far out-distanced theirs.

"What struck me all of a heap," she said, "is his getting here then. That night, Christmas eve."

The three women looked at one another.

"That's so," Mrs. Moran said.

"Him—that child," Mrs. Winslow put it, "getting here Christmas eve, need to Christmas all his life, ten to one knowing in his head what he hopes he'll get. And no Christmas. And him with no mother. And her only a month or so dead."

"Well," said Mrs. Mortimer Bates, "it's too bad it's happened so. But it has happened so. You have to say that to your life quite often, I notice. I don't know anything to do but to say it now."

Mrs. Winslow had not taken off her cloak. She sat on the edge of her chair, with her hands deep in its pockets, her black kilt "fascinator" fallen back from her hair. She was looking down at her cloth overshoes, and she went on speaking as if she had hardly heard what Mrs. Bates had interposed.

"He'll get in on the express," she said; "Mary said so. She don't have to go to the city to meet him. The man he travels with is going to put him on the train in the city. The little fellow'll get here after dark. After dark on Christmas eve."

"And no time for anybody to warn him that there won't be any Christmas waiting for him," Mrs. Moran observed thoughtfully.

"And like enough he'll bring a little something for Mary for a present," Mrs. Winslow went on. "How'll she feel then?"

"Ain't it too bad it ain't last year?" Mrs. Moran mourned. "Everything comes too late or too soon or not at all or else too much so, 'seems though."

Mrs. Bates' impulse to nonconformity had not prevented her forehead from being drawn in their common sympathy; but it was a sympathy that saw no practical way out and existed tamely as a high window and not as a wide door.

"Well," she said, "Mary ain't exactly the one to see it so. You'll never get her to feel bad about anybody not having a Christmas. I dunno, if it was any other year, as she'd be planning any different."

"No," said Mrs. Winslow thoughtfully. "Mary won't do anything. But we could."

alarm of the sympathetic hearer who is challenged to be doer.

"Do?" she repeated. "You can't go back on the paper at this late day. And you can't give him a Christmas and every other of our children not have any just because we're their parents and still living. There ain't a thing to do."

Mrs. Winslow's eyes were still on her overshoes. "I don't believe there's never 'not a thing' to do," she said. "I don't believe it."

Mrs. Bates looked scandalized. "That's nonsense," she said sharply. "And it's sacrilegious besides. When God means a thing to happen there's not a thing to do. What about earthquakes and—cancers?"

"I don't believe he ever means earthquakes and cancers," said Mrs. Winslow to her overshoes.

"Present 'em, then," challenged Mrs. Bates triumphantly.

CHAPTER IX.

Burying Santa Claus.

MRS. WINSLOW looked up. Her eyes were shining as they had shone sometimes when one of her seven under fifteen had given its first sign of consciousness of more than self.

"I believe we'll do it some day," she said. "I believe there's more to us than we've got any idea of. I believe there's so much to us that one of us that found out about it and told the rest would get bounded out of town. But even now, I bet there's enough to us to do something every time—something every time, no matter what."

"And I believe there's something we can do about this little orphaned boy's Christmas, if we nip our brains on to it in the right place."

"Oh, dear," said Mrs. Moran, "sometimes when I think about Christmas I almost wish we almost hadn't done the way we're going to do."

Mrs. Bates stiffened.

"Jane Moran," she said, "do you think it's right to go head over heels in debt to celebrate the birth of our Lord?"

"No," said Mrs. Moran. "I don't."

"And you know nobody in Old Trail Town could afford any extravagance this year?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Moran. "I do still." "And if part could and part couldn't, that makes it all the worse, don't it?"

EUGENE FAIRCHILD

"I know," said Mrs. Moran—"I know."

"Well, then," said Mrs. Bates triumphantly, "we've done the only way there is to do. Land knows, I wish there was another way. But there ain't."

Mrs. Winslow looked up from her overshoes.

"I don't believe there's never 'no other way,' she said. 'There's always another way.'"

"Not without money," said Mrs. Bates.

"Money," Mrs. Winslow said—"money. That's like setting up one day of peace on earth, good will to men, and asking admission to it."

"Mrs. Winslow," said Mrs. Moran sadly, "what's the use of saying anything? You know as well as I do that Christmas is a shoddy all up and down the land and made a day of expense and extravagance and folks overexpending themselves. And we're stopped at that in Old Trail Town. And now you're trying to make us feel bad."

"I ain't," said Mrs. Winslow. "We felt bad about it already, and you

PEACE on earth, good will to men. That is the Christmas spirit and it can be celebrated in the United States as nowhere else in the world during the coming holidays. A spirit of thankfulness will run through all Christmas giving and receiving and all the festivities that make up the joyous week, and besides this spirit will lie the great hope that the United States, which has shown its supreme Christian nature by so far keeping out of the European war, will be able to continue in the paths of peace. When you buy presents, when you receive them, remember the great peace they stand for and be one of the many who are uniting now and will continue to unite to advance the cause of world peace.

Lighthouse Keeper at Isle Aux Galets Arrested for Illegal Fishing.

The first known instance of a Northern Michigan lighthouse keeper being arrested for illegal fishing occurred Friday, when Louis Belounga, keeper of the light at Isle Aux Galets, better known as "Skilling's" light, was arrested by Corbet Doherty, under sheriff, on the complaint of Charles N. Smith, deputy state fish and game warden, the charge being that Belounga indulged in commercial fishing without first having his gasoline boat registered as required by law and without having a government fish license.

Belounga was brought to Petoskey and Saturday morning pleaded guilty to the charge when brought before Justice Kreiger and paid a fine and costs amounting to $41.00. When Mr. Smith went to the lighthouse some time ago to make a search Belounga is alleged to have driven him off and threatened him with a gun. He refused to allow Mr. Smith to search the premises, giving as his reason that the lighthouse and grounds were government property. Mr. Smith has been at work on the case for over a year, having learned last winter that Belounga was selling fish in quite large quantities. Shortly after Mr. Smith's visit to the lighthouse Belounga is alleged to have secured a license and in other ways conformed to the rules and regulations for commercial fishermen. The case has attracted wide attention among fishermen all over the lakes.—Petoskey Evening News.

Old China Well Liked by Housewives

A pitcher and platter of really old Wedgwood (which was first originated by Josiah Wedgwood some 150 years ago) show in a pale blue coloring on a white ground the famous willow pattern. After the Chinese influence of that day, in which the house of the father, the house of the lover, the dog and the late parent all figure. These dishes are the treasure of many a china chest and are sought after by lovers of the antique.

HOW TO PREPARE BEETS.

Various Ways of Cooking This Seasonable Vegetable.

Here is a new dish that combines two sometimes unattractive vegetables in a most interesting manner. Cut freshly boiled beets in two and hollow out the halves. In this cavity place a spoonful of creamed spinach and serve hot. The same combination can also be prepared as a salad. The spinach in this case should not be creamed, simply boiled and chopped and seasoned with a French dressing, and the beets holding it should be set in white lettuce leaves.

Cream of beet soup is as unusual as it is delicious. To make it chop well cooked beets fine and simmer a cupful of them in a pint of mutton stock for fifteen minutes. Then rub them through a sieve. Mix two teaspoonfuls of flour with two of butter and add to the mutton stock and beet puree. Heat thoroughly, stirring constantly, and add to a pint of hot milk. Season with salt and pepper and serve hot.

A delicious relish is made of equal parts of grated horseradish prepared with vinegar and chopped boiled beets mixed together.

Creamed beets can be prepared in this way: Slice boiled beets into a saucepan and moisten with a little clear stock. Beat the yolk of an egg with a cupful of cream and slowly add it to the beets. Stir carefully all the time until the sauce is thick and then serve immediately.

Beets in a chutney are prepared in this way: Cut boiled beets in quarter inch slices and cut half as many slices of onion as there are beets. Put a slice of onion between two slices of beet in sandwich fashion and season lightly with salt, pepper and a little vinegar. Dip each sandwich in fritter batter and fry in deep fat. Drain on brown paper and serve piping hot.

Small whole beets or slices of larger beets can be used to garnish salads and cold meat dishes. They must, however, be used somewhat sparingly. A little beet goes a long way. Small beet dice mixed neatly about a mold of veal aspic, for instance, are good.

A good beet salad is this: Boil beets and remove the tops. Allow one beet for each person to be served. Stand them on white lettuce leaves and hollow out the centers with a silver spoon. Chop the whites of hard boiled eggs and crumble the yolks. Mix the chopped whites, cold boiled or canned peas and mayonnaise together and fill the hollow beets. Garnish with the crumbled yolks.

HOW TO MAKE KETCHUP.

KETCHUPS are probably the most popular of all table sauces. They may be made with tomatoes, walnuts, mushrooms and some fruits. Good ways of making ketchups are suggested here:

Fruit Ketchup.

Grape Ketchup.—Wash and stew five pounds of grapes over a slow fire until soft. Strain through a sieve and add two and a half pounds of sugar, one tablespoonful of cinnamon, one tablespoonful of allspice, one-half tablespoonful of cloves, one tablespoonful of pepper, one-half tablespoonful of salt and one pint of vinegar. Boil until a little thick and bottle.

Cucumber Ketchup.—To one quart of peeled, seeded and grated cucumbers add two green peppers seeded and chopped, one grated onion, one gill grated horseradish, two tablespoonfuls of salt. Put over the fire and simmer an hour. Add one pint of vinegar bottle and seal.

A Combination Sauce.

Mixed Ketchup.—Take one-half peck of finely cut ripe tomatoes, one teaspoonful of vinegar, one teaspoonful of chopped nasturtium seeds, one teaspoonful of grated horseradish, two finely chopped red peppers, three large stalks of chopped celery, one teaspoonful of mustard seed, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one large tablespoonful each of black pepper, cloves, mace and cinnamon, one-half cupful of sugar, one quart of vinegar. This requires no cooking.

Made With Tomatoes.

Hot Ketchup.—Take one peck ripe tomatoes, cooked and strained; one pint vinegar, one and one-half cupfuls sugar. Put in a cloth two tablespoonfuls of cloves, one-half tablespoonful allspice, two tablespoonfuls salt, four tablespoonfuls cinnamon, one-quarter teaspoonful cayenne pepper. Cook to desired consistency.

Sweet Ketchup.—Take four pounds tomatoes. After they are peeled, put on and cook one some of the water. Add one pound of sugar, one pint of vinegar, one tablespoonful salt, one tablespoonful each of cinnamon and cloves. Put spices in a bag and boil with the ketchup and a little red pepper. Put in the vinegar just before it is done.

Anna Thompson.

PAINTED FURNITURE.

How to Amuse Yourself During Vacation.

Old fashioned cottage furniture painted in colors is being brought to light again. Black furniture painted with colored decorations is coming to the fore in the general craze for black and white. Here is a chance for the home artist who tries her skill on the backs of chairs, table tops and cabinet fronts.

This painted furniture is particularly suited to the summer cottage, and the decoration will give vacation employment to the artistic members of the family, who will add baskets of fruit and floral sprays, according to taste.

Old furniture painted gray with pink roses transferred to the drawers would be a pleasing innovation and could be used in the winter house also.

How to Make Homemade Toilet Bleach.

Do you like homemade bleaches? Grind up a little oatmeal in your meat grinder and mix to a paste with the whey from sour milk or with butter-milk and spread on the skin, leaving it for a couple of hours or more. Then sponge off with tepid water and apply a little olive oil if you do not have a good cold cream handy. This is a simple but very efficacious bleach.

England and Ships.

The demand for more ships was heard in England as far back as the sixteenth century. In 1577—eleven years before the Armada—Dr. John Dee published his proposals for the establishment of a "pretty navy royal." It was to consist of "three score tall ships or more, but in no case fewer;" "that henceforth neither France, Denmark, Scotland, Spain nor any other country can have such liberty for invasion or their mutual conspiracies or aids, any way transporting, to annoy the blessed state of our tranquillity; as either they have in times past had, or else may have, whenever they will forget the observing of their sworn or pretended duty."—London Spectator.

Wrestled For a Throne.

The throne of Japan was once wrestled for. In the ninth century two rival claimants, sons of a deceased Mikado, instead of waging war against each other, decided the succession by a wrestling match.

Bronzing Powder.

Every twenty-five square feet of average surface that is not too absorptive will require one ounce of bronze powder in liquid to coat it.

A new game called "editor's delight" is played in this way: Take a sheet of carefully written paper, fold carefully and enclose a bank note sufficiently large to pay up all arrears and one year in advance. What adds immensely to the pleasure of the game is to send along the name of a new subscriber or two, accompanied by cash. Keep an eye on the editor, and if a smile adorns his face the trick works like a charm. Now is the time to try the joke.
Every good work that is started in one particular locality is copied immediately in other places where people are desirous of getting ahead in this world. This condition is particularly true in the development work that was started several years ago in Traverse City and the Grand Traverse region. The success of the movement there started other communities into activity along boosting lines and the situation has developed into one where there will have to be some harder work done by the local boosters in order that this region may be kept in the lead it has maintained all these years. Stagnation means moving backward. Progress can only be made by being constantly active along lines which can be developed into better conditions. There is a lot of hard work mapped out for the progressive people of this region in the future and it is up to them to make good on the work that is before them.
Shortest Day in Year.
Monday, December 21, was astronomically the shortest day in the year. The day was just nine hours long; it will be some time before there will be any noticeable lengthening of the days, but nevertheless they will grow longer

A Gift for the Society Maid or Matron

The French reach all sorts of extremes in the matter of corsage bouquets, and here is a most beautiful conceit in the way of a water lily with soft yellow petals and deeper yellow center. The stems are of light green twisted chenille with dark green velvet leaves. The center of the flower is dotted with brilliant dewdrops. The long stem, drooping leaves and buds give an exquisite long line when the flower is pinned to the bodice. This would be an appropriate gift for the maid or matron who goes out much.

OWNING A HOME.

The Real Estate Man Presents His View of the Question.

The public has no better friends than the real estate agents, although individuals may sometimes think that they are a trifle persistent in their efforts to induce one to make a purchase.

In reality, however, this is where they do the greatest good, not only for the city in which they live, but for the man to whom they sell property, and this is especially true in the case of a home.

The great majority of people are too slow to realize the importance of becoming home owners, and the efforts of the real estate dealers have induced thousands to purchase who otherwise would have let splendid opportunities pass.

It is especially important that all young people become home owners at the earliest time possible, because in the strength of their youth they will have no trouble meeting the payments on a home, and in a few years they will have it paid for. On the other hand, if they fail to buy the years will pass and find them living on all they make.

Because of taxes, insurance and depreciation many people figure that it is cheaper to rent than to own a home, but since the man owning the property is willing to make that kind of investment it is pretty evident that in the long run it pays the owner.—National Real Estate Journal.

MISSED THE TRAIN.

It Was Not the Agent's Fault, Either, Only His Misfortune.

The real estate man from the city was eager to close the deal for Uncle Billy Weatherman's forty acres, which would front on a beautiful lake after the big White River dam in the Missouri Ozarks was built.

The papers lay on the table awaiting Uncle Billy's signature. The real estate man was impatient. He was in a hurry to get back to Hollister, the nearest railway station, so as to catch the only train that would get him back to Kansas City the next morning.

"Now, if you'll sign right there—on the dotted line," he said, handing a fountain pen to Uncle Billy.

Uncle Billy took out his spectacles and read the papers carefully. "I reckon I'd better not be in too big a hurry about this year," he temporized, with the shrewdness of the Ozark mountaineer. "I don't read as pear as I used to. I'll have my sons read them papers, mister."

"It would be a great favor to me, Uncle Billy," remarked the Kansas City man, looking at his watch. "If you could manage to see them in time to finish up this transaction by noon. You see, I've got to get away today. How many sons have you, anyway?"

Uncle Billy scratched his head a minute and said, "Eighteen."—Youth's Companion.

Flying Fishes.

A dazzling silvery splendor pervades the surface of the body of the best known species of the flying fish. The summit of its head, its back and its sides are of azure blue. This blue becomes spotted upon the dorsal fin, the pectoral fin and the tail. This fish is the common prey of the sea birds and the more voracious fishes, such as the shark. Its enemies abound in air and water. If it succeeds in escaping the Charibids of the water the chances are in favor of its meeting its fate in the Scylla of the atmosphere. If it escapes the jaws of the shark it will probably fall to the share of the seagull.—London Standard.

ANCIENT CHRISTMAS BELLS.

They Rang Out in Sweet Accord on the Holiday in Old England.

In the Norman period wealthy persons who wished to do the handsome thing by their town and townspeople, says Dr. J. J. Haven in "The Bells of England," often gave a bell to the church instead of endowing a chair in an institution of learning. Then, as now, donors were moved by a variety of motives, but that, of course, did not interfere in the least with the sweet tenor or bass of the bell.

There was the Angle-thane, Lyolf, who, rich in goats and sheep, was much disturbed by nocturnal thieves. Tired out with these troubles, Lyolf sold many of his animals and bought a bell, which he presented to the abbey.

When he first heard its sound, which happened to be Christmas morning, his joy broke forth into joyousness. "Eya," he said, "how sweetly my goats bleat and my sheep baa!" Lyolf's wife presented another bell and Dr. Haven notes that the "two rang out in pleasant accord"—a sequence unexpectedly sweet, apparently.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS GAME THAT RECALLS HALLOWEEN.

Germany has a Christmas and New Year's custom that grows yearly in favor and is the excuse for many merry gatherings. It is called the "Walnut shell party" and is a sort of first cousin to some of the observances that mark Halloween day.

The popular amusement is to sell the fortunes by donning walnut shells in a bowl of water. The shells either come together or drift apart or they go to the side of the bowl and decline to move about any further.

According to what they do, the fortune, good or bad, of those whose names are marked on the shells is indicated.

It is surprising and amusing the varied capabilities the shells display. Life itself is no more uncertain than they are, and a whole company can be kept in a roar of laughter all evening by watching the antics of the shells. When a pair drift together and remain that way, declining absolutely to be separated, then the future of that couple has been infallibly augured.

The Baby Must Have a Christmas Gift

There are always Christmas babies, and their needs are many and various. Illustrated here are two hints for the very wee babies' comfort, which will doubtless be more appreciated by the mother whose baby is remembered by such a gift than by baby himself. These models were cut of triest flannel, a material that will stand repeated launderings, and was quite elaborately embroidered. But there are a great many materials which would be suitable for these babies' garments. This white bedford cord is used. A thick quality of peach cord also makes pretty coats and cottees. Cashmere also is used.

know it. I'm glad we've stopped all that. But I wish't we had something to put in its place. I wish't we had."

"What in time are them children doing?" said Mrs. Moran shrilly.

The three women looked. On the side lawn, where a spreading balsam had been left untrimmed to the ground, stood little Emily Moran and Gusie and Bennet and Tab and Pep. And the four boys had their caps in their hands and Gusie, having natted her own hood, turned to take off little Emily's. The wind, sweeping sharply round the corner of the house, blew their hair wildly and caught at muffled ends

"It's Sandy Claus' funeral."

Mrs. Bates and Mrs. Moran, with one impulse, ran to the side door, and Mrs. Winslow followed.

"Emily," said Mrs. Moran, "put on your hood this minute."

"Gusie," said Mrs. Bates, "put on your cap this instant second. What you got it off for? And little Emily, doing as you do—I'm surprised at you."

"Please," said Pep, "it's a funeral. An' we thought we'd ought to take our caps off till it gets under."

"A funeral," said Mrs. Bates. "Who you burying?"

"It's just a rehearsal funeral," Pep explained, "the real one's going to be Christmas."

By now the two women were re-attaching hood and stocking cap to the little girls, and it was Mrs. Winslow, who had followed, who spoke to Pep.

"Who's dead, Pep?" she asked.

"Sandy Claus," he answered readily. "We're doing it for little Emily," he said confidentially. "She couldn't get it straight about where Sandy Claus would be this Christmas. The rest of us knew. But Emily's little—so we thought we'd play bury him on her 'count."

Mrs. Bates, who had not heard, turned to Gusie.

"Going to do what on Christmas?" she exclaimed. "You ain't to do a thing on Christmas. Or ain't you grown up, after all?"

"Well, we thought a Christmas funeral wouldn't hurt," interposed Bennet defensively. "Can't we even have a funeral for fun on Christmas?" he ended, aggrieved.

"It's Sandy Claus' funeral," observed little Emily, putting a curl from her face.

"We're going to dress up a Sandy Claus, you know," Pep added sotto voce. "It's going to be right after breakfast Christmas."

"Come on, come ahead, fellows," said Bennet. "I'm be corpse. Keep your lids on. I don't mind. Go ahead, sing."

Already Mrs. Winslow was walking back to the house; the other two women overtook her, and from the porch they heard the children begin to sing: "Go bury St. Nick!" The rest was lost in the closing of the door.

Back in the sitting room the women stood looking at one another. Mrs. Bates was frowning and all Mrs. Moran's expressions were on the verge of dissembling; but in Mrs. Winslow's face it was as though she had found some new way of consciousness.

"Ladies," Mrs. Winslow said, "them children are out there pretending to bury Santa Claus, and so are we. And I bet we can't any of us do it."

"Ladies," she said, "I don't want we should go back on our paper, either. But maybe there's more to Christmas than it knows about or than we know about. Maybe we can do something that won't interfere with the paper we've all signed, and yet just be something that is something. Maybe they're things to use that ain't never been used yet. Oh, I doano. Nor I guess you doano. Let us find out!"

Christmas week came.

Cities by thousands made prepara-tion. Great shows took on vast cargoes of silk and precious things and seemed ready to sail about distributing gifts to the towns, and thought better of it and let folk come in numbers to them to pay toll for what they took. Banks opened their doors and poured out now a little trickling stream of pay envelopes, now a torrent of green and gold flower shells and tribute from a mill lion pots of earth where miracles had been done. Pastry counters, those mock-commissionaires, delicately masking as servants to necessity, made ready their pretty pretences to nutrition. The woods came moving in—acres of living green, taken to their sleep, their roots left faithful to a trust with the sap, their tops summoned to bear a hybrid fruitage. From cathedrals rose the voices of children, now singing little carols and hymns in praise of the Christ Child, now speaking little verses in praise of the nativity. Nicholas, now claiming for little new possessions. And afar from the fields that lay empty about the clustered roofs of towns came a chorus of voices of the live things, beast and fowl, being offered up in the gorgeous pagan rites of the day.

Wilder and yonder in every city the grown townsfolk ran. The most had lists of names—Grace, Margaret, Laura, Alice, Miriam, John, Philip, father, mother—beautiful names and of rich portent, so that, remembering the time, one would have said that these were entered there with some import of special comradeship, of being face to face, of having realized in little what will some day be true in large. But on looking closer the lists were found to have quite other connotations, as Grace, bracelet; Margaret, spangled scarf; Laura, chafing dish; Philip, aukling set; father (Almo), Ask mother what she thinks he'd like. And every name, it seemed, stood for some bestowal of new property, mostly of luxuries, and chiefly of luxuries of decoration. And the minds of the buying-souls were like lakes played upon by clouds and storm birds and lightning, and, to be sure, many stars but all in unutterable confusion.

Also from the cargo laden shops there came other voices in thousands, but these were mostly answers. And when one, understanding Christmas, listened to hear what part in it these behind the counter played, he heard from them no voice of shoring in the theory of peace, or even of truth, but instead:

"Two a yard and double width. Jewelry is in the annex. Did you want three pairs of each? Vests and neck-wear three aisles over. Leather, glass wares, baskets, ribbons, down the store beyond the nylons. Toys and dolls are in the basement—toys and dolls are in the basement. Jewelry is in the annex."

So that a great part of the town seemed some strong chorus of invitation to new possessions.

But there were other voices. Whole urcas of every town lay perforce with in the days of Christmas week—it must have been so, for there is only one calendar to embrace humanity, so there is only one way of birth and breath and death, one source of tears, one functioning for laughter. But to these reaches of the town the calendar was like another thing, for though it was upon them in name, its very presence was withdrawn. In those ill-smelling stairways and lofty there was nothing other than themselves. And wherever some echo of Christmas week had crept the wisefolks or the lost was for post-session also. But here one could not demand its insistence. So here the voices said only, "I wish—I wish," and "I choose this—and this," at windows, or, "If I had back my nickel." "Don't you go expecting nothing!" And over these went the whirl of machinery, beat of treadles, throbs of engines or the silence of forced idleness or of the disease of dereliction. It was a time of many pagan observances, as when some were decked in precious stuffs and some were thrown to lions.

To all these in the towns Christmas week came, and of them all not many stood silent and looked Christmas week in the face. Yet it is a human experience that none is meant to die without abating, for the season is the symbol of what happens to folk if they claim it.

Christmas is the time of withdrawal of most material life. It is the time when nature subtracts the externals, hides from man the phenomena of even her evident processes. Left alone, his thought turns inward and outward, which is to say it lays hold upon the flowing force so slightly externalized in himself. If he finds in his own being a thousand abstractions, a thousand persons—deeds, sorcerers, scandal mongers—he will try to escape from them all back to the externals. But if he finds there a channel which the substance of being is asking he will be no stranger, but a familiar, with him self. Only when the channel has been long cleared, when there has left it all consciousness of striving, of self in any form, only when he finds himself empty, ready, immanence, will he have the divine adventure. For it is then that in him the spirit of God will have its birth, then that he will first understand his own nature, the nature of being.

CHAPTER X The Turn.

THEN the turn of the year comes; the year begins to mount. Birth is in it; growth is in it; spring is in it. Sometimes, away back in beginnings, they knew this. They knew that the time of the winter solstice is in some strange fashion the high moment of the year, as the beginning of new activity in nature and in the gods. They solemnized the return of the fiery sun wheel; they traced in those solstice days the operations on earth of Odhu and Bertha; they knew in themselves a thing they could not name, and when the supreme experience took place in Christ they made the due experience typify the other and became conscious of the divine nature of this nativity. So, by the illumination, the prophets, the adepts, the time that followed was yearly set aside—forty days of dwelling within the temple of self, forty days of reverence for being, of consciousness of new birth. Then the emergence, then the apotheosis of expression typifying and typified by spring—the time when bursting, pressing life almost breaks bounds, when birth and the impulse to birth are in every form of life, without and within. These festivals are not arbitrary in date. They grow out of the universal experience.

In it not then cause for stupefaction that this time of "divine bestowal" should have become so physical a thing? From the ancient perception, to have slipped into a sense of annual social comradeship and good will and peace was natural and due—to live in the little what will some day be true in the large. But from this to have plunged down into a time of frantic physical bestowals, of "present trading," of lists of Grace and Margaret and Philip, of teeming shops with hunting and hunted creatures within, of sacrificial trees and beasts, of a sovereign sense of good for me and mine and a shameless show of Lord and Lady Bountiful—how can that have come about? How can the great festival have been so dishonored?

Not all dishonored, for within it is its own vitality which nothing can dishonor. Through all the curious variations which it receives at our hands, something shines and sings; self giving, joy giving, a vast, dim uplicking on humanity of what this thing really is that it seeks to observe, this thing that grips me so that no matter what they are about, they will drop it at the touch of the going and turn to some expression, however crooked and thwarted, of the real spirit of the time. If in war then bayonets are stacked and boldly wreathed, and candles stuck on each point; if at sea some sailor climbs out on the bow sprit with a wreath of green. If in the western plains a turkey whistling for target will make the sport, at fifty paces; if at home, some great extravagance or some humble gift or some poignant wish will point the day. If at church, then mass and carol; in certain hearts reverence. Everywhere the time takes hold of folk and receives whatever of greatness or grotesqueness they choose to give it. So, too, the actual and vital experience which it brings to humanity in universal, is offered with cosmic regularity, cannot be escaped. Through all the tumult of the time Christmas week and the time that lies near to it is always waiting to claim its own, to take to itself those who will not be deceived, who see in the stupendous yearly pageant only the usual spectacle of humanity trying to say its divine things in terms of things physical, because the time for the universal expression is not yet come.

When that time comes, when the time of the worship of things shall be past, when the tribal sense of holiday shall have given place to the family sense, and that family shall be mankind; when shall never be seen the anomaly of celebrating in a glorification of little family tables, whose crumbs fall to those without, the birth of him who preached brotherhood, and the mockery of observing with wanton aping the birth of him who had not where to lay his head; when the rudiments of divine perception, of self perception, of social perception, shall have grown to their next estate; when the area of consciousness shall be extended yet farther toward the outermost; when that new knowledge with which the air is charged shall let man begin to know what he is; when that time comes they will look back with utmost wonder at our uncouth gropings to note and honor something whose import we so obscurely discern, but perhaps, too, with wonder that so much of human love and divining should abide for us through the mist we make.

Two days before Christmas Ellen Bourne went through the new fallen snow of their wood lot. Her feet left scuffed tracks clouded about by the brushing of her gown's wet hem and by a dragging corner of shawl. She came to a little evergreen tree, not four feet tall, with low growing boughs, and she stood looking at it with her husband, who was also following the snow trail with averted her

He said that she had a good many notions, it seemed to him. But he cut the little tree with casual ease and no compunctions, and they dragged it to their home, the soft branches patterning the snow and obscuring their foot-prints.

"It's like real Christmas weather," Ellen said. "They can't stop that com-ing anyhow."

In the kitchen Ellen's father sat before the open door of the cooking stove, letting the snow melt from his heavy boots.

"Hey," he said, "I was beginning to think you'd forgot about supper. What was in the trap?"

At once Ellen began talking rapidly. "Oh," she said, "we'll have some min-strels tonight, father; the kind you like, with—"

"Well, what was in the trap?" the old man demanded peevishly. "Why don't you answer back? What was, Mat?"

Matthew, drying his ax blade, looked at it with one eye closed.

"Rabbit," he said.

"Where is it?" her father demanded.

"It was a young one, not as big as your fat," Ellen said. "I let it out before he got there. Where's mother?"

"Just because a thing's young it ain't holy water," the old man complained. "Last time it was a squirrel you let go because it was young. It's like being a spendthrift with money," he went on. Ellen's mother appeared, gave over to Ellen the supper preparations, contented herself with auxiliary offices of china and butter getting and talked the while, pleased that she had something to disclose.

"Ben Helden stopped by," she told. "He's going to the city tomorrow. What do you apose after? A boy. He's going to take him to bring up and work on the farm."

"Where's he going to get the boy?" Ellen asked.

Her mother did not know, but Mrs. Helden was going to have a new diagonal, and she wanted the number of Ellen's pattern. Ben would stop for it that night.

Evening's kitchen was a sitting room, and when the supper had been cleared away and the red cotton spread covered the table, Ellen asked her husband to bring in the little tree. She found a cracker box, handily cut a hole with a cooking knife and set up the little tree by the window in the kitchen.

"What under the canopy?" said her mother, her voice crackling. "Oh, something to do in the evening." Ellen answered. "Father's going to pop me some corn to trim it with, aren't you, father? Mother, why don't you get you a good big harning needle and string what he pops?"

"I'll make a lot of litter," said her mother, but she brought the needle for something to do.

"Hey, king and country," said her father; "it'd ought to have somebody here to shell it for me!"

"Who you trimming up a tree for?" her mother demanded. "I thought they wasn't to be any in town this year."

"It ain't Christmas yet," Ellen said only. "I guess it won't do any hurt two days before."

While the two worked, Ellen went to the cupboard drawer, and from behind her pile of kitchen towels she drew out certain things—walnuts, wrapped in shining yeast tinseled and dangling from red yarn; wishbones tied with strips of bright cloth; a tiny box, made like a house, with mince cut doors and windows; eggshells pencilled as faces, a handful of peanut owls, a glass stoppered bottle, a long necklace of buttonhole twist spoons. A certain blue paper soldier doll that she had made was upstairs, but the other things she brought and fastened to the tree.

Her husband smoked and uneasily watched her. He saw something with in her plan, but he was not at home there. "If the boy had lived and had been upchamber asleep now," he thought once, "it'd be something like to go trimming up a tree. But this way—"

"What you leaving the whole front of the tree bare for?" her mother asked.

"The blue paper soldier goes there. I want it should see the blue paper soldier in the first thing," Ellen said and stopped abruptly.

"You talk like you was trimming the tree for somebody," her mother observed, aggrieved.

"Maybe something might look in the window—going by," Ellen said.

"Get in there! Get your heads in there, ye beggars!" said the old man to the popcorn. "I'd ought to have somebody here to pick up them shooting kernels," he complained.

In a little while, with that footed stamping, Ben Helden came in. When he had the pattern number, by laborious copying against the wall under the bracket lamp, Matthew said to him:

"Going to get a boy to work out, are you?"

Helden laughed and shifted.

"He's going to work by and by," he said. "We allow to have him to ourselves a spell first."

"Keep him around the house all spring?"

"Sure," said Helden. "You see," he added, "it's like this with us—family all gone, all married and got their own. We figured to get hold of a little nigger and have some comfort with him before he goes to work for life."

"Ellen," she said, "you have, too, got your hands full. You're wore out all the time."

"That's it," Ellen said, "and I'm wore out with the things I want to do."

"Hey, king and country!" the old man cried, upsetting the popcorn.

"Don't get a child under here, underfoot. I'm too old. I deserve grown folks. My head hurts me."

"Matthew," said Ellen to her husband, "let Helden bring us over tomorrow—for Christmas, Mat?"

Matthew looked slowly from side to side. It seemed incredible that so large a decision should lie with a mad so ineffectual.

"Seems like we'd ought to think about it awhile first," he said weakly. "Think about it," said Ellen. "When haven't I thought about it? When have I thought about anything else but him we haven't got any more?"

"Ellen," the mother mourned, "you don't know what you're taking on yourself!"

"Hush, mother," Ellen said gently. "You don't know what it is. You had me."

She faced Helden. "Will you bring two when you come back tomorrow night?" she said. "And one of them for us?"

Helden looked sideway at Matthew, who was fumbling at his pipe.

"Wouldn't you want to see it first, now?" Helden temporized. "And a girl or a boy, now?"

Her husband smoked and uneasily watched her. He saw something with in her plan, but he was not at home there. "If the boy had lived and had been upchamber asleep now," he thought once, "it'd be something like to go trimming up a tree. But this way—"

"What you leaving the whole front of the tree bare for?" her mother asked.

"The blue paper soldier goes there. I want it should see the blue paper soldier in the first thing," Ellen said and stopped abruptly.

"You talk like you was trimming the tree for somebody," her mother observed, aggrieved.

"Maybe something might look in the window—going by," Ellen said.

"Get in there! Get your heads in there, ye beggars!" said the old man to the popcorn. "I'd ought to have somebody here to pick up them shooting kernels," he complained.

In a little while, with that footed stamping, Ben Helden came in. When he had the pattern number, by laborious copying against the wall under the bracket lamp, Matthew said to him:

"Going to get a boy to work out, are you?"

Helden laughed and shifted.

"He's going to work by and by," he said. "We allow to have him to ourselves a spell first."

"Keep him around the house all spring?"

"Sure," said Helden. "You see," he added, "it's like this with us—family all gone, all married and got their own. We figured to get hold of a little nigger and have some comfort with him before he goes to work for life."

"Ellen," she said, "you have, too, got your hands full. You're wore out all the time."

"That's it," Ellen said, "and I'm wore out with the things I want to do."

"Hey, king and country!" the old man cried, upsetting the popcorn.

"Don't get a child under here, underfoot. I'm too old. I deserve grown folks. My head hurts me."

"Matthew," said Ellen to her husband, "let Helden bring us over to-

Daily Christmas Hint

Gifts Which Will Delight the Theater Devotee

Mildred never has too many bags. They wear out and sell, and when Christmas time comes she is always glad to find among her Christmas gifts one or two beautiful and useful bags. The ones illustrated here are especially handsome, the lower one being enriched with hand embroidery done with gold thread. The upper one has the top per part made of a piece of handsome brocade, the lower part of the bag of plain satin. The woman who wishes to make useful gifts will scramble around in her workbasket and find pieces of silk and bits of brocade. From these odds and ends wonderfully handsome bags can be fashioned.

SUSPENSION OF PUPILS

Supreme Court Decision Concerning Suspension and Expulsion Given.

The Department of Public Instruction is often asked questions in regard to the suspension of pupils. The school law gives to the district board the right to authorize or order the suspension or expulsion from the school of any pupil guilty of gross misdemeanor or persistent disobedience. In such cases the teacher has the authority to suspend a pupil temporarily until the board can take action on the matter. The supreme court has held that it is not necessary that a pupil be guilty of a criminal act before he can be suspended or expelled from school. He must be guilty of some malicious or wilful act of detriment to the school and the misconduct must be gross, something more than a petty or trivial offence against the rules, or he must be persistent in his disobedience of the proper and reasonable rules and regulations of the school. A pupil cannot be expelled for careless acts, no matter how negligent, if it is not wilful or malicious.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

FRIENDS TRIED AND TRUE

THE little dog drooped what tail he had,
The broken doll fainted away.

And the poor Teddy bear was filled with despair

When the new doll came to stay

"Oh, have you forgotten old friends?" they cried.

But the little girl didn't hear

As she cuddled with joy her new found toy

And sang in its waxen ear.

THEY—SNUGGLED UP CLOSE TO HER BREAST.

BUT the days flew by, and she missed her friends,

Though she cherished the new love too.

But the waxen girl with the flaxen curl

Played none of the games they knew.

So she hunted around till she found them all,

And they snuggled up close to her breast,

And never a word of reproach was heard

As she whispered, "Old friends are best."

BIBLE STUDY ON

SAVIOR OF THE WORLD.

2 Corinthians 5:14-21—Dec. 27.

"For he is from me to glory, once in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Gala 2:20, 21, 22.

TODAY'S Study reminds us that Jesus is the Savior not merely of the Church, but also of the world. In the past, 18 his students have overlooked this great truth, to their confusion. Now we see that God has provided two distinctly different salvations—one for the Church in the Gospel Age, the other for the world in the Age to follow—the period of Messiah's Kingdom.

Both are salvations from sin and its penalty—sorrow, pain, crying, dying both are salvations to everlasting happiness. But there the similarity ends; for the Church is to be saved by a change of nature, while the world is to be saved by a resurrection to perfection of human nature.

The Church's salvation, now in progress, has its beginning in the bearing of faith. The Message of God's grace is proclaimed here and there by stammering lips, which do not appeal to many great, wise or learned, but chiefly to the poor of this world, rich in faith. Such of these as are of humble mind are charmed with the Message of forgiveness of sins and reconciliation to God through the Redeemer. As they seek to draw near to God, He through His providences draws near to them, and enables them to understand the terms and conditions upon which they may be received back into fellowship with God as dear children. He says, Draw near to Me, and I will draw near to you.

The Blessings of Faith.

In today's lesson St. Paul deals especially with the Church class. He explains to us that it is the love of Christ that has exercised the constraining, or drawing, power upon our hearts. The love of Christ is the love of the Father, but we as men would not be able to understand the Father's love. But we can understand it as it was manifested by our Redeemer, and thus through Him we look upward to the Father and appreciate something of the love that is beyond all human understanding.

As St. Paul points out, Christ's love was manifested in that He died for all. When we say "for all," it means that the whole race was dead, that none had a right to everlasting life and that none could commend themselves to God so as to be worthy of everlasting life.

The Apostle explains that all who realize this matter fully, should consecrate their lives to the Lord, to lay down their lives in the service of Him who died for them and who rose again. These have a special love for the Lord and also for each other. They are seeking to live, not after the flesh, but after the Spirit—in harmony with the begetting of the Holy Spirit which they have received.

Hence more and more they think of Christ, not as the Man Jesus, but as the glorified Lord. So also they are learning to think of each other, not according to the flesh, but according to the heart; "for if any man be in Christ, he is a New Creature." To such, earthly hopes, aims and prospects have gone; they have new hopes, new ambitions, new relationships. If faithful, they will receive those glorious things which God has in reservation for those who love Him; if faithful they will receive the crown of life which fadeeth not away, now reserved in heaven for them.

These things are of God. The Father Himself organized the whole arrangement. He has already reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ. We are fully given over to Him; we have no rebellion in our hearts; and God has nothing against us. "There is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus." Their sins are forgiven.

The Service of Reconciliation.

The New Creatures, begotten of the Holy Spirit, are not only to have a work in the future as kings and priests, joint-heirs with Christ in the blessing of the world, but have a work for God at the present time. They are to be ambassadors for God. His representatives among men. They are to seek to tell the Message of God's Love to those who do not understand it, to tell the way of return to God to those who give evidence of a desire for reconciliation. Thus they are ministers, servants, of the way of reconciliation even in the present time.

In verse 50 the word you is in italics, indicating that it is not in the original. It should be omitted. God is not beseeching the Church to become reconciled; all who are of the Church are already reconciled. The Apostle is telling that God through us is beseeching or urging mankind to be reconciled to Him, that He is willing to be reconciled to them, and explaining the basis of this reconciliation—that Christ took the sinner's place in death.

Grange Column

Marion Grange.
Marion Center Grange, No. 959, held a regular meeting on Friday evening. Officers present—Worthy Master, Overseer, Steward, Assistant Steward and Secretary. The elected secretary resigned and Marcia Goss was duly elected to fill the office for the ensuing year. Mary Poquette decided to do the janitor work. Walter Black, lecturer pro tem, furnished a good program of music, stories and songs. Grange closed to meet on New Year's Day for installation of officers. Attendance, 22.

Charlevoix Grange.
At the last regular meeting of Charlevoix Grange, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:
W. M.—G. E. Dutton.
Overseer—A. J. Usher.
Lecturer—Mrs. Ella Usher.
Steward—E. B. Ward.
Asst. Steward—Daniel Himebauch.
Chaplain—Henry Black.

Gatekeeper—John Nasson.
Ceres—Lillian Saunders.
Pomona—Mary Hammond.
Flora—Mrs. Wm. Johnson.
Insurance Director—Robt. Sherman.
Organist—Cora Hammond.
Lecturer's hour consisted of stories, songs and readings. Grange closed to meet again in two weeks.

Harmony Grange.
At the last regular meeting of Harmony Grange, No. 1451, four candidates were obligated in the first degree, with the promise of the initiation of two more candidates in the first and second degrees at the next meeting.

The following members were chosen to fill the offices for the year 1915:
Master—L. D. Willson.
Overseer—J. A. Newville.
Lecturer—Mrs. H. L. Willson.
Steward—Edward Erber.
Asst. Steward—O. D. Willson.
L. A. Steward—Mrs. O. D. Willson.
Chaplain—Mrs. J. A. Newville.
Treasurer—H. L. Willson.
Secretary—Miss Mildred Leffer.
Gatekeeper—F. P. Swatosh.
Ceres—Miss Muriel Kerry.
Pomona—Miss Leetha Willson.
Flora—Miss Opal Watt.
The election of organist and insurance director was postponed until next meeting.

A contest is being held with J. A. Newville and L. D. Willson as leaders and the strife has resulted in the bringing in of a good-sized class of new members and also full programs of recitations, music, readings, essays and the learning of the opening and closing exercises and parts of the initiatory work by the members.

The grange has an invitation to join the Deer Lake grange in an old fashioned visit and dinner at their hall New Year's Day, when there will probably be a joint installation of officers with J. A. Newville as installing officer.
On account of the snowstorm the second meeting in December was postponed until Saturday evening, December 26th.

The Editor's Song.

How dear to my heart is the steady subscriber
Who pays in advance at the birth of each year;
Who lays down his money and offers it gladly
And casts 'round the office a halo of cheer!
Who never says "Stop it; I cannot afford it,"
Or "I'm getting more papers than I can read!"
But always says "Send it; the family all like it—
In fact, we think it a household need!"
How welcome he is when he steps in the sanctum!
How he makes our hearts throb! How he makes our eyes dance!
We outwardly thank him—we inwardly bless him—
The steady subscriber who pays in advance.

FACTORY EQUIPMENT.

Improved Methods Have Increased Efficiency and Output.

The manufacturer of today is looking for production first, last and all the time, and he hesitates at nothing which will increase his output and improve the productive efficiency of his factory. The development of the factory itself has kept pace with the improved methods of manufacture, and it has changed from a grimy, ill-lighted place with oily floors and smoky windows, to a clean, well lighted and roomy building, with floors which are swept and cleaned daily. The change in machine tools is also very marked, heavier construction throughout being the rule, giving greater rigidity and making possible the use of heavier feeds than was possible on the lighter machines. Speeds and feeds can be rapidly changed to suit any condition and the shifting of belts has been very nearly eliminated. Guards are provided for the safety of the operator and convenience of handling has received a great deal of attention. Individual motor drives are now obtainable on any of the modern machine tools, and progressive manufacturers are tending more and more to adopt this method of developing power. Without a doubt the time is not far distant when the up to date factory will have entirely dispensed with cumbersome line shafting and countershafts and will have adopted the individual motor drive to the exclusion of the old methods.

In connection with improved methods of manufacture, we must not forget the important factor of high speed steel, which has revolutionized cutting speeds, and has thereby greatly increased production. As a matter of fact, the advent of high speed steel has been one of the primary causes influencing the development of the modern machine tool.

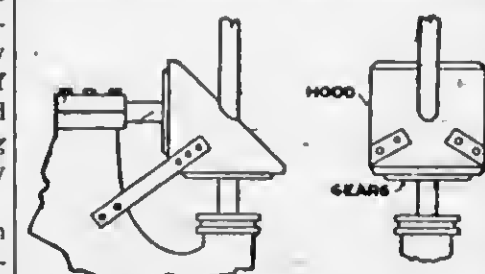

OZONE AIR PURIFIER.

Apparatus Designed For Use In Refrigerators and Theaters.

An ozone air purifier is being manufactured which has been used successfully in motion picture theaters and auditoriums and meat market refrigerators. It is stated that fish can be kept three times longer in a refrigerator equipped with this apparatus than with ice alone, and the odors are practically eliminated.

The purifier, according to the Electrical World, is equipped with a rotary converter for transforming direct current to alternating current and a transformer which steps the voltage up to the high pressures required in this service. An electric fan is mounted within the transformer case to blow the ozone out into the room. To eliminate the production of metallic oxides due to the ozone coming in contact with the metals of the outfit, all wiring is hermetically sealed in glass tubes. The design is also such as to prevent any heating, thereby avoiding the production of nitrous oxides.

Safety Covering For Bevel Gears.
Bevel gears are the most dangerous, because on account of their shape they are more difficult to protect. They are especially hard to safeguard where used on a shaft that extends both ways from the horizontal gear. The sketch is descriptive of a hood for covering such gears. The hood consists of a cylindrical piece of sheet metal, cut at an angle of forty-five degrees at both ends so as to present a triangular form. The hole for the shaft should be so large that the shaft cannot touch the hood, the latter being anchored with supports which are shaped to suit the conditions.

DEVICE TO PROTECT WORKMAN.

Millstone Production.
The production of millstones and related quarry products—in the United States in 1913 amounted to $56,163 in value, a decrease of $15,251 compared with the value in 1912. The production of millstones in this country in 1913 was nevertheless larger than in all but three years since 1888, when it was valued at $51,000. Millstones were produced in 1913 in Alabama, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Virginia.

To Wash a Greasy Bottle.
To wash a bottle or a glass that has contained oil use very hot coffee grounds. If the glass be badly incrustated wash it with a mixture of bicarbonate of potash and sulphuric acid in equal parts, being careful not to get a drop of this upon the fingers, as it is a powerful caustic. Then wash in several waters.

HOW WESTERN MICHIGAN GROWS

A Farmer for Every Forty is the Slogan Now in Use.

Rapidly Developing as a Fruit Growing and General Farming Section.

The purchasing power of the people of Western Michigan is increasing. This is because their industrial efficiency is being increased and because they are producing a greater quantity of wealth per individual. The Western Michigan territory is inhabited by people who are intelligent, alert and progressive and these people are constantly making efforts to improve their standards, both economic and social. They are continually speeding up and at the same time learning how they can maintain the higher rate of progress.

The Western Michigan territory is nearly as large as the two states of Delaware and Maryland put together, although at the present time its population is only about one-third of the combined population of the two states. In square miles the area of Western Michigan is 11,093, and its population at the time of the last count was a little over half a million. The average density of population for the entire twenty counties making up the Western Michigan country is 48.6. In Delaware there are 94.3 people for each square mile, and in Maryland 120.5 people per square mile. Kent county, with the big city of Grand Rapids, has the largest population. Here there are enough people to average 185.1 for each square mile. In Lake county, which is the most sparsely settled of the twenty, there are but 8.6 people for each square mile.

There are twenty cities in Western Michigan, with a total population of 224,364, and there are 74 villages with a total population of 52,545. There are in the rural sections of the territory 266,518 inhabitants. These cities are linked together by a transportation system that makes each a near neighbor of all the others.

During the ten years ending with 1910 the population of Western Michigan increased 69,218. The greatest percentage of gain was made in Charlevoix county, where the increase amounted to 37.3 per cent. The increase for Kent county amounted to 22.7 per cent. The yearly gain because of the excess of births over deaths amounts to nearly 5,000 individuals.

More than a majority of the Western Michigan people are native whites. In three of the twenty counties the native white portion of the population amounts to 86 per cent. and in only one of the twenty counties does the foreign-born population constitute one-fourth of the total number of inhabitants. This large native white population indicates a prevalence of American ideals and customs. Also a potential demand for American products.

Taken as a whole, the people of Western Michigan have a common school education. In no county is the percentage of illiteracy over six per cent. of the population over ten years of age. In ten of the counties the percentage of illiteracy is under three per cent., and in two of the counties, Newaygo and Oshtemo, it is under two per cent. This is a showing that is important in estimating the future needs of the people.

Over 90 per cent. of the entire population lives in dwellings and less than ten per cent. in hotels and boarding houses. This means that there is and will be a large and constant demand for the raw and finished materials that go to making dwellings and to keep them habitable.

Better than 87 per cent. of the farmers in Western Michigan own their own houses and better than 55 per cent. of the people living in the cities and villages are the owners of their homes. These figures indicate a permanent population and one that will not be attracted to distant lands in search of the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow.

While exact figures are not available, it is certain that a large per cent. of the people of Western Michigan, particularly the people living in the counties along the shore of Lake Michigan, are engaged in fruit growing as well as in general agriculture. In this connection it will be worth while to remember that some years since the incomes of several thousand farmers in New York state were analyzed and it was discovered that the fruit farmer's income was larger than that of any of his brothers. This gives him a greater purchasing power, and it was further discovered that many things which were luxuries in the homes of his neighbors were necessities to him. Without question, Western Michigan is going to become more and more of a fruit section and the purchasing power of its inhabitants is going to materially increase. Eventually the Western Michigan fruit grower will live on as high a plane as the well-to-do class in the cities do today. In a few years more Western Michigan will be famous because of its large orchards, its fine farm buildings and its prosperous people who will demand the best the world has to offer.

My Auto, 'Tis of Thee.

My auto, 'tis of thee, short cut to poverty—of thee I chant. I blew a pile of dough on you two years ago, and now you quite refuse to go, or wait, or can't. Through town and countryside you were my joy and pride; a happy day. I loved thy gaudy hue, thy nice white tires so new, but now you're down and out for true in every way. To thee, old rattle box, came many bumps and knocks; for thee I grieve. Badly thy top is torn, frayed are thy seats and worn; the whooping cough affects thy horn, I do believe. Thy perfume swells the breeze while good folks choke and wheeze as we pass by. I paid for thee a price 'twould buy a mansion twice, now everybody's yelling "ice"—I wonder why. Thy motor has the grippe, thy spark plug has the pip, and woe is thine. I, too, have suffered chills, ague and kindred ills, endeavoring to pay my bills since thou wert mine. Gone is my bank roll now, no more 'twould choke the cow, as once before. Yet, if I had the mon', so help me John—amen, I'd buy myself a car again and speed some more.—Exchange.

BAD FIRE AT EAST JORDAN

Owner Frightfully Burned Before He Could Escape from Building.

George Rowe loses his life, besides having property destroyed by flames.

Fire destroyed the feed and livery barn owned and conducted by George Rowe of East Jordan shortly after midnight last week Wednesday.

Rowe, the proprietor, had been sleeping in a small room off the office and was in the building at the time the fire was first discovered. In the office was an old sheet iron stove, which he had been warned many times was not safe. The fire probably caught from the stove after he had retired for the night. He was not awakened until the flames burst into his sleeping apartment and, as escape was impossible by the door, he broke out a small 20x20 window, which was up quite a distance from the floor, and in crawling through was followed by the flames and frightfully burned.

He managed to make his way after escaping from the barn to the home of a neighbor, whom he aroused. Medical assistance was summoned, but he was burned beyond human aid and died within a short time.

Four horses were rescued, the blanket on the last one being on fire when it reached safety. The burned structure was one of the oldest in the city and but for the splendid work of the fire department the fire would have spread to nearby buildings.

The ladies of St. Mary's church will hold a baked goods sale at Graham's Furniture Store Saturday, January 2nd. A 15c lunch will also be served. Adv. 5211

Glad to Get Home.

"I liked the roses and sunshine, but, believe me, the snow looked awfully good when we arrived home," said Congressman-elect Frank D. Scott, who has just returned with his bride from a honeymoon trip by automobile through California, following his marriage November 14th to Miss Edna C. James.

New P. M. at Central Lake.

Raymond Wallbrecht of Central Lake has been appointed postmaster at that place and will take charge in the course of a few weeks. A. J. Gibson, who has been postmaster for several years and is well known in this city, will devote most of his time to the development of his resort property on the shores of Torch Lake.

THREE CHANGES TO TAKE PLACE NEXT WEEK IN COUNTY BUILDING

Offices of County Treasurer, Sheriff and Prosecuting Attorney to be Filled by Recently Elected Officials—Retiring Men Have Served County Well—Effective Work Recognized.

The first week of the year of 1915 will see more changes in the offices of Charlevoix county officials than has taken place for some time in many years. Three changes will occur, those being in the offices of treasurer, prosecuting attorney and sheriff. Three men who have faithfully and conscientiously fulfilled the duties of the positions they held are to be succeeded by three men who were chosen by the people and considered to be equally qualified and capable to take charge of the duties of the offices to which they were elected. For a number of years Charlevoix county has been very fortunate in its selection of men for office. In every instance they have given their time and energy in the fulfillment of their duties, and we predict that the selections made at the fall election will meet all the requirements necessary to keep up the high standard of efficiency set by the retiring officials.

George W. Weaver, who succeeds Daniel S. Payton as county treasurer, is well known throughout the county and is well qualified to take charge of this important office. He has been a resident of Charlevoix county for over 28 years, and for the past 10 years has had charge of the only boat line between this city and Boyne City. While the work will be new to him, we believe no county officer will try harder to satisfactorily handle the county's business than Mr. Weaver, and this most difficult and important

Mr. Payton has not only closely applied himself to the duties of his office, but has taken an active part in the general advancement of the interests of the county as a whole. He was one of the charter members of the West Michigan Development Bureau and has since been the county's representative and a member of its board of directors. Always ready to lend a hand to any good cause, Mr. Payton has earned the name of being a "booster" in every sense of the word. As a testimonial of sincere regard and in recognition of his long years of effective work for the county and Northern Michigan, Mr. Payton will be banqueted by the Committee of Twenty-One on Wednesday evening, January 6th, during the session of the Board of Supervisors.

Upon the expiration of his term of office Mr. Payton will locate in East Jordan.

CHARLES NOVAK

Charles Novak, who for the past four years has served the county faithfully as under-sheriff, will receive the advancement he deserves and succeed Ford P. Robbins as sheriff. Prior to his acceptance of the duties of under-sheriff, little was known of Mr. Novak's ability as an officer, but the manner in which he has filled this position has proven that he is capable of enforcing the law and performing the duties not only of under-sheriff, but as sheriff of the county.

We understand that Mr. Robbins will devote his entire time as agent of the Studebaker automobile and to private business in Boyne Falls, his home town.

R. L. LEWIS

Rollie L. Lewis will succeed Dwight H. Fitch as prosecuting attorney. Mr. Lewis is one of Charlevoix's well known young attorneys who has made a success of his chosen profession. The office is a most important one and in the choice of Mr. Lewis there is no doubt that it will be conducted in a most satisfactory manner.

After serving as prosecutor for two terms Mr. Fitch will devote his time to his law practice in East Jordan.

THEATRICAL

Quality and Quantity.

When it came to a pictorial production of Rex Beach's masterpiece of fiction, "The Spoilers," William M. Selig gave carte blanche to all associated with the enterprise to spare neither time nor expense to secure the best results possible. Producer Colin Campbell took to his task very literally and seriously, bringing forward every detail distinctly and with exactitude. In the original outlay he filmed 14,500 feet, making in all 332,000 distinct photographs of the big moving story that restlessly drifts from Washington to the far-flung shores of the city of Nome on the Behring Sea. Then began the work of most careful curtailing to reduce it to a normal size, practicable for an evening's entertainment.

This scale finally settled upon nine reels, giving a grand aggregate of 144,000 distinct pictures, which seemed sufficient to cover the action of the work from prologue to finale with a firm, spirited grasp upon scene and situation. Primarily, a cast of unusual strength and caliber was secured, selected with a view to make the characters register impressively as soon as introduced. Studied care and unusual liberality was exercised to give the actual atmosphere and the real environment, so that the action should retain its integrity at all times. "The Spoilers" will be put on at the Majestic Theatre Friday, January 1st, both matinee and evening. Don't miss it.

REQUIRED MANY STAMPS

Deed for $500,000 Real Estate Deal Received at Register of Deeds Office.

Last week Register of Deeds Emrey received a deed through the mails for filing from the Ward estate, which under the present Democratic administration required over $480.00 in war stamps.

As the necessary stamps required did not accompany the deed, the parties sending it were immediately notified, but refused to send them or guarantee their payment, and the deed has been returned.

The deed covered the transfer of property belonging to the Ward estate amounting to over $500,000, partially located in Charlevoix county. It had been placed on file in the register of deeds office in the other counties where parcels of the land in transfer were located before the war stamp act had become effective, and owing to this fact, the attorneys in charge of the deal claimed that the deed was eligible to registry in this county at the present time.

The matter was taken up with Detroit government officials, who ruled that the regular amount of stamps must be placed on it before it could be filed, and upon it being refused here it will be taken up with the officials at Washington for a settlement.

SHEARED OFF TWENTY ACRES

End of Sleeping Bear Point Disappears Into Lake Michigan.

Part of Life Savers had Passed Over Spot a Few Minutes Before Its Disappearance.

One of the queerest freaks of nature that has occurred in that region in years happened on Sunday morning, when a portion of the extreme end of Sleeping Bear Point, a mile north of Glen Haven, disappeared into Lake Michigan. A number of the life savers of the station had been attending a party in the town and had returned by the path up over the point at two o'clock Sunday morning and on reaching the lighthouse had looked back and had failed to see the land over which they had come. They started out to investigate and found that a large portion, estimated between fifteen and twenty acres, had gone into the lake. A fisherman's shanty that was about five rods from the shore had been carried with the sand. The owner lost nearly $200 worth of nets that had been stored for the winter. The next morning a number of people were in a boat with a 20-foot pike pole and no evidence could be found of the shanty or its contents. There is no reason given for such an occurrence, as there is no live water on the land. It is thought that possibly the strong lake currents might have caused a heavy swirl that in some way undermined the sand and so had weakened the seemingly solid land. The appearance is now as though some giant hand had carved the sand off, making a sheer cut of from twenty-five to thirty feet of the sand that had been in this peculiar position for ages.

Ever since the French fur traders began to travel up and down the shores of Lake Michigan in the seventeenth century this gigantic sand dune has been referred to. It is interesting because of its historical importance and geological formation, and possibly has been viewed by those in search of wonderful sights more than any other object on the Michigan shores. In some places it is over 600 feet above the water line, and no one has ever been able to account for the peculiar shape.

Lakes Frozen Over.

For the first time in many years, and many claim the first time in the history of the county, Pine Lake and Round Lake are covered with ice to the thickness of from three to five inches. Old settlers claim the freeze came a month earlier than is customary, but many still insist that the present freeze-up will be of short duration, as all "the signs" point to an open winter. While the thermometer has not dropped below zero, it has hovered quite near nearly every night for the past two weeks.

RUINED HIS HOME TOWN

Result of Patronizing Mail Order Houses as Told By German Farmer.

Farm Property Obscured in Vicious and Modern Stores Were Driven Out.

One of the best expositions of the evils of the mail order habit produced in a long time comes from the pen of a German farmer in Iowa, who shows that this habit, if followed, is likely to spell disaster for the customers. His story, given to a farm paper, is as follows:

"We farmers need awakening to the fact that we have unmistakably reached the period where we must think and plan. I am one of the slow German farmers who had to be shown, and I am now giving my experience that others may profit, for knowledge is more expensive now than ten years ago.

"Twenty-nine years ago I began my farm career. I had an old team and $50. Our furniture was mostly home-made—chairs, cupboard and lounge made from dry goods boxes, neatly covered with ten-cent cretonne by my girl wife. We rented eighty acres. Being a boy of good habits, I got all I needed, machinery and groceries, from our home merchants on credit until the fall crops were sold. The first year was a wet season and I did not make enough to pay my creditors. I went to each on date of promise and explained conditions, paying as much as possible, and they all carried the balance over another year. They continued to accommodate me until I was able to buy a forty-acre place of my own.

"As soon as I owned these few acres the mail order houses began sending me catalogues, and gradually I began sending my loose change to them, letting my accounts stand in my home town, where I had gotten my accommodation when I needed it.

"We then had one of the thriftiest little villages in the state—good lines of business in all the branches, merchants who were willing to help an honest fellow over a bad year and a town full of people who came twice a week to trade and visit. Our little country town supported a library, high school, band, baseball team, and we had a big celebration every year.

"A farm near a live town soon doubles in value. I sold my forty acres at a big advance and bought an eighty, gradually adding to it until I had two hundred acres of the best land in Iowa. I then felt no need of patronizing the mail order agents who came almost weekly to our door. I regret to say that I was the first in the county to make up a neighborhood bill and send it to a mail order house. Though we got bit every once in a while, we got in the habit of sending away for stuff. Gradually our merchants lessened their stock of goods for lack of patronage. Finally we began to realize that when we needed a bolt quickly for machinery or clothing for sickness or death we had to wait and send away for it, which wasn't so pleasant. One by one our merchants moved to places where they were appreciated and men of less energy moved in. Gradually our town had gone down, our business houses are 'tacky' in appearance, a number are empty, our schools, churches and walks are going down, we have no band, no library, no ball team. There is no business done in the town and therefore no taxes to keep things up. The hotel is closed for lack of travel. Go down to the depot when the train pulls in and you will see the sequel in mail order packages.

"Nine years ago my farm was worth $195 an acre. To-day I'd have a hard matter to sell it at $167 an acre. It's too far from a live town. So every farmer has said who wants to buy. He wants a place near schools and churches, where his children can have advantages. I have awakened to the fact that in helping to pull the town down it has cost me $5600 in nine years."

Not Raised in State.

The impression seems to have gone abroad that all passenger rates on Michigan railroads have been increased to two and one-half cents a mile. This is not so. The increased rates apply only where a passenger is traveling from a point in this state to a point in another state. Where the travel is wholly within the State of Michigan passenger fares are still calculated on the two-cents-a-mile basis.

UNCEASING MISERY

Some Charlevoix Kidney Sufferers Get Little Rest or Comfort.

There is little sleep, little rest, little peace for many a sufferer from kidney trouble. Life is an continual round of pain. You can't rest at night when there's kidney backache. You suffer twinges and "stabs" of pain, annoying urinary disorders, lameness and nervousness. You can't be comfortable at work with darting pains and blinding dizzy spells. Neglect these ailments and serious troubles may follow. Begin using Doan's Kidney Pills at the first sign of disorder. Thousands have testified to their merit. Charlevoix readers will find convincing proof in the following testimony:

V. D. Keaton, 310 Rush St., Petoskey, Michigan, says: "I and others of my family have taken Doan's Kidney Pills for backaches and pains in the kidneys and have had good results. My kidneys were not acting right and obliged me to get up frequently at night. I was also annoyed by backache and pains in my loins. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they relieved me in every way."

LOCAL DRUGGIST MAKES

MANY FRIENDS

B. A. Hernan reports he is making many friends through the QUICK benefit which Charlevoix people receive from the simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler-I-ka. This remedy became famous by curing appendicitis and it is the most thorough bowel cleanser known, acting on BOTH the lower and upper bowel. JUST ONE DOSE of Adler-I-ka relieves constipation and gas on the stomach almost IMMEDIATELY.

George Ager and family visited at the home of Mrs. Edward Heisa of Charlevoix last Friday.

Cause for Thanks.

Lord Chief Justice Clerk Bredt was a man of few words and of strong business habits, and consequently, when he courted his second wife he said to her: "Lizette, I'm looking out for a wife, and I thought you just the person to suit me. Let me have your answer on or off tomorrow, and I will mail about it." The lady next day replied in the affirmative. Shortly after the marriage Lord Bredt's health began to fail, and he gave up his situation because he could not bear his lady's ship's continual sailing. "My dear Bredt," she exclaimed, "you're little to complain of; you may be thankful you're married to her."

RICHEST ISLAND ON EARTH.

Yet Java, WITH Its Amazing Crops, Hardly Pays the Dutch.

"Java has a population of more than 40,000,000. It is a Dutch possession and the richest island on earth," says a man who has spent most of his life there. "The governor general has nine palaces in different parts of the island and a regiment of soldiers to escort him from one to another. Two-fifths of the sugar of the world is produced in Java. Labor costs little or nothing. The natives work for something like $2.50 a year. The principal products are sugar, cotton, rice, castor nuts and citronella. Of the total population there are probably 30,000,000 Javanese and the rest are Chinese and Portuguese. The white population numbers about 150,000, mostly Dutch, and there are few Americans. The immensity of the production of Java may be estimated from the fact that the internal revenue is nearly $200,000,000."

"Notwithstanding the big population the richness of the soil and the great productivity Java is hardly a paying possession to the Dutch. It takes all that Java yields to pay the expenses of fighting the natives of the other islands, like Flores, where the inhabitants are savages, mostly head hunters. Borneo is the largest island in the south sea, but its population is small compared with that of Java."

"Under the conditions of civilization it is surprising, perhaps, that the standard of morals among the natives is high, yet it is a fact. Violation of the marriage contract is almost unheard of."—Washington Post.

Thoughtful Dog.

They were swapping dog stories. Almer Morgan had "all the best of it" with his yarns of the extraordinary intelligence exhibited by a cattle belonging to his uncle. The others grew restive. Finally John Perkins deemed the moment appropriate wherein to spring a tale that would cap all the others.

"That was a pretty clever dawg, Ah. I drew him, 'an' I make no doubt he was just as knowin' as you let on; but say, he wasn't a marker in a dawg my old man owned. Boy, the devotion of that dawg to the old man was shore amazin'. Once he heard the old man say he was pressed for money, so he went an' died the day before the dog was due."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

King's Counsel.

King's counsel differ from all other English lawyers. King's counsel are appointed by patent from the crown, an application from the lord chancellor, and can act as judges of assize when named in the commission. They have in many ways precedence over other lawyers and rank among themselves according to seniority. The robes of king's counsel are of silk instead of stuff like those of ordinary barristers. It is the established rule at the profession that no king's counsel shall conduct any case without the employment of a junior counsel.

Self Government.

We are not propagandists. Whether other systems are preferred either as being thought better of themselves or as better suited to existing conditions we leave the preference to be enjoyed. Our history hitherto proves, however, that the popular form is practicable and that with wisdom and knowledge men may govern themselves.—Webster

MORAL COURAGE.

Moral courage is more worth having than physical courage. It is more worth having not only because it is a higher virtue, but because the demand for it is more constant. Physical courage is a virtue which is almost always put away in the lumber room. Moral courage is a virtue that is wanted day by day.—Charles Buxton.

Drophead Disease.

One of the strangest diseases is known as kuhisagari. It is common in Northern Japan and in a small district on the Franco-Swiss frontier, but unknown elsewhere. Its symptoms are a sudden paralysis of certain muscles, loss of vision and vertigo. The attacks last about ten minutes and continue at intervals from May to November, recovery always coming in the autumn. Nothing is known about its cause, though Dr. P. L. Couchaud describes in the Presse Medicale a milder form found in the cerebro spinal fluid and the milk of persons suffering from the disease. The name kuhisagari is Japanese, and means "drophead."

The Rose in Europe.

"A rose by any other name"—says Shakespeare, but it is interesting to note how very little the name varies among different nations. The Greeks called it rhodon; the Romans, rosa; the Spaniards, rosa; the Italians, Particosa; the Spanish and Russian, in Polish it is roza; in Dutch, roos; in Swedish, rosa; in French, rose; and in Finnish, ruusu.

GOOD ROADS BOOST TOURING

Fall Motor Trips More Popular Than Ever.

THE GOLDEN BELT ROUTE.

According to Recent Reports, the Trunk Highways Are in Excellent Condition This Autumn Due to Work Done During the Past Spring and Summer.

"Reports which have reached me show that fall touring is more popular than ever this year," says Frank X. Mudd of Chicago, who is the chairman of the touring board of the American Automobile association. "This is accountable for by the fact that the trunk roads are in as good or better condition than in any other season, particularly as the principal road work in progress in the spring and summer is largely completed."

"In the west the Golden Belt route, which extends from Kansas City through Topeka, Abilene and Oakley, and on to Denver, has been put in excellent condition, and, as the shortest route between Kansas City and Denver, it is being traveled more than ever before. The most important single improvement in the northwest has been the elimination of the steepest grades, and also the rough road that formerly existed through Snoqualmie pass in the Cascade mountains."

"By the reduction of this grade and the improvement of the surface trips between Spokane, Seattle and Portland can be made with a great deal less trouble than heretofore and without the danger of breakage that formerly existed on the Snoqualmie pass line."

"The wonderful scenic route along the Columbia river from Portland to the Dalles also is under way and can be considered as complete for the heavy travel to the Pacific coast in 1915. This road avoids such grades as exist on Snoqualmie pass by following alongside the picturesque Columbia river."

"Tourists running west from Albuquerque this fall have a complete choice of two routes the balance of the way to southern California. Formerly, practically all the travel used the trail to Sunset route from Albuquerque through Phoenix and Yuma to San Diego and Los Angeles. But work done during the last year has opened up and made practically safe the upper and shorter line from Albuquerque through Holbrook and Flagstaff, crossing the Colorado river at the Needles, and thence almost direct west into San Bernardino and Los Angeles—a much shorter route than the trail to Sunset. Tourists making the round trip between Albuquerque and southern California during the winter months may with advantage go on one of these routes and return on the other."

"Recent developments on the route from Houston, Va., through Bristol and Knoxville to Chattanooga give the assurance that this line will be open to through travel with few handicaps, beginning in 1915. When entirely complete and as connections are supplied from Chattanooga through Birmingham to New Orleans, this will make the shortest and most strategic route between New York, Philadelphia and New Orleans. Great improvements are being made, particularly by the construction of that part of the route between Bristol and Chattanooga."

"Travel from the central states to the Georgia and Florida coast usually comes down from Indianapolis to Louisville, Nashville, Chattanooga, and thence from Atlanta, either to Augusta and Savannah, or to Macon, Valdosta and Jacksonville. While there are some rough stretches, particularly on the Louisville and Nashville pike, this route is being used more than ever before and will within the next two or three years carry an amount of travel comparable with that between the north and south seaboard states."

Toronto-Hamilton Highway. It is stated that as a result of a conference between representatives of the government of Ontario, Canada, and representatives of the various municipalities along the route of the proposed Toronto-Hamilton highway, work upon the highway will be started immediately. It is stated that the work, which will cost approximately $400,000, will be carried out under the direction of a commission composed of five members appointed by the provincial government.

It was decided at the conference that funds for maintenance should be contributed by all the municipalities in proportion to the amounts they contribute to the original cost of the highway. The commission to have charge of the work will probably be appointed in the near future.

New Bridge Planned. Adams, Buffalo and Kenney—conduces, Nels., are planning to unite in the construction of a bridge over the south branch of the Platte river at a point northwest of Kenosaw, where the three counties join. The bridge will be of concrete and will be near the new town of Denham. The decision to build a concrete bridge is said to have resulted from the building of concrete bridges in Adams county. The three counties will share equally in the cost of the bridge.

Mount Vernon.

Mount Vernon, the estate of President Washington, in Fairfax county, Va., was originally named Hunting Creek and comprised 800 acres. It was inherited by Washington in 1752 from his brother, Lawrence, who had changed the name of the place in honor of his former commander, Admiral Vernon of the British navy. The central part of the house was built by Lawrence, and the wings were added by George Washington. The house and 200 acres were purchased by the Mount Vernon Ladies' association in 1899 for $200,000, and it was carefully restored to its original condition.—Indianapolis News.

Cooling Water Without Ice.

To cool water without using ice get a slender glass test tube from any chemist. Half fill it with nitrate of ammonia salts, fill up with water and cork tightly. Shake till the salt is dissolved. Be careful to wipe the outside of the tube dry in order that all trace of the nitrate may be removed. Place this tube in a glass of water and stir the water with a spoon. The water is rapidly chilled. The nitrate of ammonia salts can be bought of any chemist.—London Opinion.

SYNOPSIS

Owing to hard times and the failure of Ebenezer Rule's factory the people of Old Trail Town contemplate buying no presents and having no Christmas.

A town meeting is held, and the decision is reached to have no Christmas, not even for the children.

A notice to this effect is signed by nearly every one. Mary Chavah receives a letter from her sister Lily's boy.

This boy asks her to take his six-year-old brother, son of Adam Blood, a lover who killed Mary for her sister Lily.

Mary prepares to welcome him. Despite her resolutions many people find it difficult to cut out Christmas altogether.

Ebenezer Rule, grieving for his dead son, Malcolm, and his dead wife, finds the boy's hobbyhorse in an unused attic.

Boys and girls are unhappy because there will be no Christmas. Women regret that Mary's boy will find no one awaiting him.

Children of the town are rehearsing for a funeral on Christmas. They are planning to bury Santa Claus.

Ellen Bourne plans to have a Christmas tree and urges her husband to adopt a little boy at once.

The good townfolk secretly prepare to gather at Mary's house on Christmas eve to welcome the little boy.

CHAPTER XI.

The Day Before Christmas.

NEXT night they had the bracket lamp and the lamp on the shelf and the table lamp all burning. The little tree was gay with the white corn and the colored trifles. The kitchen seemed to be centering in the tree, as if the room had been concerned long enough with the dollops of these grown folk and now were looking ahead to see who should come next. It was the high moment of immemorial expectancy, when those who are alive turn the head to see who shall come after.

"What you been making all day, daddy?" Ellen asked, tense at every sound from without.

Her father, bent in his best clothes, blew away a just plume of shaved wood and held out something.

"I just whittled out a kind of a clothespin man," he explained. "I made one for you once, and you liked it like everything. Maybe a boy won't?" he added doubtfully.

"Oh, but a boy will!" Ellen cried and tied the doll above the blue paper soldier.

"Hain't they ought to be here pretty soon?" Matthew asked nervously.

"Where's mother?"

"She's watching from the front room window," Ellen answered.

Once more Haiders came stamping on the kitchen porch, but this time there was a patter of other steps, and Ellen caught open the door before he summoned. Haiders stepped into the room, and with him was a little boy.

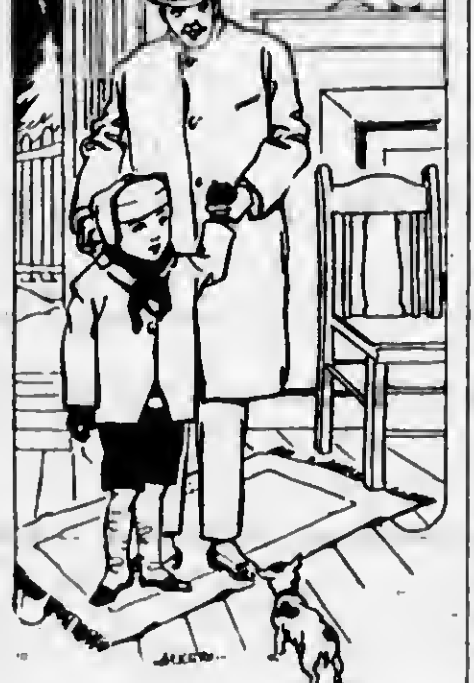

"This one?" Ellen asked, her eyes alive with her eagerness.

But Haiders shook his head.

"Mis' Bourne," he said, "I'm real dead sorry. They wa'n't but the one. Just the one we'd spoke for."

"Oae!" Ellen said. "You said orphan asylum."

"There's only the oae," Haiders repeated. "The others is little bits of babies or else spoke for like ours—"

Haiders Stepped Into the Room, and With Him Was a Little Boy.

long ago. It seems they do that way. But I want you should do something. I want you and Matthew should take this one. Mother and I—our oae; we ain't got shure so much."

Ellen shook her head and made him know, with wild words she could find, that it could not be so. Then she knelt and touched the coat of the child, a small frightened thing, with cap too large for him and one mitten lost. But he looked up brightly and his eyes stayed on the Christmas tree. Ellen said little things to him and went to take down for him some trifle from the tree.

"I'm just as much obliged," she said quietly to Haiders. "I never thought of there not being enough. We'll wait." Haiders was fumbling for something. "Here's your candles. I thought you might want them for somethin' else," he said, and turned to Matthew. "And here's your quarter. I didn't get the toy you mentioned. I thought you wouldn't want it without the little kid."

Matthew looked awfully at Ellen. He had not told her that he had sent by Haiders for a toy. And at that Ellen crossed abruptly to her husband, and she was standing there as they let Haiders out with the little boy.

Ellen's father pounded his knee.

"But how long'll we have to wait? How long'll we have to wait?" he demanded shrilly. "King and country, why didn't somebody ask him that?"

Matthew tore open the door.

"Haiders," he shouted, "how long did they say we'd have to wait?"

"Mebbe only a week or two, mebbe longer," Haiders' voice came out of the dark. "They couldn't tell me."

Ellen's mother stood fastening up a fallen tinsel walnut.

"Let's leave the tree right where it is," she said. "Even with it here we won't have enough Christmas to hurt anything."

On that morning of the day before Christmas Mary Chavah woke early, while it was yet dark. With closed eyes she lay in the grip of a dream that was undisturbed by her waking. In the dream she had seen a little town lying in a hollow, lighted and peopled, but without foundation.

"It isn't born yet," they told her who looked with her, "and the people are not yet born."

"Who is the mother?" she had asked, as if everything must be born of woman.

"You," they had answered.

On which the town had swelled and rounded and swung in a hollow of cloud, globed and shining, like the world.

"You," they had kept on saying.

The sense that she must bear and mother the thing had grasped her with all the sickening force of dream fear. And when the dream slipped into the remembrance of what the day would bring her the grotesque terror hardly lessened, and she woke to a sense of oppression and coming calamity such as not even her night of decision to take the child had brought to her, a weight is of physical fullness and sickness.

"I feel as if something was going to happen," she said over and over.

She was wholly ignorant that in that week just passed the word had been libeled and had run round Old Trail Town in the happiest open secrecy.

"Coming way from Idaho with a tag on Christmas eve. We thought if everybody could call that night—just run into Mary's, you know, like it was any other night and take in a little something to eat—no presents, you know—oh, of course no presents!—just supper in a basket. We'd all have to eat somewhere. It won't be any Christmas celebration," of course—oh, no, not with the paper signed and all—but just for us to kind of meet and be there when he gets off the train from Idaho."

"Just like it was any other night." That was the part that abated suspicion. Indeed, that had been the very theory on which the nonobservance of Christmas had been based—the day was to be treated like any other day. And, obviously, on any other day such a simple plan as this for the welcoming of a little stranger from Idaho would have gone forward as a matter of course. Why deny him this merely because the night of his arrival chanced to be Christmas eve? When Christmas was to be treated exactly as any other day?

If in the heart of Miss Abby Winslow, where the plan had originated, it had originated side by side with the thought that the point of the plan was the incidence of Christmas eve she kept her belief secret. The open argument was unassailable, and she counted herself with that. Even Slim—Chuck, confronted with it, was silent.

"Gosh! back on the paper, are you?" he had at first said, "and hev a celebration?"
